Mr. McNARY. The Senator now says, in order to carry his point, that he believes he has inside information that Mr. Ford will leave the property to the farmers of the country. Now, I should like to ask the Senator from what source he gets that information?

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not say that he would will it to the farmers. Oh, Mr. President, Henry Ford before he dies will, I am sure, stipulate who shall be the principal or controlling spirit of the corporation that he is to form. His son will in all probability be put in control, and Henry Ford can stipulate how it shall be conducted, and so forth.

But, Mr. President, how considerate Senators seem now of the farmers of the next generation. I am asking Senators on the other side of the Chamber to come to the rescue of the present-day farmer now. Do not let us lose sight of him as we grow sympathetic over the farmer of the next generation. As Sam Jones, the great evangelist, when they would sing, "In the Sweet Bye and Bye," used to say, "I want to talk to you about 'the happy now and now.'" That is what I am talking to you about. Here are farmers, 500 of them in one county, signing away their birthright in order to get fertilizer. Money is scarce, credit is tight; but I am told that the administration is being urged to reappoint the governor of the Federal Reserve Board, who helped to murder agriculture and kill business in the United States.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. HEFLIN. I will yield in a moment. Now, when the farmers come up and petition you day by day to accept the Ford offer, saying, "We feel that it will greatly benefit us; we hope that you will vote for it. God knows we are in great distress and need help," are their appeals to fall on deaf ears of men whom they have helped to elect to this body. Is that right and fair?

This is one of the biggest propositions that the present majority are going to be confronted with at the polls, and they will be asked, "Why did you not let Henry Ford manufacture fertilizer at Muscle Shoals?" Will the answer be, "Because the big power companies and the big fertilizer concerns and the tariff barons came to Washington and sat in a midnight conference with the bosses of the Republican Party, contributing to its campaign fund, and mapped out the program." Is that why?

Thank God for election day and for the time before that when we can get on the hustings and look the honest men and women in the face and say to them, "Fathers and mothers, do you want to raise your children up to be serfs? Do you want that boy to have school advantages and a fair chance to earn a livelihood and lay aside something for old age? He is entitled to it in this country. Do you want that little girl to have an education and a wholesome, healthful girlhood and become a splendid and successful woman? She is entitled to it in this, the richest Government in the world. Are you going to vote to keep a party in power that hampers and oppresses the laboring man, that hampers and oppresses the farmer, that hampers and oppresses the average business man the country over, in order that a few men who are liberal with campaign contributions may live on the fat of the land?"

This situation affects vitally the welfare of the people of the whole country. It is time to wake up. Must the people wait until the Democrats come into power to have their wishes respected and their will carried out? Here you are in power now, with certain big men, with their big fat purses, flourishing like the green bay tree and reveling in rank luxuriance under your control. So did old Belshazzer revel; but one night, when he was at the high tide of his drunken feast, there appeared a mysterious handwriting upon the wall and told old Belshazzer that he had been weighed in the balances and found wanting. He was driven from power and made to eat grass like an ox. So we are going to put some of you Republicans in the green pastures of private life. Are you going to force the Ford offer as an issue into the campaign? Are we going to let Ford have it, and bring about the deliverance of 60,000,000 people in the farming sections of the country, or are we going to turn it over to four or five big concerns that want it for their private use and benefit?

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I think it would be better if the Senator from Alabama would read the contract proposed by Mr. Ford. Aside from the outside considerations which seem to rest in the mind of the Senator from Alabama, is it not true that Mr. Ford merely agrees to make 110,000 tons of sulphate of ammonia by the use of 100,000 horsepower, when in fact there are over 700,000 horsepower at Muscle Shoals? Now, I ask the Senator, if Mr. Ford is the great friend of the farmer, as the Senator from Alabama depicts and paints him to be, why did he place that limitation and propose to use only about one-seventh of the horsepower available for the production of fertilizer, that being a very small proportion of the horsepower to be developed?

Mr. HEFLIN. I have read the contract, of course. I am not going into a discussion of all the details, but I am going to stand by the contract in which Mr. Ford says he will sell a commercial fertilizer. Mr. Worthington, Mr. Mayo, and others interested in Mr. Ford tell me that he will make a completed fertilizer. It is not necessary for him to set out everything that he hopes to do in the contract. Wright never set out in the contract that he would fly his machine and make 75 or 100 miles an hour, but he said he could do it, and he did it. Marconi, when the world depended upon sending messages through copper wire and cables under the sea, said "I can send them through the open spaces in the air." It was said that he could not do it, but he did do it. Ford says, "I can make cheaply complete fertilizer, and I will do it and sell it at half of the price the farmer pays to-day." I submit that after Wright succeeded in doing what he said he would do, and Marconi succeeded in doing what he said he would do, and General Gorgas succeeded in doing what he said he would do, and Ford succeeded in doing what he said he would with reference to cheap automobiles, we ought to try him out in this matter, when the hope is that he will stretch forth the healing rod and give deliverance to 60,000,000 people in the United States from the deadly clutches of the Fertilizer Trust.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, according to the statistics with which I am familiar there are about 12,000,000 people engaged in farming in this country.

Mr. HEFLIN. How many?

Mr. McNARY. There are 12,000,000 on the farms.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am talking about the villages and towns and little communities which are dependent on agriculture; I am talking of the children of the farmers, their wives and boys and girls. I am talking about the farmer and the population dependent upon the farmer in the United States. I know that some Republicans never think of the consumer; they never think of the individual citizen; they think of the big fellow, and want to know what size purse he has and whether he has a fat check book and an easy pen with which he can write a campaign contribution.

Mr. McNARY. That was not the proposition. I should like the Senator to allow me to finish. The Senator is a great friend of the farmer, a member of the farm bloc, and prominent in his activities to promote the welfare of the rural population. He is to be admired for that position. I, too, am interested in the farmer, and I want to see the Muscle Shoals power plant used to make every wheelbarrow load of fertilizer which it is possible to make. I stand in this position: I do not want to accept the limitation of Mr. Ford to use only a small portion of the horsepower to manufacture fertilizer for the farmer. I want to see it all used for the benefit of the farmer, and therefore I am a greater and stronger friend of the farmer than is the Senator. I want to see this country develop the horsepower, operate the plant, put in the needed machinery, experiment with new devices and processes, and I want to see every unit of horsepower utilized for the purpose of making fertilizer to go upon the land in the South and the North and in the West, where the lands are badly despoiled of their plant food. The Senator from Alabama, on the other hand, wants to get Mr. Ford down there in order to boost real estate. In order to permit him to carry on his activities, a small portion of which will be for the benefit of the farmer, he is willing and anxious to have Mr. Ford go there.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I can not permit my good friend from Oregon to make a stump speech in my time. The suggestion is made that somebody is trying to boost real estate in the vicinity of Muscle Shoals. Can it be that you are not even willing that the poor fellows who are about to starve under your administration should make a few dollars on a piece of real estate at or near Muscle Shoals? You ought to be willing for them to make something on which to live.

Mr. NORRIS. They made so much under the Wilson administration they could not spend it all.

Mr. HEFLIN. It is true that everybody had something to do and made money then, but they are poverty stricken now. I told the Senate the other day what the farmer out in the West said.

Mr. NORRIS. They made so much that they must be awful spendthrifts or they would have something left.

Mr. HEFLIN. I said the other day there were 25 men talking at a crossroads store. One of them was defending President Harding and 24 seemed to be against him. Finally one of them said, "I will say for President Harding that he put me on my feet." The only Republican who had defended the President's administration rushed over and caught him by the hand and said, "Shake; you are the only man here in addition to myself who is for President Harding." He said, "Well, let me explain what I mean by that; I used to ride in an automobile under Wilson, and now I have to walk. That is what I mean when I say 'he put me on my feet.'" [Laughter.]

Mr. President, the question of real estate has been brought up, and the Senator from Nebraska also indulges in the suggestion that the people around Muscle Shoals are trying to make money out of real estate. Mr. President, everybody who has been to Muscle Shoals and seen that mighty river and the dam under construction there and the rock walls on either side of the river and the hills on either side for miles realizes that it is the greatest power site in the United States. People saw Ford was going down there, northern men, people from Nebraska, I presume, and Oregon, and they said, "If Ford is going down there things are going to hum. He brings dead things to life; this thing is dead, and he will bring it to life, and I am going down there and get in on the ground floor. Ford will build an industrial city, and I will buy me a lot now." So they went down there, and they came into the finest climate in the world and the best State in the Union. They exercised good taste and good judgment, both, when they came down to Alabama; and if they thought it was a good investment to put their money into, do not you Republicans want the average citizen to make money under your administration? What is the matter with you? Now you are holding that up as an excuse? What difference would it make if every real estate man down there should make a thousand dollars or more on a lot that he bought? Would that, and should that, keep the farmers of the United States from having the opportunity to buy cheaper fertilizers? Oh, Senators, you can not get away with any such argument as that. It will not hold water, and the American people are gradually waking up to the situation.

The situation here this morning raises a serious question. God knows something is wrong. Nobody but the plutocrat is flourishing under this administration. Millions of laboring people are without employment. Five hundred thousand boys who followed that flag in their uniforms can not get anything to do in order that they may live and enjoy health and happiness in the land that they saved. There are various things that I might touch upon; but the farmer who must feed and clothe the world is asking this Congress to come to his rescue. He is pleading for help.

Senators, let us get action upon this thing. Let us tell these men who influenced your committee to abandon Muscle Shoals in the interest of certain private concerns that we repudiate that conduct. A committee of the Senate and the House, after visiting the scene, unanimously pronounced it a great power site. Ford said: "Let me have it, and I will make a great industrial city out of it, and I will manufacture fertilizers," and Mr. Worthington told me, "I am convinced that he will use the most of that power in making fertilizers."

Suppose he makes automobiles.

Mr. NORRIS. Is he going to put that in his will, too?

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not know. I never saw the Senator from Nebraska such a stickler regarding such requirements before.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not want to sell two or three hundred million dollars' worth of property that belongs to all the people on the strength of the Alabama Senator's idea that somebody will put in his will a provision that it is going to be used properly.

Mr. HEFLIN. The thing had been abandoned when Mr. Ford came and looked upon it. He said: "I can take it and utilize it and make it of vast benefit to the people of the United States, to the farmers, and the completion of the dam will make the river navigable there. It will be so that steamboats can come and go, and it will be a blessing instead of a worthless thing and a piece of junk as it is now." As soon as Ford undertook to take it up, here came witnesses saying: "Why, it is the finest power site in the world. Oh, what a great thing it is, and Ford ought not to be allowed to have it." He said: "Did you not say, just a while back, that it was worthless and ought to be junked?" "Oh, well, I did not realize then what a valuable thing it was." He did not, either; but when he saw that Ford was going to get it, and the concerns that fought to have it abandoned so that they could get it were about to be beaten in the race for this dam, he changed his mind. That is the situation, Mr. President.

Let me say this in conclusion:

Mr. President, when the time comes in the history of this Government when over 6,000,000 people with strength to work and the will to work can not find work under the party in power, controlling the instrumentalities of the Government, it is a danger sign in the Republic. When sixty-odd millions of people living in the farming sections of the country are robbed and denied the necessities of life, crying out for deliverance from the Fertilizer Trust, and you will not go to their rescue, it is a danger sign in the life of the Republic. Oh, Mr. President, let us return to the doctrine preached by Lincoln when he said: "I place the man above the dollar." Let us return to the doctrine of doing that which will bring about the greatest good to the greatest number.

This is the peoples' Government. Although haughty, sneering, purse-proud people may get control of it now and then and feel like they literally own it and consult nobody except the few men who contribute money under a brilliant chandelier in the nighttime and sit back and shape the policies and the destines of a hundred millions of people, I appeal from your judgment to the masses of America, and we will meet you upon the hustings and ask the people, "Whose Government is this? Is it a private snap, to be pillaged and plundered by a favored few, or is it the great civic instrumentality of the whole people, to be used for the good and welfare of all the people?"

FEDERAL RESERVE BANK OF ATLANTA, GA. (S. DOC. NO. 212).

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate a communication from the governor of the Federal Reserve Board, transmitting in response to Senate Resolution 304, agreed to June 8, 1922, a statement from the governor of the Federal Reserve Bank of Atlanta, Ga., giving certain information regarding the printing and distribution of a speech made by Senator GLASS in the Senate of the United States relative to the Federal reserve system, which, with the accompanying papers, was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency and ordered to be printed.

Mr. HEFLIN subsequently said: Mr. President, just as I concluded my speech, and did not hear the announcement of the Vice President, the response of the Atlanta Federal Reserve Bank came in, and I understand it was referred to the Committee on Banking and Currency. I ask unanimous consent that that order may be vacated, and that the report may lie on the Vice President's table until I can look into it, and perhaps make some suggestions regarding it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11228) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment to the pending bill. On page 46, line 21, I move to strike out "$5,500,000" and insert "$6,125,000."

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. In the amount appropriated for the Bureau of Yards and Docks, general maintenance, on page 46, line 21, it is proposed to strike out "$5,500,000," and in lieu thereof to insert "$6,125,000."

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the department estimates were $7,500,000. The Budget estimate was $6,750,000. My amendment is $625,000 below the Budget estimate. I think the Bureau of Yards and Docks ought to receive the Budget estimate at least, but I do not desire to go too far. Therefore I propose the very moderate amendment, as it seems to me, which I have sent to the desk; and I hope the committee will be willing to accept it and take it at least into conference.

The United States has invested in yards and docks over half a billion dollars. It is absolutely necessary that that property should be maintained. To allow it to remain out of repair only means much heavier appropriations in the future. I know of cases where buildings are almost on the point of falling down because the bureau has been utterly unable to make the necessary repairs from time to time. I think it is very poor economy to cut the Bureau of Yards and Docks to such a low point; and therefore I offer this amendment in the hope that the committee will be willing to accept it and at least take it into conference.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the following bills:

S. 156. An act for the relief of the heirs of Julio Carrazco, deceased;

S. 777. An act for the relief of John M. Green;

S. 1730. An act for the relief of Philip S. Everest;

S. 1880. An act providing for the appointment of Warrant Officer Herbert Warren Hardman as captain in the Quartermaster Corps, United States Army; and

S. 3291. An act for the relief of Henry Cordes.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 1784) for the relief of John B. Elliott, with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, severally with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 154. An act to extend the benefits of the employers' liability act of September 7, 1916, to Arthur E. Rump;

S. 494. An act for the relief of Benjamin O. Kerlee; and

S. 1087. An act for the relief of H. L. McFarlin.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills and joint resolutions, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 367. An act for the relief of J. Irving Brooks;

H. R. 513. An act for the relief of George R. Campbell, Milton B. Germond, and Walter D. Long;

H. J. Res. 316. Joint resolution authorizing the reappointment of Frederick Mears as a commissioned officer of the Regular Army and making him available, when so reappointed, for service as chairman and chief engineer of the Alaskan Engineering Commission; and

H. J. Res. 344. Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to detail four persons paid from the appropriation for the collection of customs.

THE MUSCLE SHOALS PLANT.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, again I want to state that I have no desire at this time to get the Muscle Shoals matter under discussion in debate, but I am not going to permit the insinuations made by the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] to pass unnoticed and undenied.

Mr. President, let me say, first, that I had believed, from the investigation that was taking place—an investigation that I did not seek myself, but which, in the regular routine of business, came to the committee of which I happen to be chairman, and of which the junior Senator from Alabama is a member himself—and I hope the Senator from Alabama will not leave the Chamber, because I have some reference to make to what he has said—

Mr. HEFLIN. I shall be back in a moment. I just want to answer the telephone.

Mr. NORRIS. I had hoped that we might have a fair and an honest investigation; not that I believed that we were going to agree when we got through, but I had hoped that when we finished the investigation that now is about completed no one would feel that he was called upon to point the finger of scorn and shame upon anyone connected with it and say there had been anything dishonest, there had been anything demagogical, there had been anything even unfair about it.

I do not believe that you can go to Mr. Ford or any of the men who have represented him, or any of the other persons or corporations who made bids for Muscle Shoals, and get any expression from any of them that there has been anything unfair, anything covered up. I think they will all admit that every man has had an opportunity without limit to testify, to argue, to bring all the witnesses he saw fit, and that upon the suggestion of the name of any witness he has always been subpœnaed by the chairman of the committee. Until the Senator from Alabama practically accused everybody who is not for Ford of being a demagogue, and almost a traitor to his country, I have never yet heard any insinuation that there was anything wrong anywhere; and it requires the eagle eye of the Senator from Alabama to find the corruption that has been going on in that committee against Mr. Ford. Mr. Ford will not charge it. Mr. Ford will repudiate the insinuation of the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I never made any such insinuation. I referred to what had been said by witnesses on that stand, their testimony.

Mr. NORRIS. There has never been an intimation, when the Senator had an opportunity to examine a witness, that any of the witnesses were moved by motives that were dishonorable. Some of them were moved by self-interest, undoubtedly, but there has not been an insinuation made.

For instance, let me illustrate. The Senator from Alabama has been saying here and everywhere that there is a fertilizer trust that is holding the farmer down on his back. I happen to come from a State that does not use fertilizer. I do not know much about it. I had no particular interest, at least, you might say, of a selfish kind, in the fertilizer question. I realize that it is a big problem. I had heard the charge made by the Senator from Alabama that there was a fertilizer trust; I had not heard it denied, and I assumed that it was true, and I supposed that on this investigation it would develop. If there is a fertilizer trust, Mr. President, I summoned the head of that trust before the committee to testify. I was not prepared to cross-examine that witness as fully as I would have been if I had made a study of the question and had become imbued with the idea that there was a fertilizer trust; but there sat the Senator from Alabama. I asked that witness everything I could think of that would have a bearing upon the organization of a fertilizer trust and the control of the price, contrary to the law, and I confess I did not get anything out of him of any value. But the Senator from Alabama sat there, heard it all, and never asked a question. There was the great Fertilizer Trust looking him right in the face, and he was as silent as the grave.

Mr. HEFLIN. I had no confidence in anything he was saying.

Mr. NORRIS. I understand the Senator says that, but there was an opportunity, if he wanted to be fair with the committee, to get something started. When he did not do that, I said—and, to use the Senator's language, if somebody has not taken it out, it is still in the hearings—I said to the Senator from Alabama, "I do not know anything about this trust business. You seem to know all about it. I will subpœna any man in the United States you want, and we will show up this Fertilizer Trust." But he did not suggest anybody.

I sent to the Federal Trade Commission, and they sent their expert. He knew nothing about it except what had happened up to the time of the war. The Federal Trade Commission had made no investigation since. I assume he told the truth. I confess I know nothing about it except what was developed on the witness stand, but that expert from the Federal Trade Commission said—and again, if his testimony has not been changed, it will be found in the record—that up to the time of the close of his investigation, about the beginning of the war, there was no such "animal" as a fertilizer trust in America. He said there was keen competition.

Mr. HEFLIN. Did he not say he had made no investigation for seven years?

Mr. NORRIS. Not since the beginning of the war. I stated that.

Mr. HEFLIN. Did he not say that fertilizer had gone to its highest price in 1919 and 1920?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know whether he said that or not, but everybody knows that everything has gone up; it does not take an expert to show that.

Mr. HEFLIN. Will the Senator state what I said when the Senator asked me to get witnesses? Did I not state that it was the business of the Attorney General to investigate trusts?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not remember; but I presume the Senator said that. But it seems to me the question is not so much whether there is a fertilizer trust. Everybody wants to reduce the cost of fertilizer. That does not mean the farmer alone, but everybody who eats food, and I am just as much interested in it; and, contrary to the insinuations the Senator from Alabama has made, I am just as honest in it as he is. One of the reasons, I think the principal reason, why the price of fertilizer has gone up has been the increase of freight rates. It is a heavy product, and the freight is a large part of its cost to the farmer.

Mr. HEFLIN. I do not doubt that.

Mr. NORRIS. One would not get that idea by listening to the Senator. I have said before that I believe whoever had charge of the nitrate plants down there and the Muscle Shoals power would reduce the price of fertilizer. Somebody will discover a way some time; somebody will improve the present method. There are thousands of men engaged in studying it now, and no matter who does improve it, the farmer will undoubtedly get the benefit of it. Particularly would that be true if the Senator from Alabama, instead of trying to make the farmer believe that Ford is going to get him in heaven, when he has not agreed to do it, would come with us and help us to pass through Congress a bill providing for a governmental corporation or organization to develop and improve Muscle Shoals, and do it in the name of all the people of the United States, instead of making a real-estate speculation out of it. If that were done, we might get somewhere.

The Government of the United States has spent $106,000,000 on the property down there at Muscle Shoals. Mr. Ford's offer is to buy it from the Government, and for all except the land adjacent to the dams he is to get a deed in fee simple from the Government of the United States, land and improvements which cost us over $100,000,000 of the taxpayers' money, for which he agrees to pay $5,000,000. I am opposed to that. Have I not a right to be opposed to it without being denounced as a demagogue? The farmers of America, instead of being defended from the onslaught being made upon them by those who are not in favor of accepting Mr. Ford's offer, ought to be defended from the deception of the demagogue.

Then Mr. Ford's corporation, under his offer, would get a lease of the two dams for 100 years. I am opposed to that being done for anybody. I am not against Ford. I am against any corporation or any man getting for a mere bagatelle what cost the taxpayers of the United States $106,000,000 something which it is admitted must in some way be kept as a war proposition. Until some new discovery is made to get nitrates cheaper from the air, it is conceded by everybody who has studied the question that we must maintain nitrate plant No. 2 as a war proposition, even though we can not make any fertilizer out of it. Mr. Ford, under his proposition, would get a warranty deed, in fee simple, to property worth $105,000,000 or $106,000,000 for $5,000,000 and a lease for 100 years of the water power which he would develop, but the Government would put up the money—every dollar. On this money he would pay 4 per cent interest and repay the principal of the cost from now on in 100 years.

If a Government corporation is provided for, as provided in the bill I have introduced, and it develop the plant, it will not throw that property away; it will keep it for all the people. It will develop power at Dam No. 2 and Dam No. 3, and with that power cheapen the operation of the plants. It will make fertilizer, and if new discoveries are made by the Government chemists, or by any other chemists, the farmer will get the benefit of them. It is not only Mr. Ford who will make it cheaper. In all honesty and fairness, I am willing to concede the good faith of Mr. Ford, and I believe he will make cheaper fertilizer if the Government turns over all that property to him for this song, because even if nobody develops it, fertilizer is going to cheapen some time. If it is within the possibility of human ingenuity and discovery, it will be cheaper. We all want to see that, and it is unfair, it is ungracious, for the Senator from Alabama to insinuate that Mr. Ford only stands between the farmer and ruin. I deny it emphatically; it is not true. There is not a basis of a foundation upon which such an assertion can stand; and that is without any discredit to Mr. Ford. Nobody has ever heard me say a word to discredit him.

Over 4,600 acres of land which the Government owns go with this proposition, enough to build a city, to be given to Mr. Ford. It is his intention, I understand—and there is nothing dishonorable about it—to use all the excess power there in manufacturing. He does not agree to sell a single kilowatt of it, and it is no secret that he intends to go into the manufacturing business there, manufacturing automobiles, or whatever he pleases. The power that is developed there will all be his, under his proposition, in addition to getting title to all this property, with the exception of enough to run nitrate plant No. 2, and under his proposition he can not lose anything on that, because he provides that he shall not make more than 8 per cent profit on the fertilizer end of the business.

The balance of the power is going into the manufacturing business, and a city will spring up there, without any doubt. That is the basis of this propaganda, in the main. Real-estate agents are flooding the country and spending their money. I saw an advertisement just the other day in a Washington paper which I thought I had here, but I can not find it. But here is an advertisement from an Alabama paper, coming from Birmingham, Ala. This is a two-page advertisement [exhibiting] advertising real estate at Muscle Shoals. They think there is going to be a city there bigger than New York. It is all platted out. You are invited to buy a lot, to invest your money now, and become a millionaire later. They say Ford is going to erect a great city there, and he probably will, if his offer is accepted. God knows he will get enough to build two cities, and in the main the Government will furnish the money. He is to pay it back in a hundred years, or part of it. Under his proposition he will fall short about $100,000,000 of paying back what the Government put into it, but he pays back a good many millions of dollars, running over a hundred-year period.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator does not remember the testimony correctly, I am afraid, when he says that Ford will not pay back in a hundred years more than the Government expended.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator from Alabama had not this morning given an exhibition of his ignorance of the testimony before the committee, I would take his present announcement with some seriousness, but I do not believe the Senator from Alabama knows what the testimony is.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am willing to have the testimony show for itself.

Mr. NORRIS. Then I will tell the Senator what it will show. I can not call the witness's name; it may have been Colonel Cooper; but I think what I refer to was testimony by some other witness, that, allowing 4 per cent interest both ways, on all the money advanced by the Government, and 4 per cent on everything coming to Mr. Ford, when we got through, at the end of a hundred years, and Mr. Ford has complied with his contract—he would be an old man then, you know—there would be lacking $93,000,0000 of his paying back what the Government was out. That is in the testimony. If the testimony does not show it, then I am willing to acknowledge my mistake. Ford's offer does not contemplate the repayment to the Government of any part of the $17,000,000 which we have already spent on Dam No. 2, or any part of the money we have spent on Dam No. 3, or any interest on the money which we will advance to complete these dams from the time the money is advanced until the dams are completed, which will be from one to five years.

Mr. HEFLIN. Does not the Senator agree that the figures and the testimony of Colonel Cooper show the way he calculated the interest?

Mr. NORRIS. I have not analyzed these figures; I have not made the computations. I think I know enough to do it if I should take two or three days' time and figure it up, but I assume that these witnesses, judging from the figures they have taken as the bases of their figuring, which are in the record, are correct. If they are not, it can easily be determined.

Mr. HEFLIN. Was not Mr. Cooper the only man who testified that he would not pay the Government back more than the Government put up?

Mr. NORRIS. No.

Mr. HEFLIN. What other witnesses so testified?

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator understood the testimony, he would not ask that question.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am willing for the testimony to show about that.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me make a statement about what Ford's offer is. The Government of the United States has now spent $17,000,000 on Dam No. 2 and several hundred thousand dollars on Dam No. 3. Ford's proposition does not, on the face of it, contemplate payment back to the Government of one cent of that money. Ford's proposition provides that the Government shall put up the money to complete these two dams.

Mr. POINDEXTER. How much?

Mr. NORRIS. Whatever it is.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Forty million dollars, is it not?

Mr. NORRIS. He figures $42,000,000, and the Government engineers figure $50,000,000. Ford will commence to pay 4 per cent interest on it after the dams are completed, but between now and the time of the completion of the dams, as the money is advanced by the Government, Ford's proposition does not provide for the payment of a cent of interest.

Mr. LODGE. Do I understand the Senator correctly that as a preliminary to Ford taking possession the Government is to put up between forty and fifty million dollars in addition to what it has put up?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; the Government is to finish the dams and Ford's corporation pays it back. It is amortized over a period of a hundred years.

Mr. WADSWORTH. When does he start paying interest?

Mr. NORRIS. When one dam is completed, and when the next dam is completed he starts paying interest on the cost of that. If the Senator from Alabama will take his pencil and figure it, he will not need an expert. He can tell without a pencil and paper that if we spend $17,000,000 and never get it back, that is $17,000,000 lost. Ford does not propose to pay that back. I do not say that in criticism of Mr. Ford; I am telling the facts about his offer. He will not deny it. He never has proposed to pay that back. He never has proposed to pay interest on the money the Government uses during the time it employs it until the dam is completed. He is to commence to pay interest when it is completed. When the Senator makes the computation he will find that at the end of a hundred years 4 per cent interest on the money invested will amount to a good deal of money. Experts who have computed it say it will be over $90,000,000 at the end of the 100-year period.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the Senator for information what Mr. Ford proposes to do with the seventy-odd million dollars, as I recall the figures, which have been expended in the construction of the various plants that are found at Muscle Shoals?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. Ford gets the plants. He gets a deed to them.

Mr. KING. For nothing?

Mr. NORRIS. For $5,000,000, and that includes the Gorgas plant and the Gorgas transmission line.

Mr. HEFLIN. He does not get the dam. He does not own the dam at all.

Mr. NORRIS. He does not own the dam. He leases the dam for 100 years.

Mr. KING. Does he pay the $5,000,000 now or is that to go into the bond?

Mr. NORRIS. He pays it in installments of $1,000,000 a year.

In a nutshell, this is Mr. Ford's offer: The Government is to deed to him the land down there—4,666 acres, I think it is—upon which are constructed nitrate plant No. 1, nitrate plant

No. 2, a town at nitrate plant No. 2, another town at nitrate plant No. 1, macadamized streets, houses that are furnished, and it includes the furniture, and Mr. Ford gets the furniture, electric lights, sewerage and water system in each of the towns; the Gorgas transmission line and an interest in the Gorgas plant, 90 miles away, over on the Warrior River, which cost the Government altogether something over $100,000,000. All the houses that were permanent houses in the two towns are in first-class shape, many of them furnished with good furniture, as modern as any house anywhere, with heating plants, lighting plants, and everything up to date. There are a large number of other houses that were temporary, only for construction purposes—I think several thousand of them, at least. There was a place down there, as I understand it, that had homes for 20,000 people. Those were permanent homes which were constructed with the view that they would be needed in the operation of nitrate plant No. 2 and nitrate plant No. 1.

No. 2 plant is in first-class condition and can start up to-morrow. Then there is a steam plant of 130,000 horsepower, just as modern as any in the world. In addition he gets 26 miles of standard-gauge railroad, a whole lot of railroad engines, nearly 100 railroad cars—freight cars. He gets all the necessary machinery, and there is a lot of it, modern and in fine shape; a cement-mixing plant that is one of the largest in the world. He gets a large stone quarry—I have forgotten how many, how large—with modern machinery capable of crushing more than 1,200 tons of rock daily, all in running order.

There is a steam plant No. 2 over at Muscle Shoals of 50,000 or 60,000 horsepower, just as modern as any in the world. Nitrate plant No. 1, while the permanent building is practically fireproof, constructed out of the very best materials, has machinery in it that is of no value. It never was a success. It was devised as an experiment to a great extent.

Under the provisions of the bill which I have introduced, the Government will continue to experiment at nitrate plant No. 1. It will cost a couple of million dollars to change all the machinery in that plant and make a nitrate plant out of it. Mr. Ford does not agree to do that. He gets title to nitrate plant No. 1. He can use it for making automobiles or anything he cares to. The power is already there. He does agree to operate nitrate plant No. 2, and that is the only thing, in addition to the $5,000,000 payment, that he agrees to do for the $105,000,000 worth of property.

But in its operation he expects to make money, and he binds himself by the agreement that he will not make more than 8 per cent on that end of the operation. He gets, in addition to that, the Government's title to the Gorgas plant, that cost in round numbers $5,000,000, and the transmission line from Gorgas that has not anything necessarily to do with Muscle Shoals whatever, which was constructed over there by the Government in order to have cheap power to build the various buildings and power plants that I have mentioned.

The Alabama Power Co. had a power plant right at the mouth of the mine. The Government made a contract with the Alabama Power Co. to increase that plant. It was more than doubled in power. The Government built it. It is on the land of the Alabama Power Co. The Government built the transmission line and took the power over to Muscle Shoals, in round numbers 90 miles away. It built a lot of buildings on the Alabama Power Co. land, because it was necessary to have some men there. It put in machinery and spent about $5,000,000 there, all on property owned by the Alabama Power Co. It is impossible to go into that great power concern and tell where the one ends and the other begins. It is all mixed up. Here will be a four or five room house owned by the Government and next to it another house of four or five rooms owned by the Alabama Power Co. Here is a great big piece of machinery in a building. The Government built the building; the power company owns the machinery; or the Government put in the machinery and the power company owns the building. The main plant, all in one building, is composed of two great big units, operated together, supplied with coal from the mine right there near at hand. The coal mine belongs to the Alabama Power Co. There is a standing offer in writing by which Mr. Ford could sell the Gorgas plant the next day after it is turned over to him for $2,500,000. He could accept this and then all this great property would cost him only $2,500,000. He could make this sale and it would not interfere in any way with the development of Muscle Shoals. It is 90 miles away in another river valley.

Now, Mr. Ford includes the Gorgas plant in his proposition. It is not necessary to have that now since we have power over at Muscle Shoals, although it is cheaper than the Muscle Shoals steam power, because it is right at the mouth of the mine. To operate the steam plant at Muscle Shoals the coal must be transported on the railroad. When the dam is completed then there will be cheaper power at Muscle Shoals even than the Gorgas plant furnishes. So that it is not necessary to have that plant now. Its main use has been finished, but there will be a lawsuit between the Government and the Alabama Power Co. to unscramble that scrambled egg.

The House Members in their report and everybody who went down there and looked at it said, "We do not want to get the Government into this difficulty." Nobody knows how to divide it up. The Government ought to have it all or the Alabama Power Co. ought to have it all. No honest man will look at it and come to any other conclusion, and yet to-day on this floor the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] practically denounces every man as a demagogue who seeks to separate the Gorgas plant from the balance of the property in the interest of the people of the United States and particularly the farmer. I do not want the Government to get into that lawsuit. I think it ought to be separated, and I can not conceive how Mr. Ford insists on having it in. As shown by his bid, he does not need it. It is not a part of Muscle Shoals, and when the dam is completed there will be no object in his having it except, so far as I can see, that it would cripple his principal competitor in the hydroelectric business, the Alabama Power Co.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from Alabama.

Mr. HEFLIN. I never mentioned the Gorgas plant at all. I talked about Muscle Shoals purely and wholly, singly and solely.

Mr. NORRIS. I will leave it to Senators who heard the statement. If the Senator did not refer to it, then I am wrong and I apologize. I appeal to Senators who heard the Senator from Alabama make his speech. I appeal to the RECORD of to-morrow. If the Senator, as he has said about the testimony before the committee, does not change it, he will find that he did mention Gorgas. If he did not, then I owe the Senator an apology, and I will apologize. I understood the Senator to mention the Gorgas plant. If he did not, then I am wrong in ascribing to him what I have said in reference to his comment that I understood him to make on that item.

Mr. HEFLIN. I will tell the Senator what I said. I said General Gorgas went down to the Panama Canal and cleaned up the mosquito district, and he did the same at New Orleans. I never mentioned the Gorgas plant.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator did not, then I am wrong.

Mr. HEFLIN. The Senator is wrong.

Mr. NORRIS. We will see when the RECORD comes out. If I am wrong, I shall not hesitate to say so.

In addition to what I have stated, Mr. Ford or his corporation gets the lease on two dams in the Tennessee River for 100 years. He does the work. He gets all the Government has. He gets the Government railroad that is down there. He gets the lease of all the real estate. There is another town with electric light, macadamized streets, and everything, up there at Dam No. 2. He gets no title to that, but gets a lease for 100 years, which I submit is practically a clear title. A 100-year lease in many countries is considered to involve the right to convey the real estate. He gets that lease for 100 years. The Government furnishes the money to complete both the dams, but Mr. Ford does the work. That is paid for out of Government appropriations. When the dams are completed he commences to pay back the Government on an amortized 100-year basis, an amortization yearly fee that will pay back in 100 years the amount of money that is expended for the completion of the dam from now on. He pays nothing back, as I said a while ago; and as the Senator from Oregon [Mr. MCNARY] just reminds me, he pays nothing of the $17,000,000 that the Government has already put in. He pays no interest on the money the Government pays out during the course of the construction of the dams, which will take some four or five years. The Government engineers say it will take about five years to complete both.

Out of the power so developed he must use enough of it to operate plant No. 2. It will take nearly 100,000 horsepower to do that, but he does not do that for nothing. He makes fertilizer out of that and sells the fertilizer at not to exceed a profit of 8 per cent. The balance of the power is Ford's absolutely, with no regulation in regard to it, and no control over it, and he does not contend that there is any control over it. He does not pretend that he is going to use it for public purposes. He admits that he is going to use it for Mr. Ford. There is nothing wrong about it, of course. I am not saying it in any sense of criticism. I am stating it as a fact.

Mr. LODGE. To how much does that balance of horsepower amount?

Mr. NORRIS. That is somewhat uncertain. It will be between 500,000 and 600,000 horsepower, in my judgment.

Mr. LODGE. He uses 100,000 horsepower, in round numbers, for the work, and gets the balance for nothing?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes. After the dams are completed he pays on the money that the Government put into them 4 per cent interest. He pays $35,000 a year to maintain Dam No. 2. He pays $20,000 a year to maintain Dam No. 3.

There is a point I want to call attention to, and I wish the country would look at it. I do not know what the result of the mathematical computation is going to be, but I am having it made by Major Burns, who is one of the greatest Government experts on chemicals that we have, and conceded by everybody to be honest, I think. I never heard it questioned until the Senator from Alabama spoke to-day, in which he classified those witnesses as demagogues and everything else, and Major Burns is in the list. The Senator ought to apologize to Major Burns.

Mr. HEFLIN. I did not have Major Burns in mind.

Mr. NORRIS. I am glad to hear the Senator say that. I did not think the Senator had him in mind.

Mr. HEFLIN. No.

Mr. NORRIS. I do not see how he could make that charge.

Mr. HEFLIN. But I am not charging that Major Burns is not against Ford.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course; I am not, either. If the Senator finds out that he is against Ford, then Major Burns goes in with the list. If he is for Ford, he is a good fellow. The Senator will have to find that out.

Mr. HEFLIN. I shall apply the Scripture to them—"By their fruits ye shall know them."

Mr. NORRIS. I am told by the experts—this is not in the evidence yet, but there will be evidence of it before we complete the hearings—that it costs to maintain the dams, the machinery end of which Ford in his offer agrees to maintain himself and the Government maintains the balance of the dam, 1½ per cent on an average to keep a dam like these in order. If that is true, the Government will be called upon for 100 years to keep Dam No. 2 in order and in running shape upon the payment of $35,000. If that dam goes out next year, the Government must rebuild it and put it in shape, and it never will get a cent return on its investment except the $35,000. On Dam No. 3, which is not quite as large, the Government will get $20,000.

I do not know what the result is going to be of the investigation. I give it as my judgment now that the fee which is offered by Mr. Ford's corporation to keep the dams in repair will not pay one-tenth of what is necessary to keep them in repair. The Government agrees to do that for a hundred years, with no redress, no interest, and no return of anything. It is altogether the greatest gift in history.

Mr. President, am I a demagogue because I am opposed to having the Government give away that property and would rather the Government should keep it? Am I crowding the poor farmer down on his back and throttling him because I do not want to give that to any man, not even to Mr. Ford? May not a Senator be opposed to Mr. Ford having this grant and still admire Ford as a man? Has it come to this, that a Senator of the United States must lie down absolutely and say, "I will give this to Ford because he is Ford," and give away for a hundred years the heritage that belongs to generations that are yet unborn?

With the power developed a great manufacturing city will be erected. That is where the real estate man comes in. The land of the Government at Muscle Shoals, consisting of 4,000 acres, will be worth $10,000 an acre, at least a part of it will be, 20 years from now if this proposition goes through.

Mr. President, that is not all. None of this concession will go to Ford. We talk about Ford, but Ford is not in it. His own proposition provides that it shall go to a corporation which he will organize. There is no guaranty that Ford will own it or control it even during the remainder of his life, and God knows, you know, Mr. President, and we all know, even the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] knows, that Ford can not live a hundred years. Give to Ford all the credit that has ever been claimed—and I am willing to give him as much as will any man—but he is human like the rest of us, and when Ford dies—assuming, as I think I would be willing to assume, that he will carry out in spirit everything he agrees to do so long as he lives—he can not bind the corporation after he is dead.

The Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] has stated that Ford is going to make proper provision in his will. Ford, however, has not said so, and Ford will not say so. It would not be any good if he did make provision in his will. Ford knows that, even if the Senator from Alabama does not. Because the Saturday Evening Post is sold for 5 cents a copy now, the same as it was in the beginning, the Senator from Alabama says that the great benefit which it is hoped will be derived by the farmers is going to continue for 100 years. Mr. President, suppose this offer were made by John D. Rockefeller. Would anybody be for it? Can we not get the benefit to our people from this project without giving away everything that the Government has? At the end of a 100-year period there is no obligation upon the part of the corporation even to make nitrates.

Mr. President, we ought to look at this question as sensible men. Everybody believes, and the belief is so prevalent that it is almost knowledge, that in 10, 20, or 30 years from now many of the things we do now will be out of date. Getting nitrates from the air may be unnecessary; in 10 years they may be so cheap that water power will not be needed to extract them. Invention may completely revolutionize the whole situation, and we believe it will. If it does, we shall not need nitrate plant No. 2 as a war necessity. If we did not need it as a war necessity we would scrap it to-morrow, but it is a war insurance, just as a battleship is, and we need it. If we should again become involved in war we would be almost ruined if we did not have it if our adversary controlled the sea and kept us from bringing nitrates from Chile. So we ought, I think, retain this power in the hands of the people absolutely, take advantage of any new inventions which may come, and do whatever may be necessary as changes take place to keep and preserve all of the rights and the property of the people of the United States without giving them to anybody.

A hundred years, Mr. President. Ford, of course, expects to build a city, and I have no doubt that he will. That will be better than nothing, I admit; but there are two ideas about the use of electricity which is made by power development on navigable streams. One is that it should be scattered over the country, distributed among the States, counties, and municipalities, so that it will get into the homes of the people at a cheap rate. Ford's offer does not propose to do that. That was suggested in the letter from the president of the Mississippi Valley Association, which was read this morning. It gave the idea that electric power was going to be distributed over the Mississippi Valley; but under the Ford offer not a kilowatt of it will go 10 miles from Muscle Shoals; it will stay right there. That is better than not developing it, I will admit, but if, on the other hand, the Government retains it, if we have a governmental corporation, then the bill provides that preference shall be given in the use of electricity to counties and municipalities, so that it will go into the homes of the people.

One of the men who is spending his time now under the influence of the real estate syndicate to advance Mr. Ford's offer always talks about the washerwoman, and says, "We want the washerwoman to have an electric washing machine." He does not stop to tell them that under Mr. Ford's offer not a single washerwoman will get a kilowatt of power. Under the bill that retains the plant under the control of the Government the power will go to the washerwoman; it will go into the humble home to wash the clothes, to wash the dishes, to light the home at a cheapened rate. Under Government control there would not be such a big city built up in that vicinity; that is true; but the electricity would be carried to Little Rock, Ark.; it would be carried to New Orleans; it would be carried within a radius of 300 miles. So I do not understand why Senators from those States, the people of which under the bill introduced by me will get the benefit of the power developed from this navigable stream, are not favorable to that course, rather than to the proposition which centralizes it in one locality; that gives all the power to one corporation, without any regulation, to be used as they see fit in enriching themselves. I do not blame the corporation; I am not finding fault with it, but it is a corporation and not Mr. Ford. I believe it is a sin against unborn generations to give away this great inheritance to one corporation for 100 years without any regulation whatever. This is especially true when its value comes from a navigable stream and is to be developed with the taxpayers' money—not the money of the real estate speculators in one locality and the politicians in that vicinity who are running for office or holding office on the popularity of a scheme to enrich a locality at the expense of the taxpayers of the entire Nation.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. BURSUM. What guaranty does Mr. Ford furnish the Government that any of the money advanced will be repaid except in the event of the success of the venture?

Mr. NORRIS. He agrees to organize a corporation with $10,000,000 capital stock. Of course, the corporation would be liable, and the property would also be liable for the money advanced. I have no fear, I will say to the Senator, that payment would not be secured.

The Muscle Shoals power site is one of the most valuable gifts ever given to man; in fact, one of the experts, Mr. Cooper—and, by the way, he is the man who is now at the head of the construction of the dam—gave it as his judgment that as soon as this contract was made with Mr. Ford he could sell it on the market for $200,000,000 cash.

Mr. BURSUM. That may be true; but is it not also true that all of the property and all of the money would be put up by the Government?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. BURSUM. And that the Government must trust to the success of the enterprise for repayment. If the corporation should fail in its operations, at the end of 100 years the Government would have no recourse. Is that true?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; that is true.

Mr. BURSUM. So that there is no actual security?

Mr. NORRIS. I would not offer that as an argument against the proposal, because I have no fear of that; but under Mr. Ford's offer if the dam should operate for 50 years and then an accident should happen to it by reason of flood or some other act of God so that it should be carried away Mr. Ford would not be liable under his offer but the Government would have to reconstruct the dam. Under his bid, if an accident should happen, therefore, the corporation is not liable but the Government is. There is no risk whatever on the part of the corporation.

Mr. BURSUM. The Government would put up all the money and assume all the risk and Mr. Ford or his corporation would assume the benefits, if there are any?

Now, with reference to nitrates, what percentage of the possible power did Mr. Ford agree will be devoted to the production of nitrates?

Mr. NORRIS. The corporation will agree to operate nitrate plant No. 2 to its capacity, which is 40,000 tons of nitrogen a year.

Mr. BURSUM. What percentage of the total power does that represent?

Mr. NORRIS. That will take between 90,000 and 100,000 horsepower, I should say, which is a very small part of the total.

Mr. BURSUM. What is the total power possible?

Mr. LODGE. Six hundred thousand horsepower.

Mr. NORRIS. Of course, when we are speaking of the total power a great many things may be said as to primary power and secondary power. The total primary power of Dam No. 2 is a little less than 100,000 horsepower. That means that every day and every minute of each year the power will be developed. The possibilities in that direction are still uncertain, but there are great probabilities that there will be very much more power developed than that. The Tennessee River varies a great deal from its high to its low flow. There will be 10 months of the year when there will be more than double that much power, and, by the use of the steam plant, which is there to fill out the little gaps, the secondary power is transformed into primary power.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. McNARY. I think the testimony clearly shows, and is indisputable, that by the completion of Dam No. 2 and Dam No. 3, 600,000 horsepower can be developed at those two sites.

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; and there will be considerably more than that for a part of the year.

Mr. BURSUM. I asked the questions in order to ascertain whether or not the paramount interest in this proposition was for manufacturing purposes or whether it was for nitrates for the people.

Mr. NORRIS. There is not any doubt about that. I want to say that Mr. Ford is not practicing any deception, so far as I know, but it is the people who have a crazy idea about what he is going to do which he has not agreed to do.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. Has the Senator introduced a bill providing that the Government complete this plant?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes.

Mr. OVERMAN. What will it cost?

Mr. NORRIS. The cost would be no different in one case than in the other, for the Government will pay all the money in either case.

Mr. OVERMAN. I understand as to that; but what amount has the Senator arrived at as being a proper appropriation?

Mr. NORRIS. I did not understand the Senator's question. The cost to complete Dams Nos. 2 and 3, under Mr. Ford's estimate, is $42,000,000. The Government engineers say it can not be done for that, but that it will cost nearer $50,000,000. We have spent now a little over $17,000,000 on it.

Now, I want to finish what I started to say.

If this proposition had been made by Rockefeller, or the International Harvester Co., or the United States Steel Corporation and they had simply changed Mr. Ford's name and put their's in it, there would have been the greatest denunciation coming from the same fellows—some of them, at least—who are advocating this. They would have said: "We will not stand for turning over to an unconscionable corporation for a hundred years the valuable rights that belong to the people of the United States." It is a play upon a name, Mr. President. Many a speculator and many a demagogue will go over the country playing upon a good name, a name in which the people of the country have confidence. Mr. Ford has not made these promises that are being spread broadcast over the world in his name. He admits what he is going to do. He will make millions, of course, hundreds of millions. He will build up that city. He will construct a great manufacturing plant. He will be able to compete with somebody else in the manufacture of whatever he goes into, and he will have an advantage over his competitor, because he will have this cheap power. He will have the cheap money of the Government of the United States to develop it. He will pay only 4 per cent interest, when his competitor will have to pay 8; and when you count the money that has gone in that he does not pay back, when you count the use of the money that the Government will put in to complete the dams, it means in effect that he is getting his money not at 4 per cent but at about 2½ per cent. That is what it means. Nobody can compete with that, especially when you consider the cheap power that he gets practically for nothing.

On the other hand, if this governmental corporation gets hold of Muscle Shoals, instead of building up a local city that power will go as far as it is possible under scientific invention to carry it, and the Senator from Arkansas will see light in his State that is generated at Muscle Shoals. That will be true in Tennessee. That will be true in Kentucky. That is the way to get it into the Mississippi Valley. That is the way to get it to the woman at the washtub. That is the way to get it into the little home, where they want cheap light and cheap power, and where they ought to have it, instead of putting it into one corporation to enrich them or one set of real estate fellows to build up a city in one locality. That is the difference, Mr. President. It is the difference between letting all the people who put up the money get the benefit and letting all the people put up and giving all the benefit to one corporation.

INVESTIGATION INTO SALE OF FERTILIZERS.

Mr. NORRIS submitted the following resolution (S. Res. 307), which was read, considered by unanimous consent, and agreed to:

Resolved, That the Federal Trade Commission be, and they are hereby, directed to make whatever investigation may be necessary and report to the Senate whether the production or sale of fertilizers is controlled by any combination, monopoly, or trust, and whether the dealers or manufacturers of fertilizers are in any unlawful conspiracy by which the price of fertilizers is enhanced.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

H. J. Res. 344. Joint resolution to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to detail four persons paid from the appropriation for the collection of customs; to the Committee on Finance.

ARTHUR E. RUMP.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 154) to extend the benefits of the employers' liability act of September 7, 1916, to Arthur E. Rump, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, to Arthur E. Rump, during his natural life, the sum of $60 per month, to date from the passage of this act, as compensation for injuries sustained while in the line of his duties as registry clerk at the St. Louis, Mo., post office, said payments to be paid through the United States Employees' Compensation Commission.

And to amend the title so as to read: "An act for the relief of Arthur E. Rump."

Mr. SPENCER. Mr. President, the Senate gave to this man—who is the worst injured man I ever saw in my life, absolutely ossified—$67.67 a month as long as he lives. The House cut down the figure to $60. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House, so that the bill may become a law.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KING subsequently said: Mr. President, the bill which the Senator from Missouri called up for consideration, and which we have just passed by concurring in the House amendments, presented a matter which was quite serious and, indeed, quite novel. It was stated at the time the bill was under consideration that it might constitute a very dangerous precedent, and yet it was understood by Senators then, and I want the fact to be again understood, that it is not intended to constitute a precedent at all; and we hope that no others will select it as a basis for claims founded upon similar contentions.

H. L. M'FARLIN.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1087) for the relief of H. L. McFarlin, which were, on page 1, line 4, to strike out "pay" and insert "pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated," and on page 1, line 6, to strike out "$15,048.52" and insert "$13,048.52."

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House. They make a reduction of $2,000 from what the Senate thought the man ought to receive; but rather than have the bill fail I move to concur in the amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11228) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

Mr. SWANSON. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] has offered an amendment which I think is of the utmost importance. I simply want to say this in relation to it: It simply furnishes money enough for the Government to take care of its own property. The amendment he offers is not for the employment of clerks. The Government now has certain property which it can not paint, can not put roofs on, the department tell us and the Budget committee tell us, unless that amendment prevails; and I hope the amendment will be accepted.

I should like to say, in addition to that, that we will give less than 1 per cent to repair the property of the United States if this amendment prevails. Of all the property the Government of the United States has, about 1 per cent of what we appropriate goes to repair the property that is owned by the people of the United States. The department say that unless this is done they can not roof the property, they can not paint the property, they can not take care of it. This is simply half of the difference between what the House asked and what the Budget Committee requested, and if this amendment does not prevail I think we will have trouble in taking care of our property.

ADJUSTED COMPENSATION FOR WORLD WAR VETERANS.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I am willing to suspend until a vote may be had, but I wish then to claim the floor.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I will state to the Senator from Arizona that I expect to oppose the amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. I do not wish to interpose my remarks in the way of the amendment, but I am obliged to leave the Chamber shortly.

Mr. KING. The Senator may as well speak now as later.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, will not the Senator let us dispose of this amendment?

Mr. ASHURST. I should be glad to do so, but the Senator from Utah says he intends to speak against it.

Mr. KING. I am going to oppose the amendment, and I suggested to the Senator from Arizona that if he was going to speak he might as well speak on this amendment now as later.

Mr. ASHURST. My remarks will be in the nature of an inquiry propounded to the Republican and Democratic leaders, and for this reason: Some absentees on this side have a right to be advised as to what is going to take place here Monday regarding the bonus bill. When the esteemed Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] reported the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill (H. R. 10874) on the 8th of this month, I stated modestly that it was the time for courage and nerve and pluck, and I was waived aside with the suggestion that there was a gentlemen's agreement that we would all have notice as to when this bill was coming up. Now absentees are telegraphing Senators on this side, saying that they understand that the soldiers' compensation bill will be brought up next Monday.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, at some time in the very near future I hope to be able to lay aside for a day or two the consideration of the tariff bill for the purpose of considering and passing, if possible, the soldiers' compensation bill.

I desire to say at this time that while the pending tariff bill which is under consideration marks the dividing line between Republicanism and Democracy, and in its discussion necessarily there must be partisanship and an attempt to take some partisan advantage, if possible. In the soldiers' compensation bill we have nothing but an American bill. I hope we shall be able to dispose of it as an American measure in the same spirit that we voted for appropriations to carry on the war.

Senators relied then and now rely on the assurance of that sturdy Senator, Mr. MCCUMBER, who for 24 years in this Chamber has never said anything that was false. Howsoever much we may disagree with the political philosophy of the Senator from North Dakota, he, in the language of the streets, never "trims."

In the New York World I find this language:

Following a conference with the President early to-day, Senator LODGE took to the Capitol word that Mr. Harding under no circumstances will permit sidetracking the tariff measure to consider the bonus bill.

This is from the New York World of the issue of June 16.

Receiving the news calmly, Senator MCCUMBER promptly announced that, President or no President, he will make his motion to take up the bonus bill next Monday if the naval appropriation bill is out of the way. He quietly told his associates that the honor of the Republican Pary is at stake and he will not have a hand in besmirching it. He declared the party was pledged to bonus legislation and the fulfillment of that promise could no longer be deferred or dodged.

Not only the correct rhetoric but the sturdy courage of that interview bears the earmarks of expression of the Senator from North Dakota. When I read that I did not need to ask him if he said it, because it sounds like him—sturdy, stern, courageous language—"President or no President, this American measure will be brought up Monday"—so some of the modest Senators on this side, sitting here, have telegraphed to absentees that their presence on this American measure was needed on Monday. Now, we are told by the Associated Press, by other news services, that the bonus bill, the soldiers' compensation bill, will be put away until a more convenient season.

I will read from the Washington Post of June 17; and in spite of all that I have heard from Senators from time to time in denunciation of the press, I find the press a reasonably accurate purveyor of information. It may now and then color its news items, but I think on the whole that if there be one thing that the American people could not dispense with it is the press, and I am inclined to say that it usually gives the news with a fair degree of accuracy, considering that we are living in a day of inaccuracies.

[By the Associated Press.]

* * * * * * *

Negotiations yesterday between the Republican factions favoring and opposing displacement of the tariff bill in behalf of the bonus were said to have resulted in the compromise which is to be presented Monday to the Republican Senators' conference.

The dispatch goes on to say that the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill will not be considered until after the tariff bill shall have been passed.

Now, Mr. President, I read from the New York Herald the headline on page 1, in the extreme left-hand column:

President compels McCUMBER to defer his bonus measure. First test shows Harding, putting tariff ahead, is master of party. Senator's hopes wane.

I pretermit some of the language, because it is not pertinent. This is by Mr. Louis Seibold:

The ease with which the rout of the bonus Senators was accomplished to-day justified the admirers of the President in declaring he will succeed in convincing the members of his party in Congress that the bonus bill should be dropped in the present financial condition of the country.

They were supremely confident to-night that his sound position on the bonus would be completely vindicated by ultimate results.

The test to-day came over the plans of the bonus Senators to set aside the tariff for the so-called adjusted compensation bill. Those plans were abandoned after Majority Leader LODGE canvassed the Senate and convinced Chairman McCUMBER, leader of the bonus bloc, of the futility of pressing them. Forty of the sixty Republican Senators notified Mr. LODGE that they would support the President's first definite venture in the direction of party leadership and oppose the plan to advance the bonus ahead of the tariff.

M'CUMBER GIVES IN.

Throughout a day of conferences between the various groups over the bonus Chairman McCUMBER persisted in his statement of yesterday that he would disregard the wishes of the President. He reluctantly acquiesced to the Lodge plan when he found that even a majority of his bonus associates were against him.

* * * * * * *

Mr. McCUMBER's surrender to the leadership of President Harding was not characterized by any great amount of harmony or good feeling. Some of the more ardent bonus Senators, including JOHNSON, of California, and CAPPER, of Kansas, millionaire leader of the agricultural bloc, expressed disapproval of the deal into which Mr. McCUMBER had entered with Senator LODGE.

We on this side have a right to complain of the present status—the uncertain and mystifying status—of affairs, and ours is not a captious criticism either, when no less a personage than the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], in reporting the compensation bill, gives us to understand that at the earliest moment he will urge not only its consideration but its disposal, and that a gentlemen's agreement has been entered into under and by the terms of which we are all to have due notice of the time it is to be called up. We relied upon that statement, and he then proceeded, on page 8371 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of the 8th, to say:

Mr. McCUMBER. If the Senator will allow me, in addition to what he has said and in response to the statement made by the Senator from Alabama to the effect that, as the bill does not go into effect until the 1st day of January, there is no hurry about securing its passage, I desire to suggest that if the bill becomes a law the department ought to have fully six months' time in which to get ready to put the matter into operation.

If this compensation bill is to take effect the 1st of January, 1923, the departmental machinery, which is to administer that law should have six months in which to prepare to function. That means that the bill should pass before the 1st of July this year; but if the press has correctly informed us this morning, an agreement is now about to be reached by the Republican Senators which will postpone the compensation bill until after the tariff bill is disposed of; that means that when the tariff bill has been passed Congress is liable to evaporate and adjourn. Do Senators believe that Congress can be held in session to pass a ship subsidy bill? Senators will find themselves much mistaken if they believe that.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Arizona yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. Does the Senator think that Senators will not stay here and furnish a quorum for the consideration of the adjusted compensation bill? If so, will the absentees be upon his side?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I can only speak for myself. Here is one who will not be absent.

Mr. LENROOT. I am sure the Senator will not be absent.

Mr. ASHURST. And I know the Senator from the State of Wisconsin will not be absent. I am unable to give assurances as to what may happen over here, just as my friend the Senator from Wisconsin is unable to give any assurances as to the attendance on his side. The tariff bill, I fancy, will pass the Senate some time in August. The administration will then make its drive for the ship subsidy bill, a bill which has a doublefold feature that is vicious. It proposes to permit liquor to be sold on American ships—to make a bootlegger out of the United States—and proposes also to put ahead of the soldiers' compensation bill the question as to whether or not we shall resort to the odious, discarded form of subsidy.

I do not claim that I am any more in favor of the bill than many Senators on the other side and many Senators on this side, but we must have an understanding. Telegrams are being sent to absentees that they need not be here Monday. Telegrams are also going to them that they must be here Monday, that a vote will be had, and they are entitled to know, especially when the Senator from North Dakota assured them that a gentleman's agreement protected them and that they would have due notice.

As to the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill, we ought to take hold of the problem like upstanding men and deal with it in accordance with its importance, in the way its dignity and its vitality deserve and require; and if the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill is postponed until the tariff bill shall have been passed by the Senate the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill will sleep the sleep that knows no waking.

Not only that but the Finance Committee has stricken from the adjusted compensation bill a provision which others as well as I thought wise, relating to land settlement for ex-service men. The Senator from Oregon [Mr. McNARY] has tendered to the Senate an amendment in the form of the McNary-Smith reclamation bill, and I much fear that the only chance his bill would have to pass would be as an amendment on the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill.

I now respectfully warn Senators who are in favor of the adjusted compensation bill, and I warn Senators who are in favor of the McNary-Smith reclamation bill, that if they do not vote on next Monday, or at some other time in the near future, to take up the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill for consideration, and final disposition they will be assisting to defeat the bonus bill and the McNary-Smith reclamation bill.

Two bills have been brought before this Congress which I would select as very important, to wit, the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill and the McNary-Smith reclamation bill; each and both are marked by the impress of statesmanship. They are bold in vision, sound in statesmanship, and they provide for the subsistence of this Republic. They provide not alone that something shall be taken out of the Federal Treasury, but they provided also that ultimately much shall be put into the Treasury. Of all the things this administration could do, of all the things to which it could point with pride, and that would enlist the support of the common man, the soldiers' compensation bill and the McNary-Smith reclamation bill would be the most prominent. It is true that within some counting houses, within some money changers' offices, within some financial institutions, some of whose chiefs hover in the vaults like vampires in the dusk, the compensation bill is seriously objected to.

Let us recall some of the history of the American Revolution. During that war the great difficulty the patriots encountered was the want of money or means to pay the soldiers who fought and the farmers, merchants, and manufacturers who supplied the necessary food and clothing for them. After the expedient of paper money had exhausted itself, certificates of debt were given to individual creditors, with assurance of payment as soon as the United States were able to pay. But the distress of these people often obliged them to part with these certificates at a fourth and even a tenth of their face value. Speculators made it a habit and a business to cozen these certificates from their lawful holders by telling them the United States would never pay, and in the funding bill Hamilton made no distinction between the original holders and the fraudulent purchasers of these certificates, hence many an honorably discharged soldier who bore in his pocket a discharge signed by Washington, sold his certificate of indebtedness for a tenth of its value. As soon as those claims or certificates had been gobbled up by money sharks Hamilton's plan for the Federal Government to assume the State debts was announced, the certificates went to par, and the battered soldier had to be content with one-tenth thereof.

Then in the House of Representatives rose James Madison, he of superb intellect, who said that the battered soldier who stood in the trench and hurled back the British Redcoats ought to be paid; whereupon the new class of moneyed men, of ferret-eyed sagacity in politic-commercial speculation, who had sent out swiftly flying packet boats and relays or riders to buy up these certificates declaimed about "national honor," and spoke with severe disapproval of "dangerous agrarian doctrines."

Now, Brother McCUMBER, you promised the soldiers a compensation bill. You said there was a gentlemen's agreement under and by which you would take it up. Do you intend to keep your promise or do you intend to violate it? Shall we have a vote on the compensation bill Monday or shall we not? When will we have a vote? Will the Senator make his motion to proceed to the consideration of the compensation bill? When will that be?

Mr. McCUMBER. I will reply to the Senator when he is through.

Mr. ASHURST. Very well. Of course, the Senator will reply. I expect he will. But will he say I may telegraph to the absentees on this side who wish to vote on it that the vote will be had Monday?

Mr. McCUMBER. When the Senator is through I will answer him.

Mr. ASHURST. I will stop right now if the Senator will answer the question, because that is all I want.

Mr. McCUMBER. I will wait until the Senator gets through, and then I am going to make a statement.

Mr. ASHURST. Ah, the Senator is going to make a speech——

Mr. McCUMBER. I am just going to answer when the Senator gets through.

Mr. ASHURST. Here is the question I want the Senator to answer: At any time during the next week will he move to proceed to the consideration of the adjusted compensation bill? May I, or any Senator on this side, telegraph the absentees that the Senator from North Dakota will move to proceed to the consideration of the adjusted compensation bill within the next 10 days?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I suggest that the Senator from Arizona telegraph to his friends that there is other business to attend to here which needs their presence just as much as the bonus, and for them to come back and attend to it.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Idaho delivers hard blows. There is not a Senator here but who carries upon his breast—not his back—scars made by the keen thrusts of that shining blade wielded by the Senator from Idaho. Not one here bears a wound in his back the blow of which was delivered by the Senator from Idaho. The wounds he makes are in the breast; face to face he meets us all. That is all I ask; we should know whether all this furious threat about proceeding to the consideration of that bill next Monday is true, so that we may know whether to call in the absentees on this question. The Senator's observations that they should be here to consider other questions, of course, is appropriate; but it so happens that I have not interested myself in attempting to secure their attendance here on these other matters. It so happens that when my learned friend from North Dakota made his report on the 8th, he urged the Senator from Arizona to be patient, that this bill would be taken up inside of a week or so, and that he would move to proceed to the consideration of this American bill at an early date.

I am not making any reflections on the Senator from North Dakota. While he was absent I said about him the things that were complimentary; the things which are uncomplimentary I have said when he was present. That is my habit. In his absence I said that his reputation here as a man of probity and truthfulness was well established and that we on this side believed him when he said on the 8th that he would soon displace the tariff bill and would move to proceed to the consideration of the bonus bill.

Now, the newspapers say that the Senator from North Dakota will defer the soldiers' compensation bill until after the tariff bill is out of the way. That is all we want to know. That is all we have a right to know; but I respectfully assert, with no intention to be offensive, that the Senator from North Dakota should, and I believe he will, assure us on this side as to whether he will make that motion within the next 10 days.

A majority on this side are willing and anxious to vote for his motion at any time it shall be made.

I ask the Secretary to read a clipping from the Washington Times. Senators will perceive why the warfaring men on this side, when we are bombarded one way one day and another way the next day do not know which way to turn or what to tell our constituents when we are asked with respect to the bonus bill. I ask that the article may be read in my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

NEW FIGHT LAUNCHED FOR BONUS—LA FOLLETTE TAKES UP WHERE McCUMBER LEFT OFF—INSISTS TARIFF BE SIDETRACKED.

[By J. Bart Campbell, International News Service.]

Fresh trouble over the soldiers' bonus confronted administration leaders to-day when Senator LA FOLLETTE, Republican, of Wisconsin, served notice that he would offer a motion in the Senate to displace the tariff for the bonus, now that Chairman McCUMBER, of the Senate Finance Committee, had agreed not to do so.

Senator LA FOLLETTE declared he certainly would not be bound by the compromise effected by the administration leaders with McCUMBER by which the bonus would be taken up immediately after the passage of the tariff bill and made the "unfinished business" of the Senate.

WALSH ASSAILS QUIBBLING.

LA FOLLETTE was said to have received assurances of support from not only a number of his Republican colleagues but from a large proportion of the Democratic side, where Senator WALSH, of Massachusetts, was threatening to make a similar motion.

"We have waited and delayed, we have argued back and forth about the source from which to derive the money to pay the additional compensation due our ex-service men," said LA FOLLETTE. "The hour has struck to stop quibbling and delaying about giving them a square deal.

"To postpone the bonus until after the passage of the tariff bill simply means further sidestepping and delay. I will not support such a plan. It is a palpable attempt to trick our ex-service men again into the belief that they are really to be cared for. No one can foretell when the tariff will be disposed of by the Senate, and no one can foretell what will happen to the bonus if we wait until the tariff is passed before taking it up.

"I deprecate the term 'bonus.' I do not like the term 'adjusted compensation.' I believe we should pass 'a bill to provide a measure of just compensation.' Canada did not wait two or three years after the war was over to deal justly by her soldiers. She provided some measure of justice for them at the outset of the struggle.

PLANS DETERMINED FIGHT.

"My own State voted a bonus to her soldiers and had the wisdom to compel those who profited from the war pay that bonus by taking it out of the surtaxes on big incomes. There is no reason why the Federal Government should not follow the admirable example of Wisconsin."

Mr. ASHURST. When the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], for whom I have something which is sweeter than an admiration, an affection, manfully announced on the 8th that we on this side should be patient, that we would soon have an opportunity to vote on the bonus bill, that he was going to displace the tariff bill, my name was the next day coupled with his, and I was proud to see it there. As a lesser luminary I am glad to get even reflected glory. The New York Commercial, paying its respects to Senator McCUMBER, to myself, and others for our advocacy of the bonus bill, went on to say editorially anent the bonus bill:

Where do the Ashursts and the Robinsons and the Heflins and the McCumbers of the Senate imagine the money is coming from? They seem to think the Treasury has an inexhaustible supply and that all that is necessary is for Congress to vote it and it can be got out of the thin air.

The Ashursts and McCumbers, the Heflins and Robinsons, think no such thing as that we can vote money out of the Treasury and get it out of thin air, but I fancy some of the men mentioned there and others believe that there will be no serious trouble to obtain an appropriate sum of money with which to pay the bonus.

The Senator from North Dakota has told us, in his great speech a year ago urging the bonus, how to obtain the money. He tells us how in his report. So those papers which do me the honor to couple me with the Senator's name and calling us both demagogues meanwhile because we have urged a soldiers' adjusted compensation bill need do nothing but read the Senator's report and thus learn where to obtain the money to pay the soldiers' adjusted compensation.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, where does the Senator expect to get the money with which to pay it?

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator has asked me a question that can not be dodged. That is his habit. Before he came here, as a lawyer, he never wasted time in circumlocution, in House-that-Jack-built methods. He simply put the question. I will tell him: Restore the excess-profits taxes, and your troubles will be over. Have I answered the Senator?

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Idaho is answered. I now yield to my friend, the able Senator from the State of Wisconsin, who voted for the repeal of the excess-profits tax. Do I do him an injustice?

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator does not. Does the Senator think the Senate of the United States has any power to initiate the restoration of the excess-profits tax or any other form of tax?

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator knows that I know that the Senate can not originate a tax bill; but the Senator knows that all sorts of taxes may as amendments be placed upon a tariff bill. Is the Senator answered?

Mr. LENROOT. No.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is not answered, he says.

Mr. LENROOT. Is the Senator familiar with the history of the relationship between the two Houses upon questions of taxation?

Mr. ASHURST. I am. The House favors the excess-profits tax.

Mr. LENROOT. Does not the Senator know that from the very foundation of the Government the House has consistently refused to consider an internal-revenue tax upon a tariff bill or a tariff tax upon an internal revenue bill?

Mr. ASHURST. The House has jealously guarded its constitutional prerogative, as it should have done. But I am not telling the Senator from Wisconsin anything new when I tell him that the Senate has used its eligible power to put such amendments on, and the Senator is too good a lawyer to deny that. I will ask the Senator if he is in favor of the bonus bill? Is that too sharp a question?

Mr. LENROOT. I certainly am.

Mr. ASHURST. I am glad to know that. I was fearful the Senator's pungent intellect might be against us on the bonus bill, and I am afraid that he will be against us on the Smith-McNary bill. If I can only enlist his aid, I know that bill will pass. I hope the Senator from Wisconsin is in favor of the Smith-McNary bill. He says he is in favor of the bonus bill. If you kill the soldiers' bonus bill and kill the McNary-Smith reclamation bill, the heat of popular resentment will consume you, root and branch.

Mr. LENROOT. I am so much for the soldiers' bonus that I do not propose to jeopardize it by voting for the Smith-McNary bill as an amendment to that bill.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator is for the Smith-McNary bill?

Mr. LENROOT. I will meet that question when we come to it. I am for the soldiers' bonus, but I am not willing to jeopardize the passage of that bill, as the Senator seems to be willing to do, by voting for the Smith-McNary bill as an amendment to it.

Mr. ASHURST. That is a very frank answer. Now, the Senator must know that I intend nothing offensive. Ten years here have taught me that a Senator can not get anywhere by being offensive, but I ask the Senator if he will vote to displace the tariff bill on Monday and take up the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill?

Mr. LENROOT. I shall be very glad to answer that question. I understand that a Republican conference will be held on Monday.

Mr. ASHURST. Oh——

Mr. LENROOT. Let me answer the question. The Senator asked me a question and I am willing to answer. If the Republican conference shall take the position, as it has already taken it——

Mr. ASHURST. What is that?

Mr. LENROOT. If the Republican conference shall adhere to the position heretofore taken that the bonus bill shall pass at this session of Congress, which it has heretofore declared is its policy, then I am willing to be guided by the action of the conference as to the time that it shall be taken up. Unless we can have that assurance I should vote to take it up.

May I take this opportunity to say that I expect, no matter what the attitude of the majority may be, that there will be motions made on Monday to take up the soldiers' bonus bill. The bonus bill will not pass, of course, until the majority of Senators are ready to take it up. Any motion that may be made when it is known that a majority are not in favor of taking it up will be made solely, as will be clear to the country, for political purposes, in order to try to appeal to the ex-service man of the country.

I may say to the Senator that the bill will be voted upon and the bill will pass, in my judgment, at this session. I am sorry that the Senator from Arizona feels that after the tariff bill has passed the Senate the Democrats on the other side of the aisle will not be sufficiently interested in the bonus bill to remain here and vote upon it, because he expresses it as his opinion that it would be impossible to maintain a quorum here for that purpose. I will say to the Senator that those on this side of the aisle will furnish their share of Republican votes toward the passage of that bill when it is taken up.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. Let me assure the Senator from Arizona and the Senator from Wisconsin both that when the time comes to vote upon the bonus bill the Chamber will be full. Senators will all be here upon both sides of the aisle.

Mr. ASHURST. I hope so. The Senator from Wisconsin—I am sure it must have been an unwitting sentence that fell from his lips—put into my mouth words I never used. I never said that when Congress adjourned the Democrats would not be here. I said if Congress would not maintain a quorum——

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator was not pretending to speak for those on this side of the aisle?

Mr. ASHURST. Oh, yes; I did.

Mr. LENROOT. Then, I want to assure the Senator that if he will keep those on his side of the aisle here whenever the bonus bill is taken up, Senators on this side of the aisle will be in their seats.

Mr. ASHURST. It is a bad policy to agree what somebody else will do, but I assure the Senator from Wisconsin that there are a number of Senators, not all of them on this side, who will be here and who will remain here as long as there is any hope of holding this Congress in session with a view of passing not only the adjusted compensation bill but the Smith-McNary reclamation bill.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. Nearly every Senator on this side will be here.

Mr. LENROOT. Then the Senator really thinks——

Mr. ASHURST. You have 60 Senators and we have 36. We have in constant attendance a larger percentage of Senators than you have, and the RECORD will disclose it. We both have absentees, necessarily absent. But your percentage of absentees is far greater than ours.

Mr. LENROOT. Then the Senator does wish to modify his previous statement that he feared there would not be a quorum here to take up the bonus bill if we waited until the tariff bill passed the Senate?

Mr. ASHURST. We have been assured many times that the compensation bill would be passed. The Senator from North Dakota, in language that could not be misunderstood, was quoted by the New York World on yesterday as saying that President or no President he would on Monday make the motion to consider the bill. If he should thunder in the index and flounder in the text, when Congress has finished the tariff bill he might say, "We will postpone it still further." What are we to expect in view of repeated postponements.

Mr. LENROOT. Will the Senator yield there?

Mr. ASHURST. Yes.

Mr. LENROOT. Of course, the length of the postponement would depend entirely upon Senators upon the other side of the aisle. If they would be willing to let us pass the tariff bill we could take up the bonus bill very soon.

Mr. ASHURST. Then the Senator from North Dakota was wrong when he said President or no President he would insist on the bonus bill being placed ahead of the tariff. Was he right or wrong?

Mr. LENROOT. That is for the Senator from North Dakota himself to say.

Mr. ASHURST. Does the Senator from Wisconsin think the Senator from North Dakota was right or wrong?

Mr. LENROOT. That is a question I could not answer for the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. ASHURST. I should like to know what the Senator from Wisconsin thinks about it. I am going to surrender the floor. It is procrastination; it is postponement; it is delay that kills legislation of this sort because postponement, procrastination, and delay result in the end in leaving things undone. I now surrender the floor to the Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, in the month of May, 1920, the House of Representatives passed a soldiers' compensation bill. That bill came to the Senate just before the adjournment of Congress in 1920. Both Houses had agreed to adjourn in season to attend the national presidential convention. There was not sufficient time to take up the bill and have it considered by the Finance Committee and have it passed prior to the agreed time for adjournment. However, Mr. President, when that bill was passed by an overwhelming majority in the other House, it was understood by the country that it would be taken up at the next session of Congress and would be disposed of at the special session. It was also understood after the result of the election was known that there would be a new revenue bill passed, and that there would also necessarily be a new tariff bill passed. The special session of Congress was called for the purpose of disposing of both a revenue and a tariff bill, and with the general understanding of the country that at that special session we should also dispose of the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill. The entire session practically was taken up in the discussion of the revenue bill, which forced the tariff bill and the soldiers' compensation bill over to the next session. However, it was clearly understood that there would be no abandonment of the position of the Republican Party in reference to the disposition and final enactment of the soldiers' compensation bill.

Mr. President, when the year 1922 arrived we found that there were a great many snags and entanglements to be straightened out in reference to the proposed legislation, and we proceeded in the best way we could under the circumstances to bring into existence a bill that would not only pass both Houses of Congress but also become a law, for that is the main purpose of a bill. The President, if he did not say so in direct words, at least said enough to indicate that he would veto any soldiers' compensation bill that did not carry with it the means for meeting its obligations.

The House of Representatives then proceeded to frame a bill of that kind, as all revenue bills must originate in that body, and at the same time to provide for the levy of a tax; but there was such a violent opposition to the levy of any new Federal tax that the House itself was compelled to retrace its steps. However, the President still insisted that the bill should provide the means of caring for any appropriation it might make. So we were in this position: The President from the very beginning and during the campaign in 1920 after the other House had passed the soldiers' compensation bill declared that he was in favor of a soldiers' compensation bill.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. Of course, he did not say what kind of a bill, but his declarations, as I have read them, favored a compensation bill.

Mr. BORAH. I have heard that statement made a number of times, and I presume there must be some foundation for it, but I have never been able to find any statement of the President during the campaign that he was in favor of a soldiers' bonus bill or of a soldiers' compensation bill. Can the Senator from North Dakota point me to any expression of the President to that effect?

Mr. McCUMBER. I can not now, but I read the speeches which the President made from time to time in the campaign, and I think I have a distinct remembrance on several occasions of reading an expression favoring the soldiers' compensation bill.

Mr. BORAH. I know the President has said in recent weeks that he did make some declaration in regard to the bill during the primary campaign, but, as he was not successful in the primary in which he made that declaration, he would not, I presume, feel that it was approved. He has not made any statement, as I understand, in favor of any bill like that now pending since he was nominated.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think the President has been in favor of a soldiers' compensation bill since he was nominated, and his own speeches, including his address to the Senate, indicate that he is favorable to it.

However, in his address to the Senate, in which he argued that the bill ought to be referred back to the committee, he declared that it should provide some method of raising the fund or that it should wait until we had settled and funded the obligations of foreign governments due us. There would be no occasion to ask that the bill wait until we fund foreign obligations unless the President felt favorable to it when that should have been done. So I think the attitude of the President right along has been in favor of the soldiers' compensation bill.

Mr. HARRELD. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield to the Senator from Oklahoma.

Mr. HARRELD. I merely wish to ask if President Harding was not elected on a platform pledged to the soldiers' compensation bill?

Mr. BORAH. No; he was not.

Mr. McCUMBER. The platform is not a pledge to that effect.

Mr. BORAH. The platform does not pledge the President to it——

Mr. McCUMBER. I understand that, and so stated.

Mr. BORAH. And it does not pledge anybody else to it. I was a member of the subcommittee which wrote that platform, and we were very particular not to make any pledge of a bonus.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; it guarded against it, but the country understood it, and I think the President again and again expressed himself favorable to the soldiers' compensation bill.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The Senator stated a moment ago, as I understood him, that it had been announced the President would veto the so-called soldiers' bonus bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. In the form in which it then was presented.

Mr. KING. I think the general opinion of the country is that President Harding is against the bonus bill. I should like to ask the Senator whether President Harding's popularity has increased in proportion as his reported opposition to the bonus has been carried to the people; and whether the alleged feeling of hostility to the Senate and the House has been strengthened by reason of the charges that they have sought the soldier vote?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I do not know how we are to gauge the popularity of any measure unless we go to the people upon that measure in some form. Wherever the people have had an opportunity to vote upon the question of soldiers' compensation they have indorsed it overwhelmingly, and I am certain if they could vote upon that question to-day they would indorse it by as large a comparative majority as have the people in the various States. I do not always base my judgment of popularity upon what the metropolitan newspapers in the city of New York may say of any subject. If I remember rightly, in the political arena when they have been united against any man he has been elected overwhelmingly, and if I were to gauge the popularity of a measure by what those newspapers say my conclusion would be that they would be on the unpopular side.

Now, the matter reached this position: President Harding was in favor of the soldiers' compensation bill provided a tax were levied to meet its obligations. The House was in favor of the soldiers' compensation bill provided no tax were levied, and so the soldiers' compensation bill was between those two obstacles.

Mr. BORAH. In other words, Mr. President, they wanted to please the taxpayers and the soldiers both.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; but the great newspapers of the country, which necessarily will pay their part of the tax, and those people who made millions and hundreds of millions out of the war, who would undoubtedly have to pay a little heavier tax, while with avidity they hauled in their millions, they hate to part with a few cents to pay off this obligation.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I did not hear the remark made by the Senator from Idaho a moment ago. It may be important.

Mr. BORAH. Perhaps I can explain it. The Senator from North Dakota says that the House was in this dilemma, that they wanted to pass a soldiers' bonus bill to pay the soldiers, but they did not want to levy a tax in order to pay it. I said, therefore, that they were desirous of pleasing both the taxpayers and the soldiers. I trust that is no reflection upon the House. It is applicable elsewhere.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes. We have many Senators who vote for every appropriation, but against every levy of a tax to meet it. It is a popular way of getting along in the world, but it does not do anything for the country; it does not help us out of our situation.

Mr. BORAH. Is there a provision in the Senator's soldiers' bonus bill to levy a tax?

Mr. McCUMBER. Is there a provision in the naval bill, which proposes to appropriate $294,000,000, to levy a tax?

Mr. BORAH. No; but if I had my way about it I would put a provision for levying taxes in some of the appropriation bills in order to make the people study them a little more carefully. I take it, however, from what the Senator says, that there is no provision in the soldiers' bonus bill to levy a tax or to provide a tax for the payment of the bonus.

Mr. McCUMBER. There is no provision in the bill for it.

Mr. BORAH. How is the Senator going to reconcile his trouble with the President?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think it can be reconciled, and I think it is reconciled in the bill. The President acted under the advice of the Secretary of the Treasury. The Secretary of the Treasury called his attention about a year ago to the fact that in 1923, or prior to that date, they would have to fund about seven billions of short-time obligations that would be outstanding, and the Secretary feared that if we passed a soldiers' compensation bill that would provide for a payment that might cost $4,000,000,000 in 20 years it might seriously interfere with the funding of these short-time obligations.

Mr. President, maybe there was some ground for a little apprehension at that time. Conditions did look serious at that time in the financial world; but, Mr. President, only a few days ago we read in these metropolitan papers, which say that the Government can not raise $78,000,000 in a year for soldiers' compensation without levying a tax, that there are $40,000,- 000,000 of credit looking for investment, and that there is not a single project calling for hundreds of millions that is not bid up and taken within a day or an hour after the bonds are put upon the market.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, will the Senator let me ask him just one question for information?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The Senator has been discussing the President's attitude in reference to the bill that he has fathered.

Mr. McCUMBER. I did not father the bill.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I mean the bill that the Senator reported on the floor of the Senate. He knows the terms of the bill very much better than I do, and he knows the attitude of the President much better than I do. I simply want to ask him if that bill as he proposes it is passed by the two Houses of Congress will the President sign it?

Mr. McCUMBER. I believe he will.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. That is all I wanted to know.

Mr. McCUMBER. I certainly believe he will.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator has just made the statement that the metropolitan papers had announced that there were $41,000,000,000 looking for investment.

Mr. McCUMBER. I left out the one; I said "$40,000,000,000" of credit.

Mr. CARAWAY. Well, we will drop the one, then, and say "forty billions." Why did not the Senator, then, write his bill so that the soldier might get his money, instead of requiring him to carry it for 20 years?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, when I come to that point I will explain why I did not. Let me explain it right now, briefly. When this matter was before the House those who represented the soldiers of the country preferred this insurance plan to the cash plan, and to-day and ever since it passed the House they have been urging and presenting before the soldiers of the country the benefits that would be derived from accepting the insurance plan rather than any cash plan.

Mr. CARAWAY. I was not talking about that. You are going to make the soldier carry a bond for 20 years. If he borrows money on it, you provide that he shall pay 2 per cent more than he gets, and he can only borrow 50 per cent of the face of it for three years, and then he may borrow more as the years go by. The Government could borrow the money at 3½ per cent or 4 per cent. Why not let the Government float the bonds and pay the money to the soldier who wants it?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, this bill, of course, is not just as I would have drawn it in the first instance; but there are 435 Members of the House to be considered, and there are 96 Members of the Senate to be considered, and then there is the President also to be considered, whenever we agree upon a bill. I am not going into its merits now. I rose simply in answer to the statement of the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and I desired to give a little of the history of the bill to indicate its present position and its present status, and the necessity, possibly, for following a certain course.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the answer which the Senator made to the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] is exceedingly interesting to me when he says that the President, he believes, will sign this bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. I certainly do.

Mr. BORAH. I take it that that belief is founded upon some facts and not merely upon the speculation of the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, it is not for me to try to ascertain just exactly what the President is going to do. I believe that he will sign the bill, as drawn, when it is passed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] a moment ago asked the able Senator from North Dakota, in effect, where the money was to come from, or whether the bonus bill provided for raising the revenue to meet the charges which the bonus will lay upon the Treasury. The Senator answered by inquiring whether the naval bill now under consideration contains provisions for levying a tax of nearly $400,000,000 to meet the appropriations carried in the bill. Evidently the inference that the Senator sought to convey was that no provision had been made for meeting the amount appropriated in the naval bill. The Senator knows that when the revenue bill was passed the Republican statesmen and leaders informed us that it would provide sufficient revenue to meet all legitimate expenses of the Government, including the amount necessary for the Navy. Was the Senator entirely fair if he attempted to convey the idea that we were appropriating money for the Navy and had made no provision for the taxes necessary to meet the appropriation?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, a little while ago we voted an appropriation of $20,000,000 to feed the starving Russians. Did we levy a tax? Was it mentioned at all in the expenses for that year? We have a bill now in the House that I think will provide for some twenty or thirty million dollars that will be paid in some way, by somebody, for a ship subsidy. No tax levy is provided on the American people, who in the end must pay it in some form. There is a bill carrying a number of millions of dollars for good roads. There is no levy of a special tax to meet that any more than there is a levy of a special tax to meet each and every one of the great appropriation bills.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an inquiry?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Our Republican friends at the beginning of the session indicated what the expenses for the year would be. A Budget Commission has been created and it is their duty to determine the approximate expenditures for the year. It is the duty of the party in power and the Finance Committee of the Senate and the Ways and Means Committee of the House to provide in advance the revenues necessary to meet the legitimate and current expenses of the Government. The presumption is that the Senator's party has sufficient common sense and statesmanship to have done that. I assume that they attempted to, although by their extravagance they have exceeded the revenues to the extent of more than $500,000,000, and it is now proposed to augment that amount perhaps by billions. There is no plan suggested to meet these added appropriations, which it would seem justifies the charge that statesmanship and courage are lacking in dealing with this question.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator a question?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes.

Mr. CARAWAY. Inasmuch as the President was perfectly willing, if there is no difference between these two obligations of the Government, that you should appropriate for the Navy and for the Russian relief and for the ship subsidy, why does he now insist that you shall levy a special tax to take care of the soldier when he does not want a special tax to take care of the others?

Mr. McCUMBER. I have stated that I can see no reason for it. If it was a very big obligation that had to be met in any one year, if it could not by any possibility be met without a levy of a further tax, then there might be something in the requirement for taxation to meet it. As the bill came before the Senate last year and the second year, I think, it required between seven and eight hundred million dollars. As it was then drawn, under the bill as it was then presented for the consideration of the Treasury Department and the President, there might have been some good reason for asking that special taxes be levied to meet its obligations. That does not hold good to-day.

Mr. CARAWAY. That is what I was trying to get clear in my mind. The Senator from North Dakota, then, is not in sympathy with the President's view that we should levy a special tax for this purpose?

Mr. McCUMBER. I am not. I do not think it is necessary.

Mr. CARAWAY. I am very glad to know it, because I agree with the Senator that we ought to pass this bill and not levy a special tax. I just wanted to know the Senator's position in the matter.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, if the Senate will indulge me for just a moment, I think, and I have thought right along, and I am strong in that conviction, that the party in power is obligated in good faith to bring this soldiers' compensation bill to a vote and to dispose of it during this session of the Congress. I think not only the Republican Party, because it is the party in power, is in duty bound to do that but I think in addition that the Congress is in duty bound to do that; and by "Congress" I mean both sides of the Chamber.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I do not disagree with the Senator that the bill ought to be brought to a vote. So far as I am concerned, just as soon as I can have time to express myself with regard to it I am ready to vote; and I think that the Senator is correct in saying that we should not dodge it any longer. It has been up here since 1920. If the soldiers were deserving of it, it should have been passed in 1920; and there is no reason for delaying it; and if the Senator is correct that the President is satisfied with this bill and is ready to sign it when it passes there is not any reason in the world why it should not come on next Monday and be disposed of. If the President has changed his mind and is ready to take the bill without any means therein for paying the bonus, then, of course, we can not hope to defeat it. I am ready, if that be true, to declare my views and vote and let the fearful mistake have an end, so far as Congress is concerned.

Mr. McCUMBER. Now, Mr. President, let us see. On April 18 a conference of Republicans was called to consider this question—both the tariff bill and the soldiers' compensation bill. On that day it was moved and carried that—

It is the sense of the conference that the Senate proceed without further delay with the consideration of the tariff bill, and it is the senses of this conference that the Senate should at this session—

Not at some other session, but at this session—

pass a soldiers' compensation bill, and that the Finance Committee be requested to report such a bill within a reasonable time.

In accordance with that, and on the 8th day of June, after there had been considerable discussion about the matter and the levy of taxes, and so forth, the Finance Committee, with some amendments of the House bill, reported it favorably to the Senate, and it is now on the calendar.

Mr. President, that was the declaration of the Republican Congress, that the compensation bill and the tariff bill should both be disposed of during this session.

The soldiers were satisfied with that declaration. They were assured by that declaration on the part of the party in power that action would be brought about during this session, and the bill was so drawn that any payments under it were not to take effect until after January 1, which would give us the length of any reasonably drawn-out session to dispose of both bills.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator said, on page 8371 of the RECORD of June 8, that inasmuch as it would take some six months to put the machinery of the soldiers' compensation bill into operation it should pass by July 1 if it is to go into effect January 1.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think it will take some time. May be it will not take the full six months, but it would be well to have the full six months' time.

Mr. ASHURST. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. McCUMBER. I stand by that statement. Lately a great many false statements have been published by that section of the press which is antagonistic to the soldiers' compensation bill. It is rumored and published that those who are opposed to the bill have such control of the situation that they will allow it to drag along until after the tariff bill is disposed of and then adjourn without any action being taken. Those on the other side of the Chamber can themselves respond to that statement. On the other hand, it is alleged that if we bring it up to-day or to-morrow or next week, it will be the occasion for a long filibuster upon the other side of the Chamber for the purpose of delaying the consideration of the tariff bill.

Mr. CARAWAY. Who ever said there would be a filibuster on this side?

Mr. McCUMBER. I say it is so reported.

Mr. CARAWAY. Who reported it?

Mr. McCUMBER. I am giving the Senator the statements which have been made.

Mr. CARAWAY. Who reported it?

Mr. McCUMBER. I am not going to say who.

Mr. CARAWAY. The Senator has no authority for that statement.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator stated it was rumored there would be a filibuster on this side against the soldiers' compensation bill.

Mr. McCUMBER. So as to delay the tariff bill.

Mr. ASHURST. I here and now knock that rumor in the head. I hope that such a rumor as that will no longer be circulated. If the Senator says it has been circulated, of course it has been. The Senator himself on June 8 announced that he would lay the tariff bill aside for two or three days so that the soldiers' bonus bill could be passed. There was a very large attendance; indeed, there were more Senators here that morning than are usually here. Not a Senator rose to declare that it would take longer than two or three days. It seemed to be agreed that it would take only three or four days, and while there are some Senators on this side who are conscientiously opposed to the compensation bill, I believe I will venture once into the domain of prophecy far enough to say that not one of them would speak over an hour against the bonus. Certainly they will not filibuster against it.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, we have been discussing the soldiers' compensation bill for about two years. I think we have discussed practically every feature of it, and if the Senators only desired to reexpress their views, we ought easily to dispose of it in two days, considering that we have taken up so much time on it.

Let me put this to the Senator: If the tariff bill should be temporarily laid aside, does the Senator believe that I could get a unanimous-consent agreement to vote upon the soldiers' compensation bill at the expiration of two days?

Mr. ASHURST. I would hardly say two, but I believe the Senator could get an agreement to vote at the expiration of four days of debate.

Mr. McCUMBER. Does the Senator believe I could get it at the expiration of three days?

Mr. ASHURST. I hardly think so. I would say that the Senator could in all probability get an agreement to vote after four days of debate.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me ask the junior Senator from Utah if he agrees with that?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I can not speak for anybody but myself. I think the Senator had better not make the request just now while other important bills are under consideration.

Mr. McCUMBER. In other words, the Senator intends to give a great deal of time to the discussion of the bill, does he not?

Mr. KING. We will cross that bridge when we reach it.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator would not consent to dispose of it in a week, would he?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am honored to have the distinguished leader upon the other side single me out——

Mr. McCUMBER. It is not my place to quiz the Senator, but I am trying to get at some idea as to whether there will be an unreasonable time taken in the discussion of the soldiers' compensation bill if we lay aside the tariff bill.

Mr. KING. Let me say to the Senator that we are considering a very important measure to-day, to wit, the naval appropriation bill. Upon the passage of that measure we will resume the consideration of the tariff bill, which, like the poor, is always with us, and it will make the people poorer when it passes. I think we ought to dispose of the tariff bill, and when that is out of the way, I am sure that the Senator, with his zeal for the soldiers, will press the consideration of the bonus bill, and when he makes his request the junior Senator from Utah will not hesitate to make such statements as he may wish to, and the situation demands.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator from Arizona is a stanch friend of a soldiers' compensation bill——

Mr. ASHURST. Not more so than 60 other Senators here.

Mr. McCUMBER. I know he is; but let me ask the Senator, in all good faith, if the statement just made by the junior Senator from Utah does not raise in his mind a little bit of a suspicion that the soldiers' compensation bill, if brought into the Senate, will be used to delay the tariff bill an unreasonable length of time?

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I do not think so, and, while I am in favor of the soldiers' bonus bill, I would look with severe disapprobation upon any unnecessary debate with a view to prolonging the tariff discussion. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], a master of debate, announced a few minutes ago that he wished only a few moments to refresh himself on the facts and that he would be ready to vote.

Mr. BORAH. Provided the President is satisfied with the bill.

Mr. ASHURST. I did not hear that proviso. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] speaks to the point; he wastes but few words. The Senator from North Dakota says the bonus bill has been discussed from all its angles. I fail to perceive, after the Senator from Utah shall have spoken for two hours, what more he could say except in the way of repetition.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator has not heard him speak if he has that kind of an opinion.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has achieved distinction at the bar as a lawyer in my State and in his own State, and his greatest arguments were made in 30 minutes. He must realize that after the first two hours he is only repeating himself, and I am sure he would not speak over two hours on the compensation bill. He would let us have a vote. I sincerely hope that my friend from Utah [Mr. KING] will announce that he is a candidate for reelection, as he deserves a place here; the American people need him here. I do not agree with his philosophy, politically, and I do not agree with many of his votes, but he is a useful Senator, and I am sure he would not be guilty of the impropriety, after talking two hours and exhausting his subject, of then talking for the mere purpose of hearing his words.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, the Senator from Utah is a man of great learning and great knowledge——

Mr. ASHURST. That is certainly true.

Mr. McCUMBER. And he can not express all he knows in two hours. I have heard the Senator from Utah very often. When he had spoken for two hours, and I thought he was getting near the amen part of his speech, he would go on for five or six hours longer, and then start in the next day, and the third day, and the fourth day. I am not so dead certain but that some such idea is lingering back in the cerebrum of the Senator now.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator from North Dakota is getting the better of this argument now because I am permitting him to get away from the main question. Why did he not think of all those things when he rose so proudly on the 8th of June and announced that within a few days he would move to lay aside the tariff bill, so that three or four days might be given to the soldiers' bonus bill? Why did not these great speeches which came from the Senator from Utah at that time affright and haunt the Senator from North Dakota? Why do those speeches now affright him?

Mr. McCUMBER. I did not believe at that time that he would do it, but I have my suspicion now that he will. Now let me close the argument.

Mr. ASHURST. I am sure the Senator must have known that. The Senator hardly gives himself the credit to which he is entitled. The Senator knew as much about the Senator from Utah on the 8th of June as he knows now.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, no; the Senator is mistaken. I am learning something new about the Senator from Utah every day.

Mr. ASHURST. That may be true, for the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] teaches many of us law, history, and fine rhetoric and fine courage.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I think the Senator from Arizona and myself stand upon the same ground so far as our desires and wishes as to the compensation bill are concerned. Of course, what is stated in the press before a Republican conference meets as to what it is going to do is always somewhat uncertain. Let me say to the Senator that I have read the resolution passed on the 18th day of April, which was satisfactory, as I stated, to the ex-soldiers, who are the beneficiaries. It was satisfactory generally to the friends of the adjusted compensation bill. It has been charged that the Republicans, as a party, would not keep faith. We will understand, and understand definitely, upon meeting, if we have a meeting Monday, whether or not we are going to keep faith. I believe we will. The Senator knows that I have both these bills in charge, or at least I have had, and it is my duty to put the tariff bill through, as chairman of the committee. It is also my duty to see that the other bill goes through. I intend to see that it does go through, and that there will be no adjournment of the present session of Congress before it goes through. These New York papers can pin that to the headlines of their articles and give it to the public and stop their quibbling about this matter.

Mr. ASHURST. There is no Senator here who is such a wayfarer, such a "babe in the woods," that he fails to know that the Senator from North Dakota is in charge of both bills. That was the reason why I propounded the question to him. I prefer that he shall remain in charge, and he is going to remain in charge. All the information I desired was to know whether the language attributed to the Senator from North Dakota, which was found in the New York World of yesterday, was correct or was incorrect.

Mr. McCUMBER. I have stated nothing for the press or anyone else about the action of the Senate. It is true that the Republicans are going to take different views upon this question. There are some opposed to the measure. But if we can work in harmony and at the same time absolutely and unquestionably provide that the bill is to go through, that is all we care about, and if there is any slacking in that matter the Senator will have the opportunity to present his motion.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, we have been engaged now for some two hours in the discussion of this matter. It would probably enable some of us to make our plans for the balance of the day if we could know how much longer it will take the Senator from Arizona and the Senator from North Dakota to express their views upon the subject.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator from Washington a question? A great deal has been said about the displacing of any important measure, but there is one matter on which some of us wish to vote. There is an amendment to the naval appropriation bill which I wish to discuss. It is now 3 o'clock on Saturday afternoon. Does the Senator think we ought to be compelled to go ahead with that discussion this afternoon? We have been in session since 11 o'clock. I am not going to ask to pass over the question, but it is not quite proper to bring Senators here at 11 o'clock to hear a particular matter and keep them here for four hours in this way.

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; I do not think it is; but I am not responsible for it. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCKINLEY] precipitated all this debate by introducing two short paragraphs from a letter he had received. I think in view of the short period of time that is to intervene between now and the first of the next fiscal year that we ought to try to make a little further progress on the appropriation bill this afternoon.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I want to apologize to the Senator from Washington; but I felt under the circumstances of the statement that had been made by the Senator from Arizona, which really called upon me for some assumed explanation, that in order that there might be no possibility of any mistake I would answer it, and answer it briefly. But, of course, as one question after another was fired at me, I have necessarily taken considerably longer time than I anticipated. I thank the Senator for his indulgence in allowing me to take so much time.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota yield to me?

Mr. McCUMBER. I have concluded.

Mr. ASHURST. I first thank the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] for his patient indulgence. He has indicated that he would like to have this colloquy stopped, and even a gesture from him I accept and adopt. So I will conclude by again asking the Senator from North Dakota, so that there may be no misunderstanding, if this statement is correct in the New York World of the 16th, from which I read as follows:

> Following a conference with the President early to-day, Senator LODGE took to the Capitol word that Mr. Harding under no circumstances will permit sidetracking the tariff measure to consider the bonus bill.
> Receiving the news calmly, Senator MCCUMBER promptly announced that President or no President, he will make his motion to take up the bonus bill next Monday.

Mr. McCUMBER. No. I made no such statement. There is no conflict between myself and other Republicans except, possibly, those who are opposed to the adjusted compensation bill. I am in favor of its going through at this session, and in sufficient time to dispose of it and get it in operation by the 1st day of January. If we do that and get both bills through, I shall be satisfied.

Mr. ASHURST. Then, there will be a conference on Monday morning of the majority Members, at which the policy will be determined as to whether or not the tariff bill should be laid aside, and then we will have due notice. Is that true?

Mr. McCUMBER. I assume that is what it is called for. I did not call the conference myself.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota read a resolution passed by the Republican conference and referred to it as a pledge upon the part of the conference. Of course, it is not necessary here to go into a discussion of the import or purport of a resolution of that kind, but it may not be understood throughout the country. Whatever may be the effect of that kind of a resolution upon the party as a whole, it does not bind the individual Members of the Senate and is not binding upon me or anyone else individually.

Mr. McCUMBER. I do not think I used the word "pledge."

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I think the Senator did.

Mr. McCUMBER. If so, I used it unintentionally.

Mr. BORAH. The resolution would seem to put those of us who are opposed to the bonus in a false position if it were to be assumed throughout the country that we went into conference and voted ourselves to support the proposition and then came out upon the floor and opposed it. I was not present at the conference, but even if I had been, a Republican conference does not bind individual Members, so far as I am concerned at least.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I want to comment briefly on the subject under discussion. It seems to me it is time for us to be honest and frank with our war veterans and the friends of this so-called bonus bill and stop deceiving them. Our veterans deserve at least this consideration. What are the facts? The adjusted compensation problem has been before the Congress for over three years. Two compensation bills have at different times passed the House by an overwhelming vote. The House bill has been before the Senate since May, 1920. The Senate Finance Committee has three times reported favorably a veterans' compensation bill. Why are we unable to get action by the Senate? It is because of one of two reasons: Either that a minority are able to control action and block legislation here and make the majority votes impotent or there is not a majority honestly in favor of this legislation.

I want to say, in order that the country may know the exact situation, that there is in this body a group of Senators, who are a minority, honestly and sincerely for the bill; that there is another group, a minority, honestly opposed to this legislation; but there is a majority who are neither for nor against this bill and are dodging and delaying action in order to avoid going on record.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Please wait until I finish my remarks.

The country respects those who are for this measure. The soldiers, their friends, and supporters will know before this fight is over which Senators are sincerely and really believers in the justice of this legislation. The country will and should respect those who are opposed to it. But to say that there is a majority in favor, honestly and sincerely in favor, of such legislation, and then to allow this bill to be kicked around like a football as it has been, postponed, recommitted, delayed, declaration after declaration made by the Senator in charge of the bill that he intends to bring it up on a certain day that never comes, is not the truth. What does it mean?

If there is a majority for this legislation, it means that a majority of this body are unable to get legislation they favor. The criticism of the Congress and of this body, widespread through the country, is just this—that the people can not get action here; that our people can not get a final judgment in this tribunal. If it were a court of law, and after due time for reasonable debate the people could not get a judgment, they would rise up in rebellion against their courts. What is this body but the general court where disputed and controversial matters that can not be adjudicated in the courts of law must be settled for the people?

Here it is delay, inaction, postponement, ceaseless debate, words, words, words, and no votes. How long do you think our people are going to remain silent and permit their legislative bodies to become merely groups of representatives who become famous for their windjamming propensities?

Mr. President, it is a pretty serious situation. Let us attend to and expedite the people's business. Let us not have a measure of this importance passed twice in one House of the Congress, reported three times by the Finance Committee of the Senate, and now at this late day proceed to postpone it once more—proceed to defeat it by indirect methods. The truth is that the majority here will not allow the roll to be called. The truth is that there are Senators here who pretend to be for the bill, who say they are for the bill, but who are secretly doing everything they can to postpone and delay and defeat it without showing their opposition. All honor to the men who have the courage of their convictions and who stand up and say they do not believe in this principle. But what shall we say of the men who are afraid to have a roll call on the merits of this question and take their position openly? I repeat, what is the only frank explanation? You say a majority are not for this bill? A majority pretend to be for it. A majority tell the press they are for it. A majority tell their constituents they are for it, but secretly and privately a majority want the day of reckoning postponed, and are willing to agree to any trick and to any understanding or to any postponement that will kill the bill.

Mr. President, I thought it only fair to say to the soldiers and those interested in compensating our veterans what the real, honest, truthful situation is. There are not a majority of this body sincerely and honestly in favor of such legislation. I say that as a friend of the measure, who believes it is justice and who will continue to fight for its adoption till the end. But the great majority of this body do not want to take their position and do not intend, if they can help it by postponement and delay, to go on record and say that they oppose this legislation. Let us get through with deception; let us come out in the open and vote our convictions and end this delaying, postponing, and camouflaging.

Mr. KING subsequently said: Mr. President, I tried to get the floor some time ago, after the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] had spoken, to state that the only suggestion I have heard of a filibuster with respect to the bonus bill came from the Senator from North Dakota. I never heard it mentioned except by the Senator. There is no such purpose, so far as I have ever heard, and I think it must have originated in the imagination of the distinguished Senator from North Dakota. When the tariff bill is out of the way, undoubtedly the bonus bill will be taken up, and after reasonable discussion I have no doubt it will be submitted to a vote of the Senate.

INTERNAL REVENUE COURT OF APPEALS.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, this seems to be a sort of a general field day, and I want to beg the indulgence of the Senate for not to exceed five minutes on another matter. I would not do it except for the great importance of the measure, as I see it.

Early in this session I introduced a bill to establish a United States Court of Appeals on internal revenue questions. The bill was fashioned after the United States Court of Customs Appeals. I felt it very necessary because, while the United States Court of Customs Appeals passes upon questions which arise out of the collection of revenues amounting to probably $300,000,000 a year, the Internal Revenue Department passes upon revenue claims aggregating $3,000,000,000 to $5,000,000,000 a year. I felt that there ought to be some way whereby there can be an adjudication of those tax matters where the taxpayers will feel that they are getting a square deal.

I am calling attention to this subject now because of a letter received by me from Mr. Ernest F. Du Brul, who is the general manager of the National Machine Tool Builders' Association, of Cincinnati. I wish to read a paragraph from the letter:

> I am informed, for instance, that in determining salary allowances the tax unit—

This is, with reference to the Internal Revenue Bureau—

> I am informed, for instance, that in determining salary allowances the tax unit has made different formulæ apply to different classes of business, and that there are three different formulæ used on each class, and that the instructions to the examiners, or whatever they call the examining officers, are to use that formula of the three which will provide substantial justice to both the taxpayer and the Government. But the taxpayer can never find out, unless some tax department man "leaks," what the three formulæ are for his industry, and which particular one of the three was applied in his particular case.
> The conclusion is that one examiner might allow one competitor, we will say, a certain salary under one of the three formulæ, and another examiner might allow another competitor quite a larger or smaller salary for the same condition of business. On the other hand, the instructions to the unit might be taken to mean that formula which will give the Government the most money, and perhaps that is the most common practice.

This gentleman wrote to the Secretary of the Treasury on this subject on February 9, as follows:

> I wonder if the attention of the administration of the Treasury has ever been drawn to the fact that the Internal Revenue Bureau uses some confidential formulæ for determining different things in figuring income-tax returns. Such formulæ, though used for the public's business, have never been made public. The consequence of this is that the taxpayers are frequently at a loss to know what they should, and in many cases are penalized without knowing why they should be penalized.
> Men have been assessed additional taxes by the use of such secret formulæ on the ground that salaries were excessive. Others have been told that in the determination of relief there were secret formulæ used by the department and that it was against the rules of the department to give out these formulæ. I have also been told that some formulæ are used in the amortization section, which are not available to the taxpayer, but according to which his claim is passed upon.
> If the revenue bureau is not to be a bureaucratic institution, operating on arbitrary rules, there could appear to be no harm in divulging to the public all the formulæ that the bureau uses in these determinations. Brought out into the open the taxpayer could see how fair they are or how unfair they are. Surely public business ought not to require secrecy in this. Why should not the public be advised of the formulæ used by the bureau in determining reasonable salaries, relief basis, amortization, and similar essential things? As it stands now the taxpayer who happens to hit on the right combination gets much more equitable treatment than the one who is penalized through lack of such a happy accident in his case.
> Very truly yours,
> (Signed) E. F. DU BRUL,
> General Manager.

The Secretary of the Treasury answered on February 17 as follows:

> SIR: I have your letter of February 9, stating that the Bureau of Internal Revenue applies confidential formulæ in arriving at salary deductions, in granting relief under special sections of the law, and in settling other questions in connection with the determination of income and profits taxes, and you ask that such formulæ be made public, in order that taxpayers themselves may know whether or not they are being treated fairly.
> This office fully appreciates your position in this matter, but it is believed that an understanding of the conditions will justify the refusal to make the various items public. The comparatives used by the bureau are drawn from the returns filed by other taxpayers, and it would be contrary to the provisions of the law if the figures and facts were made public. There is, however, no "hit or miss" application of the comparatives, and you may be assured that the adjustments in income and invested capital are always made upon the basis of principles defensible under the various provisions of the taxing laws.
> Yours very truly,
> (Signed) A. W. MELLON,
> Secretary.

It is conceded by the Secretary of the Treasury that the department have certain formulæ by which they determine what amount of salary shall be allowed in fixing the amount of the earnings which are subject to the tax. Mr. Du Brul on February 24, 1922, again writes to the Secretary of the Treasury. His letter is as follows:

> I thank you for your letter of February 17. It is difficult to understand, however, how the publication of the formulæ can possibly prejudice the interest of any taxpayer whose returns are on file. The formulæ certainly do not divulge the names of the taxpayers from whose returns the comparatives are drawn; nor do the formulæ themselves contain any such figures that would enable anyone to identify the returns, judging from what I have been given to understand.

It is very puzzling, therefore, to a taxpayer to be told that, according to the formulæ, his salary is too high, for instance, and the department therefore reduces his salary allowance on his return. This becomes, it seems to me, entirely too liable to degenerate into arbitrary and autocratic rulings. How can the taxpayer know that they are not autocratic? He only has the word of the department to that effect. How can he know that the formula is applied, or not applied, in his case, when he can not check the statement of the department? How could students of taxation, outside of the department, who have no personal interest in the case, even discuss the reasonableness of the basis for the formulæ? These are questions that naturally occur to anyone.

A mere statement from the department that these formulæ are all right and should be taken on faith by the taxpayer is very far from satisfactory. Much of the taxpayer's difficulty may be due to misapprehension; but it would seem that more open administration would assist in reassuring the taxpayer and make the administration of the tax laws on decidedly easier bases. It might also thereby reduce the number of employees around the revenue department. It might be to the interest of some of the employees to be as secretive as they can, as their interest might be confined to holding their jobs; and then again, it might be something else. In any case, it is puzzling to the taxpayer, to say the least.

Senators, just think of the situation! These taxes are supposed to be paid in accordance with a law which is supposed to do equal and exact justice. The Internal Revenue Bureau, no doubt, has the right to formulate certain rules which will expedite the business of the department; but, under the law as it now is, when it comes to a determination of the amount of the taxable income of a company or a corporation or the excess profits tax, certain salaries are allowed to be deducted. The question arises as to whether the salaries paid by the corporation are larger than they ought to be. There ought to be some rule about the matter. The Internal Revenue Bureau have adopted three certain formulæ by which they measure these salaries and determine whether or not they are excessive; but when the taxpayer asks what these rules are they are refused the privilege of even seeing them. They do not know what they are; there is a secrecy about the administration of that bureau which discredits it and discredits the entire Treasury Department. Mr. President, can anyone say whether there has been a proper allowance or not? Can any court determine whether the rules which have been formulated by the Internal Revenue Bureau are equitable or not? Oh, no; the formulæ are kept secret in the archives of the Internal Revenue Bureau.

It seems to me if there ever was a real reason for the organization of a United States court of internal revenue appeals, these letters show the necessity of it. I do not care who the taxpayer is, he has a right speedily to have an adjudication by a proper court; the United States Government, the Treasury Department, if you please, has a right to have an adjudication if the question is contested; but such adjudication should be in conformity with the rules of law and it should not be determined by secret formulæ which may obtain for the time being in the Internal Revenue Bureau, to be changed at the sweet will of the Commissioner of Internal Revenue or the Treasury Department.

I am not concerned as to whether or not the bill which I have introduced is passed. It may be that the United States Court of Customs Appeals, if it had the jurisdiction conferred upon it, would be able to take care of that kind of business; but I am sure Senators will agree with me that it is simply monstrous to have some clerk in the Internal Revenue Bureau determine the amount of taxes which a corporation or a partnership or an individual must pay, measured by reason of certain secret formulæ. I am sorry to have occupied this much of the time of the Senate, but I have felt that it was necessary that I should do so.

SUGGESTED REMOVALS OF TREASURY DEPARTMENT EMPLOYEES.

Mr. CARAWAY. Mr. President, yesterday I had occasion to comment upon an article which appeared in a newspaper stating that there is a movement on foot to have certain employees in the Treasury Department removed because they are Democrats. Mr. Mellon replied to the appeal which was presented to him, and I ask unanimous consent to have the article printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Baltimore Sun, June 17, 1922.]

MELLON SCORES DRIVE OF G. O. P. UPON TREASURY—DECLARES STATEMENTS IN PETITION TO HARDING ARE RIDICULOUS—DENIES DEMOCRATS HOLD BEST PLACES—SENATOR CARAWAY DECLARES CABINET OFFICIAL IS SLATED "TO GO."

[From the Sun Bureau.]

WASHINGTON, June 16.—The prolonged row over the Treasury Department patronage assumed sensational proportions to-day. Following a bold renewal of the drive of Republican Members of Congress for places in the Treasury, these developments took place:

Secretary of the Treasury Mellon attacked the raiders in perhaps the most vigorous statement made by him since taking office, saying that statements made to the President were false.

Undersecretary S. P. Gilbert, one of the Republican holdovers from the Wilson administration and under fire of the raiders, threw a broadside into the ranks on his own account.

FORESEES MELLON'S OUSTING.

Senator CARAWAY, Democrat, declared in the Senate that Secretary Mellon is slated "to go," and charged that one of the men promoted by President Harding in the Bureau of Engraving shake-up had debauched a girl 15 years old, as shown by court records.

All of this followed hard upon the publication this morning in the Washington Post, an administration organ, of an account of 150 Republican Members of Congress having prepared a petition to President Harding asking that Republicans be placed in key positions in the Treasury, which they alleged are now occupied by Democrats.

In the petition they alleged that the public interest suffers because of this alleged condition and that Democratic officeholders are reporting to officials of the last administration. Joseph P. Tumulty is supposed to be the principal ex-official objected to by the Republican Members of Congress.

This petition specified a large number of key positions, alleged to be held by Democrats, and gave some details as to many of them and the incumbents. From sources close to the administration a statement was obtained to-night dealing in detail with a considerable number of the officials mentioned and showing that statements made in the petition to the President were false.

PRESIDENT IS SILENT.

All eyes in Washington turned to the White House to-day to see how Mr. Harding would react to the petition. He was silent. He has been standing behind Secretary Mellon during the latter's opposition to the raiders, but there has been a widespread belief in Washington that he personally had much sympathy with the Republican job seekers.

But at the very hour Mr. Harding was maintaining silence, except to say that he had got the petition from the Republican Members, the counterattack was getting fully under way. Word reached the White House while the reporters were there that Secretary Mellon's statement was out. It follows:

RIDICULOUS, MELLON SAYS.

"Through the courtesy of various Republican Senators and Congressmen, I have had brought to my attention a statement circulated among Members of Congress which bears the title: 'The Treasury Department—Survey of the personnel of the Bureau of Internal Revenue. The key positions largely held by officials of a former administration and named and checked from the official records of the department.'

"This statement is so false and for the most part so ridiculous that in ordinary circumstances I should hesitate to take notice of it. It is, however, being circulated and has been published, so that I think it well to set the record straight. The statement is the product of a few selfishly ambitious employees and some discredited former employees, and is apparently being circulated in an effort to influence the administration of the Treasury.

TOO IMPORTANT FOR POLITICS.

"The affairs of the Treasury are of too great importance to allow of interference to its proper conduct through the introduction of petty politics. The department, particularly the collection of the revenues and the handling of the public debt, must be conducted on business principles and kept free at all times from detrimental influences. The administration of the Treasury is in the hands of Republicans and is governed by Republican policies. Those Democrats who hold positions in the Treasury have been retained because of their qualifications for the offices they hold, and I have had no evidence of partisan activity on their part."

Senator CARAWAY'S speech was made about the same time the Mellon statement was issued.

CARAWAY ATTACKS G. O. P. DRIVE.

Referring to the article in the Post, Senator CARAWAY described it as speaking with authority for the administration.

"It deals," he said, "with a desire entertained by a great number of Republicans to have patronage. It says that a petition, signed by 150 Republican Members of the House, is to-day to be presented to the President, demanding that about 150 employees in the Treasury Department shall be displaced because they are Democrats and that Republicans be given their positions. It is true that by insinuation it is charged that these Democrats are disloyal; that they report to certain former officials of the Wilson administration. What they shall have to report is not disclosed, but the fact is disclosed that their jobs are wanted, and wanted for political reasons.

"Everybody knew that the President when he removed a number of employees from the Bureau of Engraving that good jobs would be open to those indorsed by the organization. It made no difference if faithful employees were discharged, their reputations blackened and the opportunity to earn an honest living taken from them. The faithful had to have the jobs and the faithful got them.

"One man was promoted to the place of a man who was dismissed from the service in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, and the day he got his place, and with a full knowledge of conditions, his wife received a decree against him for the most heinous offenses that could be charged against a man. I have his letter here, a court record, showing that he not only had debauched a 15-year-old girl but was trying to arrange to have a criminal operation performed upon her.

"There is his letter. It is a court record. It was a matter of public information, and yet an honest man was kicked out of office to reward this man. He is the man who is now custodian of rolls, dies, and plates in the Bureau of Engraving and Printing. He took the place of Mr. Ashburn.

SEES BRIEF TENURE FOR MELLON.

"It is a public scandal, an infamous outrage. But I am not criticizing the President overmuch. He was hard ridden by the people who wanted places, and Mr. Mellon might just as well realize now as to know it to-morrow that he has to go out of the Treasury Department. His tenure is brief, indeed, because his ideas are so diametrically opposed to those of Elmer Dover, trained up under the old school of Mark Hanna, the man who invented the 'blocks of five.'"

GILBERT BRANDS FALSEHOOD.

Undersecretary Gilbert's letter follows:

Hon. JAMES T. BEGG,
House of Representatives, Washington, D. C.

SIR: Through the courtesy of various Republican Senators and Congressmen I have had brought to my attention a statement entitled "The Treasury Department—Survey and personnel of the Bureau of Internal Revenue. The key positions largely held by officials of a former administration, and named and checked from the official records of the department," which is being circulated in envelopes bearing your frank.

Item 1 of this statement, under the heading "Personnel of Secretary Mellon's office," contains the following paragraph:

"1. Mr. Paul Gilbert, active Democratic politician, taking the stump for Governor Cox in the campaign of 1920. At present holding the position of Undersecretary of the Treasury."

I do not know Mr. Paul Gilbert, but I assume from the context that the item may have reference to me. The statement is of no concern whatever to me; but I should like to state for your own information that if it does refer to me it is absolutely false in every respect. Since you are lending your name to its circulation, you may possibly be interested in the facts.

LIFELONG REPUBLICAN.

I am not a Democrat. I am not a politician and have never been active in politics. I did not take the stump in 1920 for Mr. Cox and had no interest whatever in his campaign. I am a lifelong Republican, have never voted anything but the Republican ticket, and my father was for 30 years one of the most active Republican leaders in the State of New Jersey. I was appointed Assistant Secretary of the Treasury by President Wilson in 1920 as a Republican, was reappointed by President Harding in March, 1921, and subsequently appointed Undersecretary of the Treasury by Mellon in June, 1921.

I should have thought that before you permitted ignorant libels to circulate under your name you would first have made at least some effort to ascertain the facts.

Respectfully, S. P. GILBERT, Jr.

REPUBLICANS LISTED AS DEMOCRATS.

The statement obtained from sources close to the Treasury shows that the following men, listed as Democrats in the petition presented to President Harding, are actually Republicans:

Paul Gilbert, Undersecretary.

C. P. Smith, Assistant Commissioner of Internal Revenue.

A. G. Maddox.

Solicitor's office: Charles A. Barnard, Chester A. Bennett, Malcolm A. Coles, Newton K. Fox, J. C. Halls, Carl A. Mapes, Mark J. Ryan, J. K. Smith, Stanley S. Waite, James C. Rogers, George N. Mardock, Russell D. Burchard, and J. J. Cosprove.

Administration division: C. B. Allen, F. M. Woodward, A. B. Neise, and William T. Sherwood.

Stamp division: B. S. Hunsinger, K. F. Erickson, W. B. Himman, E. C. Wilcox, W. W. Hubert, and J. W. Beers.

Miscellaneous list: Elmer L. Irey, chief intelligence unit; D. S. Bliss, chief miscellaneous division; field division, income tax unit, C. M. Justice and John L. McGrew.

Income tax unit: E. H. Batson, deputy commissioner; E. W. Chatterton, assistant deputy commissioner; F. R. Clute, J. L. McGrew, W. T. Sherwood, W. P. Bird, S. T. Delamater, H. C. Armstrong, and F. Guderian.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11228) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

Mr. NEWBERRY. Mr. President, is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE] pending?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. TOWNSEND in the chair). It is. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE], which will be stated.

The READING CLERK. Under the head of "Bureau of Yards and Docks, maintenance," on page 46, line 21, after the word "stations," it is proposed to strike out "$5,500,000" and in lieu thereof to insert "$6,125,000."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill if this matter was not fully considered by the House committee as well as by the Senate committee, and whether, after full consideration, a unanimous agreement was not reached fixing the sum of this appropriation at $5,500,000?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; I will say to the Senator from Utah that there was not a unanimous-consent agreement reached—that is, except in so far as the bill, of course, in its final form was unanimously reported. There were several members of the subcommittee who felt that the amount allowed by the other House, which had not been increased at all despite the increase of the personnel of the Navy, ought to be somewhat enlarged. It was a matter of some doubt in the minds of the committee. The amount provided under this head for the current year is $7,500,000. That is $2,000,000 less than the amount reported by the committee and carried in this bill at the present time. The reduced amount that was insisted upon by the Navy Department as being absolutely essential was $6,750,000. The amount allowed by the committee was $5,500,000; and I repeat that there was no increase either in the House of Representatives or in the Senate committee. If the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts should be adopted, it would make the appropriation $6,125,000, which would be $1,375,000 less than the amount appropriated for the current year, and would be $625,000 less than the amount which the department insists upon as the minimum amount which it can get along with.

After conference with members of the committee, I have no objection to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts, with the understanding that it will be subject to consideration, and probably to adjustment, in conference.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not think the committee is always safe in following the demands of the Navy or of the other executive departments. If that were true, we would be called upon to appropriate about double the income of the Government. If we take the aggregate demands of all of the departments of the Government, we will find that they have usually exceeded the income of the Government in the ratio of 2 to 1.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, if the Senator will allow me——

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. LODGE. The amount stated by the Senator from Washington was the Budget recommendation. The department estimated $7,500,000, and this is cut below the Budget estimate.

Mr. KING. May I say to the Senator from Massachusetts that in nearly every instance, so far as I now recall, we have cut below the Budget recommendation. We have not had such supreme confidence——

Mr. LODGE. Oh, I did not mean to suggest that we were bound by the Budget, nor are we bound by the report of a committee, either of the House or of the Senate.

Mr. KING. I agree with the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. Of course, it is before both bodies.

Mr. KING. To be sure.

Mr. LODGE. And I happen to be a member of the Naval Affairs Committee, although I am not on the Appropriations Subcommittee.

Mr. KING. I happen to be a member of the Naval Affairs Committee myself——

Mr. LODGE. I know it.

Mr. KING. And I am not a member of the Appropriations Committee. The point I was getting at is that the Navy Department makes many recommendations for appropriations which neither the House nor the Senate accepts.

Mr. POINDEXTER. This amount, with the increase proposed by the Senator from Massachusetts, even though that should be finally agreed upon, would be $625,000 less than the amount recommended by the Navy Department and insisted on by the department.

Mr. KING. Yes; I understand. The Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] put into the RECORD yesterday—and it may be found on pages 8863 to 8866, inclusive—a list of the establishments maintained by the Navy. They aggregate more than 400. It is true that a considerable proportion of this great number consists of radio stations, but an examination of this rather formidable list will furnish convincing proof that the Navy ought to do some pruning. We ought to get rid of a large number of these establishments. This appropriation which is sought, and which it is proposed to increase, will be in part devoted to the maintenance of scores and scores of these needless establishments.

Mr. LODGE. This appropriation is confined to yards and docks.

Mr. KING. I think that is true; yes. Of course, the yards and docks are embraced within this list.

Mr. LODGE. Oh, they are embraced in that list, of course. There are a great many things in that list that yards and docks have nothing to do with.

Mr. KING. Oh, I understand that. I stated that there were more than 400 of these establishments maintained by the Navy, a large portion of which were radio stations; but this illustrates the situation that we find in the Army. Following the war there were scores, if not hundreds, of Army posts and stations, and so forth. It is time that the Navy made disposition of a large number of these; and it seems to me unwise and impolitic and unfair to the taxpayers of the country to keep up this large establishment, making these large appropriations in order to repair the machinery and the buildings, the yards and docks, and so forth, which are unnecessary.

I wish the committee would append to this bill an amendment requiring the Navy Department to get rid of all these surplus establishments and yards; and I think we could do no better service than to appoint a committee to make an investigation with a view to cutting out all of these useless and unnecessary establishments.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, my impression is that the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK] proposes to bring up such a provision as that in connection with the legislative bill that is pending in the Naval Affairs Committee.

Mr. KING. I sincerely hope the Senator will do that.

I do not think this appropriation is necessary. The House committee acted upon it, and I am entirely satisfied with the action which they took.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The READING CLERK. On page 66, at the end of line 14, it is proposed to insert the following:

That the naval appropriation act approved June 4, 1920, is hereby amended so that any chaplain in the Naval Reserve Force who was more than 50 years of age on the date of said act, and who now holds the confirmed rank of commander, may be transferred to and appointed in the same permanent grade and rank in the regular Navy, not in the line of promotion and not eligible for retirement: Provided, That any chaplain transferred to the regular Navy in accordance with this authorization shall be wholly retired without pay upon attaining the age of 64 years or becoming physically incapacitated for active duty: Provided further, That nothing contained in this act shall operate to increase the number of chaplains with the rank of commander as now authorized by law.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, reserving the point of order, I should like to hear from the chairman of the committee in respect to that legislation, as well as from the Senator offering it.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I simply want to say a word in regard to this amendment which I have proposed, to come in, as I have provided, at the end of the bill.

This amendment pertains simply to two chaplains in the Navy—not more than two—and the amendment as offered is exactly the same as section 3 of a bill which passed the House on June 3, 1922; but because of the fact that on the 1st of July these two chaplains will be on the inactive list and have the inactive status, it is very necessary that the relief provided in this amendment be granted in this bill if it is to be granted at all.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from South Dakota yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. STERLING. I yield.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think, in view of the fact that it involves no expense to the Government and will retain in the service for a limited period of time a very efficient chaplain, the proposition is a meritorious one.

I offer the amendment which I send to the desk to the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota, which will have the effect, if adopted, of giving promotion of one grade to two Supply Corps officers who were entitled to promotion under the law prior to July 1, 1918, by reason of seniority—men who served in the Spanish-American War, men who served throughout the late war in the rank which is provided there and have honorable records.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment offered by the Senator from Washington to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota will be stated.

The READING CLERK. It is proposed to add, at the end of the amendment proposed by the Senator from South Dakota, the following:

Provided further, That officers of the Supply Corps, United States Navy, who have served in the temporary rank of commander for a period of more than four years shall be regarded as having been promoted to the permanent rank of commander in the Supply Corps, United States Navy, with rank as such immediately after the officer whose date of entry into the Supply Corps, United States Navy, was June 9, 1899.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I raise the point of order against that legislation.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is the Senator advised as to the effect of it? I trust that he will not insist on the point of order.

Mr. KING. There have been so many amendments offered in the past, as I am told, and the Senator is familiar with it, which changed grades and ranks, and so forth, and which have done rank injustice—officers have complained to me of the fact that that has been done—that it seems to me that on appropriation bills it is unwise to provide for changes in grade or rank.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, I hope the Senator from Utah will not persist in making the point of order against this proposed amendment. I want to say that it is a most meritorious thing. Here is Chaplain Niver, one of the chaplains affected, at Quantico, one of the best men I ever knew for a position of that kind. He is devoted to the men, and they are devoted to him. He has a wholesome influence upon the men. His term will expire on the 1st of July. That is, he will go to the inactive list at that time; and the proposition involved in the amendment is to keep him in the service until he reaches the retirement age. It does not add one dollar to the appropriations for the naval service, and there are the vacancies in the regular Navy, to which he will be assigned on this transfer, to be filled. It adds no official at all. It does not add any appropriation. It is recommended by the Secretary of the Navy. It applies only to the two chaplains.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I did not urge the point of order against the Senator's amendment, although I reserved it with a view to understanding just the significance of it. I should like to inquire of the Senator why this chaplain may not be utilized in his present position after the date indicated?

Mr. STERLING. That is because, I think, of the naval appropriation act of 1920, which puts him, having passed the age of 50 years, in an inactive status at that time.

Mr. KING. May he not, when he is on the inactive list, be assigned to duty?

Mr. STERLING. I think not.

Mr. KING. I should like to inquire of the Senator from Washington if the law forbids that?

Mr. POINDEXTER. No; that was the law which limited transfer to the regular service to chaplains of 45 years or less. This fixes the age at 54 years, which would apply only to one case, as I understand—a chaplain of very great efficiency and usefulness in the Navy, as stated by the Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. STERLING. There are two instead of one. John Jay Brokenshire is one of these chaplains, and Edwin Barnes Niver, at Quantico, is the other of the two chaplains.

Mr. President, in connection with my remarks I ask to have printed the letter of the Secretary of the Navy and the records of these two chaplains.

There being no objection, the matter referred to was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE NAVY,
Washington, July 15, 1921.

The CHAIRMAN COMMITTEE ON NAVAL AFFAIRS,
House of Representatives.

MY DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: Replying further to the committee's letter of June 23, 1921, inclosing a bill (H. R. 7264) providing for transfer to the regular Navy of certain chaplains of the Naval Reserve Force, and requesting an expression of my views thereon, and also your letter of July 13, 1921, requesting positive information as to the number of chaplains covered by said bill, I have the honor to inform you that a careful investigation of the records discloses that the provisions of the proposed bill as now drawn will make only two chaplains now in the Naval Reserve Force eligible for transfer to the regular Navy. These two chaplains are John J. Brokenshire and Edwin B. Niver, both of whom were over 50 years of age on June 4, 1920, the date of the approval of the naval appropriation act for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1921, and who now hold the confirmed rank of commander in the United States Naval Reserve Force.

While it is the general policy of the department not to recommend the passage of legislation which is individual in character, the two cases covered by the bill (H. R. 7264) have considerable merit and, therefore, if in the exercise of its judgment your committee takes favorable action on said bill the same will meet with the approval of the department.

Sincerely yours,

EDWIN DENBY,
Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. KING. I raised a point of order against the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington. I will be glad to get the Senator's explanation of the amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I had practically stated the circumstances connected with it. It would have the effect, as stated, of providing that officers of the reserve, in the grade of commander for four years, may be appointed to certain grades in the same branch of the permanent service or be considered as being so appointed. The effect of it would be to make commanders in the Supply Corps of two officers who served in that rank throughout the war, who came into the Navy during the Spanish War, served in the Navy during the Spanish War, have very efficient and highly honorable records, and were entitled to promotion to permanent grades, under the law, prior to July 1, 1918, at which time the so-called selection board process was instituted in the Navy.

Prior to that time these men would have been appointed commanders, by reason of their seniority, if they had received their examination at the time when they were eligible for the promotion. But, as pointed out by the Navy Department in another case, due to the exigencies of the service and the distance of the officers from the department, they were not given the opportunity to take the examinations and get the promotion under the law which entitled them to it at that time. This would remedy that failure of the department to give them the examinations which they should have had in order to get the promotion of one grade.

Mr. KING. The Senator knows that many complaints are urged that promotions are improperly made by amendments to general appropriation bills. Many naval officers have complained to me of the slipshod methods, as they denominate them, by which, in the hurry of debate and in the hurried consideration of appropriation bills, amendments are slipped through which affect the grades and the promotions and the rank of one or many officers in the Navy. I am sure the Senator has had his attention challenged to the evil resulting from this sort of legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In so far as I am personally concerned, I have made but two recommendations of this kind, because I believe that the principle stated by the Senator from Utah is an excellent one; but there are certain exceptions to all rules, which, in order to secure justice, must be recognized. It is only after an examination into this matter, which has been made with the utmost care, that I make this recommendation.

Mr. KING. Is the Senator familiar with the cases he has in mind, as well as the two the Senator from South Dakota has in mind?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am very familiar with them.

Mr. KING. Has the Senator made an investigation of those cases?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have made a personal investigation of them.

Mr. KING. Does the Senator state that these amendments would not constitute a precedent which would be objectionable or dangerous to the Navy?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I state without hesitancy that that would be the case. To adopt them would simply be an act of justice.

Mr. KING. The Senator recommends these promotions?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I do.

Mr. KING. I have such confidence in the Senator from Washington that I will take his word for it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I thank the Senator.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I merely wish to indorse the high tribute paid by the Senator from South Dakota to Chaplain Niver, whom I happen to know. He was for many years rector of one of our leading churches in Baltimore and enjoyed the confidence and respect of all the people of the city of Baltimore. I know he has rendered distinguished service as chaplain in the Navy. I am sure that the other officer has been equally efficient, but I do not know personally of him. I have a very high regard for Chaplain Niver.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] to the amendment of the Senator from South Dakota [Mr. STERLING].

The amendment to the amendment was agreed to.

The amendment as amended was agreed to.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 65, line 14, after the word "purposes," insert the following as a separate paragraph:

That any officer of the Navy who has served four years as chief of a bureau in the Navy Department and shall be retired subsequent to the completion of such period of service for physical disability due to wounds inflicted by the enemy while in the performance of his duty shall be retired with the rank, pay, and allowances now authorized by law for the retirement of a chief of bureau.

Mr. TRAMMELL. Mr. President, this in an amendment which was suggested and recommended by the Navy Department in a letter addressed to the chairman of the Committee on Naval Affairs on June 1. That letter was signed by the Acting Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. McCORMICK. When was that?

Mr. TRAMMELL. The letter was written on June 1. I think it probably reached the committee a little too late for consideration. I will read a part of the letter:

I have the honor to submit for the consideration of your committee, with the hope that it may be included as a provision of the pending naval appropriation bill, the following draft of legislation.

Then follows the amendment which I have proposed, word for word. The letter then continues:

This provision is intended to authorize the retirement in the next higher grade of Capt. Hutch I. Cone, who served as Engineer in Chief with the rank of rear admiral for a period of four years from May 18, 1909, to May 17, 1913, inclusive.

The reason for making this recommendation is because of the fact that Captain Cone is suffering from physical disability due to wounds inflicted by the enemy in the late war and to permit his retirement as Engineer in Chief would give him only such privileges as are now enjoyed by the same class of officers of the Army pursuant to the provisions of the national defense act as amended June 4, 1920, although the privilege is extended to the Army officers regardless of the cause for their retirement. The facts in the case, briefly stated, are: On October 10, 1918, at 9.30 a. m., the Irish mail ship Leinster was sunk by torpedo fire from a German submarine in the Irish Sea about 15 miles from Kingstown. Captain Cone was on the boat deck cutting away the lashings on the ship's life rafts when the second torpedo exploded in the hull directly underneath him. He was rescued after being in the water about two hours, taken to Dublin Castle Hospital suffering from shock and general bruising and multiple compound fracture of right tibia, simple fracture of right and left fibulas, synovitis and hemorrhagic effusions about right knee joint. In hospitals under treatment until January 23, 1919.

The record of Captain Cone since his entry into the service September 5, 1890, has been exceptional and meritorious and for service rendered during the World War as commander of the United States Naval Aviation Forces on foreign service in France he was awarded decorations by the United States, French, British, and Italian Governments.

That letter is signed by Mr. Roosevelt, the Acting Secretary of the Navy at the time the letter was written.

Captain Cone has been one of our very best naval officers. During the administration of President Roosevelt he was chief of the Bureau of Engineering, as set forth in this letter. Following that he went back into sea duty, and during the recent war he was called to a very responsible post overseas, and while upon this Irish steamer, which was torpedoed by a German submarine, he suffered wounds which have necessitated his being in the hospital a great deal of the time since. He had such a severe shattering of the bones of one leg that the surgeons never have entirely relieved him of the wounds which he suffered at that time, and, as I understand, he is now a hospital subject.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, in view of the letter of the Acting Secretary of the Navy, if the Senator is willing that this matter shall go to conference with the understanding that the conferees will be free to investigate it and act upon it on its merits, I will have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I would like very much to have that done. I really intended to suggest that I would like to have it go to conference and be considered on its merits.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Florida [Mr. TRAMMELL].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment which I have submitted to the acting chairman of the committee. I have made the changes which have been suggested, and I think the amendment speaks for itself.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 53, line 2, under the head of "Naval Academy," the Senator from Maryland proposes to insert:

The civilian grade of professor emeritus is hereby established at the Naval Academy, Annapolis, Md., and any civilian professor on duty at the Naval Academy on May 1, 1922, who had at that date completed 27 or more years of honorable service as such civilian professor at the Naval Academy, and who had reached or passed the age of 64 years, shall at any time thereafter, on his own application, be transferred or assigned to the grade of professor emeritus by the Secretary of the Navy: Provided, That any civilian professor on duty May 1, 1922, so transferred or assigned shall have the same privileges as the professors of other grades at the Naval Academy, and shall thereafter receive annual compensation equal to 2 per cent for each year of his service at the Naval Academy of the annual pay he was receiving on May 1, 1922: Provided further, That in no case shall the annual pay of a professor emeritus exceed 75 per cent of the annual pay he was receiving on May 1, 1922.

Mr. McCORMICK. I make a point of order, Mr. President.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. McCORMICK. I make the point of order that this is general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I hope the Senator will not press the point of order. This amendment is to take care of the cases of two professors at Annapolis, one of whom has served for 27 years, and the other of whom has served for 35 years. Both of them have contracts with the Government, but under a general order which requires retirement at the age of 65, both these aged professors will be dropped without any compensation whatever. It involves no additional expense to the Government, as an appropriation has already been made in a previous item for the pay of these professors. I realize that the amendment is subject to a point of order, but I hope the Senator will not press his point.

Mr. McCORMICK. I am sorry, but I make the point of order.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. NEWBERRY. Mr. President, I send to the desk two amendments which I offer and ask the Secretary to report.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the first amendment.

The READING CLERK. On page 17, following line 24, the Senator from Michigan proposes to insert:

That, until June 30, 1923, of the Organized Militia as provided by law, such part as may be duly prescribed in any State, Territory, or the District of Columbia shall constitute a Naval Militia; and, until June 30, 1923, such of the Naval Militia as now is in existence, and as now organized and prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy under authority of the act of Congress approved February 16, 1914, shall be a part of the Naval Reserve Force, and the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to maintain and provide for said Naval Militia as provided in said act: Provided, That upon their enrollment in the Naval Reserve Force, and not otherwise until June 30, 1923, the members of said Naval Militia shall have all the benefits, gratuities, privileges, and emoluments provided by law for other members of the Naval Reserve Force; and that, with the approval of the Secretary of the Navy, duty performed in the Naval Militia may be counted as active service for the maintenance of efficiency required by law for members of the Naval Reserve Force: Provided further, That all moneys appropriated for the Naval Reserve Force or for the Naval Militia shall constitute one fund and hereby are made available, under the direction of the Secretary of the Navy, for both.

Mr. NEWBERRY. Mr. President, I wish to state that I am offering the amendment at the request and in behalf of the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], who is unavoidably absent from the city. The amendment is in the language of the existing law, which will expire on the 30th of this month. At the request of the Navy Department and with the approval of the Committee on Naval Affairs and, I believe, of the Committee on Appropriations, I ask that the amendment may be adopted.

Mr. McCORMICK. Will the Senator explain how it happened that the committee did not bring it in as a committee amendment?

Mr. NEWBERRY. Because it is legislation and the committee could not do it. That is the reason why I am offering it upon the floor.

Mr. KING. I would like to ask the Senator in charge of the bill whether he thinks this ought to be added to the bill or be reported as a separate bill from the Committee on Naval Affairs? Is it legislation so imperative and legislation which we ought to have, that it merits a place on an appropriation bill?

Mr. NEWBERRY. May I answer the Senator's question addressed to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. KING. I am glad to have the Senator do so.

Mr. NEWBERRY. This must necessarily become the law before the 1st of July, or the appropriation made by four or five States—New York, Ohio, Minnesota, and I think Michigan—for the benefit and use of the Naval Reserve Forces will fail. It is a necessary and desirable piece of legislation from every point of view.

Mr. KING. For the sake of the Senator from New York, I have no objection.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan [Mr. NEWBERRY].

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will report the second amendment offered by the Senator from Michigan.

The READING CLERK. On page 6, after line 12, insert the following proviso:

Provided, That quarantine and passport fees collected in the Virgin Islands shall hereafter be paid into the treasuries of said islands.

Mr. NEWBERRY. I merely wish to say that I offer this amendment on behalf of the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE].

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is one committee amendment that has not been acted on, which was overlooked, on page 35. I ask that it may be acted upon at this time.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The committee proposes on page 35 to strike out lines 1 to 13, inclusive, in the following words:

Not to exceed 200 graduates of the Naval Academy of the class of 1922 shall be commissioned as ensigns in the Navy, and the graduates to be commissioned shall be selected by the academic board of the Naval Academy after giving equal consideration to the scholastic standing and adaptability for naval service of each graduate: Provided, That each graduate of the Naval Academy of the class of 1922 who is not commissioned as an ensign in the Navy shall be paid mileage at the rate of 5 cents per mile from the Naval Academy to his home and a sum equal to three months' pay of a midshipman, such payments to be made from the respective appropriations in this act providing for the transportation and pay of midshipmen.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I will explain briefly what the amendment is. It strikes out a limitation placed upon the number of midshipmen graduating in the class of 1922. The House limited the number to 200. The whole provision has become obsolete by reason of the fact that under the terms of existing law the class have graduated and received their commissions.

The amendment was agreed to.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I desire to offer an amendment. I would like to ask the Senator from Washington if he desires to have me proceed to-night or let the matter go over until Monday?

Mr. POINDEXTER. I would like very much indeed, if possible, to proceed this evening. I dislike to inconvenience the Senator, but unfortunately the greater part of the day has been occupied with other matters than the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The only thing I want to say to the Senator is that the matter is of such importance that I would feel that we ought to have a roll call, and I doubt very much if there is a quorum present.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator feels that way, and if the Senator is not willing to go ahead, then we had better let the amendment go over because I doubt whether we would be able to get a quorum this afternoon.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I would be glad to go ahead if the Senator thinks that after my explanation he may perhaps accept the amendment.

Mr. POINDEXTER. If the Senator will offer his amendment—I do not think it has yet been offered—I will then state my objections to it and make a point of order against it.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I move on page 35, at the end of the committee amendment, to add the following:

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized to carry as extra numbers and at the permanent rate or rank held by them on May 16, 1921, the 69 officers, formerly class 5, United States Naval Reserve Force, who were commissioned in the line of the Navy at reduced rate as the result of examination held on such date.

Very briefly the facts are as follows: Congress authorized the taking over from the reserve corps of the aviation section of the Navy 500 reserve aviation officers provided they were found to be qualified after examination. They were given an examination, prepared by an examining board composed of nonaviation officers of the Navy. About 290 of the reserve and temporary aviation officers took the examination. Upon the first marking of the examination papers only about 27 were found to be qualified. A reexamination of the papers was made and the requirements demanded at the time of the first marking were modified, and the number passing increased substantially—I believe to over 150. Some 86 failed. On July 1, except for the committee amendment which was adopted yesterday, the 86 reserve officers who took the examination and failed and who have been in the air service of the Navy for over five years would have been retired. The amendment which I propose seeks to take care of the 69 reserve officers who took the examination and as a result of the revised markings of the examination papers were taken into the regular line of the Navy, but at a lower grade.

The proposition I submit to the Senate, and particularly to the Senator from Washington, is this: The Senate has already adjudicated that the examination was unfair, so unfair that the 50 who failed, the Senate believes, should be retained for another year in the service at their old rank and given another examination. How can we say that the examination was unfair to those who failed and fair to those who passed, but who have been reduced in rank? Of course, we can not make any such contention. What my amendment seeks, and what it seems to me should be done, is that these officers who have passed and who have been reduced in rank shall be carried during the next fiscal year as extra numbers with the grade which they held at the time the examination was given.

The purpose of the committee amendment is that all of the reserve officers who failed or have been reduced in grade shall for another year be carried at the grade they formerly held, and that during the coming year steps will be taken either to reexamine them or reclassify them on some basis that will be found to be fair.

To allow this situation to remain unchanged, except for the adoption of the committee amendment, which I on yesterday commended and of which I heartily approve as far as it goes, means that for one year the reserve aviation officers who failed to pass the examination are to enjoy the grade which they now hold and will be holding a higher rank and drawing larger salaries than the reserve aviation officers who passed the examination. This applies to 69 of these officers.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There would be this difference, however, that those who failed are merely temporary and the others are permanent and in the regular Navy.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. That is a fact, but it is not very consoling for a reserve officer who passed the examination but was reduced in grade to find that the Senate of the United States has determined that the examination was unfair and unreasonable for those who failed, but fair for them, and that they must for a year—perhaps indefinitely, but for a year anyway—suffer a reduction in grade entailing a reduction in salary amounting in many cases to $2,500. Let us see how great a hardship this is. Some of the reserve aviation officers were lieutenants, senior grade. They were in the Naval Reserve Flying Corps. They took the examination. The examination was held to be and thought to be, and considered unfair. They just barely passed the examination after the requirements had been modified. They have been reduced from lieutenant, senior grade, to ensigns in many cases. That means they have been reduced in salary from $4,800 to $3,000, approximately. Others who took the examination have been reduced from lieutenants, senior grade, to lieutenants, junior grade. The amendment which I have offered would provide that for the next year they shall be carried on the rolls in the grade which they held at the time the examination was given, and in the meantime some plan can be devised to reexamine them and to see if they are not entitled to a higher grade than was given them as a result of the examination, which was admittedly unfair.

I do not like to appeal to the sympathies of the Senate in a matter of this kind, but I can not refrain from calling attention to the fact that these men have served their country for five years; that they have been engaged in a very dangerous and hazardous occupation; that they have taken their lives in their hands every day of those five years; that they have suffered very many hardships, during the period of the war particularly; many of their comrades have died heroically in accidents that have been most frequent; and they have all exhibited bravery and courage that is most commendable.

Congress said, in effect, when it passed the act of June 4, 1920, we believe that 500 of these reserve officers in the Naval Reserve Flying Corps should be taken over into the regular Navy; Congress intended that they should be so taken over, but never, in my opinion, did Congress intend that they should be humiliated by being reduced in rank to the extent to which they have been reduced.

The examinations which were provided for them were of the character given to regular line officers. I should like to ask any Member of this body what he thinks of a Government which leads a man to enter the Aviation Service and remain there for five years, promote him because of his efficiency and the faithful and loyal performance of his duty, and then at the end of the five years tells him that he must qualify to be a regular naval officer in the same manner and after the same fashion as a line officer and must pass an examination on the same subjects that a man who has spent four years at the Naval Academy must pass and meet the same tests without ever having given him an opportunity to get experience in such subjects? How would you like to have your son treated in this manner? These men were never at sea; they were never on a ship; and yet the examinations to which they were subjected embraced subjects of which they could not reasonably be expected to have any practical knowledge except they had been given an opportunity to go to sea.

Only a small per cent of the credits given in the examinations were for subjects relative to aviation in which these men were acknowledged scientists and many of them experts. Most of the subjects, I repeat, were subjects on which a man could have no practical knowledge unless he had been at sea. Man after man of these reserve aviation officers testified that they had never been on a battleship, and yet the questions which they were asked related to problems of navigation, which it was impossible for them to comprehend and understand from merely studying a textbook, and even this many of them had no opportunity to do.

What was the result of the examination? The result was that many of the men who were good theorists passed the examination; men who were able to study and grind so as to master sufficient information upon these subjects were able to get a passing mark only after the requirements had been modified, while many of the best men in the service, the practical aviators, the men who have held high rank, the men who have been commanding officers of air stations, the men who have been charged with the most serious and grave responsibilities in the aviation service failed in the examination. How can we justify a situation wherein we say to those who failed, "You were not given a fair examination; we are going to restore you to the roll, and give you an opportunity to take another examination," and in the same breath say to those who did not fail, but who have been reduced in rank, "You must stay where you are. It was a fair examination to you because you passed; it was unfair to the others because they failed"? It can not be justified.

Let me tell Senators what hardships are involved. One of the officers testified that during the war period and since, as officer in charge of the aviation training station at the Great Lakes, he trained 3,000 enlisted men in the knowledge of the mechanics of aviation, so as to qualify them for that class of service; that he had charge of the school and of the work carried on there, and was commended for it, being promoted to the grade of senior lieutenant. He took the examination and passed, but was reduced in rank immediately, which means what? That his salary is reduced from $4,000 a year to $2,200 a year, and yet, under the amendment which was adopted on yesterday, some of the men who failed in the examination will remain in the service for the next year and receive $4,800, while this man who passed will receive but $2,200. It is not fair; it can not be justified; and we all know it. I know the sense of fairness of the able Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] is such that he will find some solution for this serious problem. There is no answer which may be made to the charge of injustice, except that to those who passed we may say "you are under cover; you are in the Navy," and to those who failed, "You are not protected for life; you have not a life tenure as yet; you are only temporarily going to enjoy a high rank and an increased salary."

I say it is a disgrace to our country to treat these men in such a fashion. To take these young men, who served so loyally and faithfully during the war, and, after Congress has passed a law authorizing them to be taken into the regular Navy as naval officers, for an examining board to humiliate them, to reduce them in rank and to drive them out of the service is a shame and unfair discrimination.

It is a shame to treat our citizen soldiers and aviators in this manner. Talk about treating our ex-service men fairly! Who are these men? Talk about giving employment to ex-service men! These are ex-service men or they may be after July 1. They are men who were engaged in the most hazardous and dangerous occupation; men who flew in the air; who learned the art of aviation under the most trying conditions; yet these men, after being encouraged for five years to remain in the service, and encouraged to believe that they would be given an honorable place in the naval service, Congress voting to provide it for them, now find themselves reduced in grade and in salary over 50 per cent. Almost 69 of these men who are engaged in this hazardous occupation and who take their lives in their hands daily have been reduced to the rank of ensign, involving a drastic cut in their salary. Do Senators think any man who has become an experienced aviator and been in this service for five years is going to remain long in the service of his country, which rewards him in such a manner, especially when we now know that the examination was unfair, for the Senate itself has said it was unfair and that an injustice was done to those who failed in the examination?

I again ask the humane Senator from Washington, who is just as vitally interested in these men as I am, to let this amendment be adopted and let it go to conference, and see if we can not work out some solution of this problem to prevent this injustice from being done to this fine body of service men.

What can we expect of private employers when the Government undertakes to treat these men in this manner? How can we criticize, as we have all done publicly, the manner in which some employers of men who entered the service of their country have treated those men when they returned, when the Government itself, after encouraging these men to remain in the service, at the end of five years treats them in this fashion? It is a sad spectacle.

Many of these men in the meantime have married and have families. Only yesterday I was talking with a man whose knowledge of aviation is unequaled and unsurpassed in this country, whose record is brilliant, whose achievements have reflected credit upon him and his country, who told me that almost overnight he and his wife and children had been obliged to reduce their living conditions to meet the drastic cut in their salary from $5,400 to $3,000. And that is not an isolated case. What kind of men can we get to carry on this work if, after five years of experience, we reduce them to such a salary—$1,700?

Mr. President, there is a great deal more that ought to be said, and I am frank to admit that I am almost tempted to bring before the Senate and the country the whole story and go into the details of the testimony; but I do not want to trespass upon the time of the Senator in charge of the bill, who already has been most generous and indulgent and has gone a long way to meet the situation; but there is one step which yet remains to be taken. We should not permit this injustice to be continued and proceed now to punish those who passed the examination. That is what it means—that we have taken care of those who failed, but we have not taken care of those who were reduced in rank under the examination which we have said was unfair.

I fear we have already destroyed the morale of the flying corps of the Navy; I fear we have gone back rapidly in the last year in the development of this very important science and this very essential means of our national defense. Here is a chance to begin with the commissioned personnel; here is a chance to keep in the service of the country a fine body of trained men; here is a chance to repair the damage that has been done to the morale of this body of men. I hope that the amendment will be adopted and that the acting chairman of the committee will between now and the time of the conference be able to look into the matter further and improve, if necessary, the amendment which I have offered, to the end that something may be done to remedy the injustice which I have described.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I do not care to go at any length into the question of the merits of this question.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. POINDEXTER. For what purpose does the Senator desire me to yield?

Mr. HEFLIN. I wish to present an amendment to be proposed later on to the bill and to have it printed. I can wait until the Senator is through if he desires.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have no objection to the amendment being presented now.

Mr. HEFLIN. It is an amendment, Mr. President, in which one of the constituents of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] is interested and which the Senator from Mississippi promised to present. When he was called away he asked me to present it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I hope the Senator will remain; I should like to take up the amendment as soon as we dispose of the pending amendment.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The amendment intended to be proposed by the Senator from Alabama for the Senator from Mississippi will be received, printed, and lie on the table.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I appreciate the great interest which the Senator from Massachusetts has taken in this splendid body of young men, who served the country in the aviation service of the Navy at perhaps the most critical period of our history; but there is a great deal to be said on the subject of the specific complaint that some of them have made. The Committee on Naval Affairs appointed a subcommittee headed by the Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL], who is noted for his industry and application in matters which are committed to his charge, to investigate the matter. That committee reported to the Committee on Appropriations in connection with an appearance which was made there, in which they proposed an amendment to this bill to the effect that in their opinion the examinations of the aviators were fair, that they were reasonable, and that they were well adapted to the purposes for which they were held and as a test of qualifications for the services which were to be rendered.

There is a great deal to be said about the matter. I do not care to go into details now. One of the fundamental questions was as to whether or not an aviator in the regular Navy should be qualified as other naval officers are qualified in all naval subjects. That was required in these examinations, and it is very difficult to answer the reasons and the arguments which are advanced in favor of that proposition.

In the case of many of the naval subjects which were covered by the examination, such as seamanship, ordnance, navigation, and engineering, the aviators were allowed to substitute aviation for any one of those subjects; and in this substitution of a particular subject of special familiarity to these men they had a certain advantage over other classes of the reserve force who had been employed in some specialty, such as in submarines or in naval communications, who did not have the privilege of substituting their own specialty for one of the general technical subjects of naval examination and naval qualifications; and out of all the examinations that were held for temporary and reserve officers the Navy Department informs me that there was no complaint except from the aviators, and that there was no complaint from the aviators until after the results of the examinations had been known.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Of course all the other reserve officers had been at sea, had been upon naval craft, had had an opportunity to familiarize themselves with navigation, engineering, electricity, ordnance, and all the other problems of seagoing craft. The aviators had had not one day at sea. They had never been on a war craft.

While I am on my feet, let me say to the Senator that I understood the finding of the committee to be that it was fair for the naval officials to give them an examination on general subjects of navigation, but that the time that they gave them, and the opportunity for acquiring practical knowledge, was not fair.

Mr. POINDEXTER. In substance that is correct, and that was the sole basis upon which the Committee on Appropriations acted in recommending the provision which has been adopted with the approval of the Senator from Massachusetts, namely, that some of these men had not had a fair opportunity to prepare for the examination. So we did what we supposed was a very liberal thing: We put a proviso in the bill that 50 of these men—which, we were informed, would take care of all the meritorious cases—might remain upon the temporary list of commissioned personnel of the Navy for another year, and during that period be reexamined, and if they should pass they would have an opportunity to get their commissions.

Strange to say—of course, it is due to the complications of the relations of these men in their grades and ranks one with another—the Senator from Massachusetts is now complaining of the result of the very thing which he has been carrying on a campaign to get, because we propose here that these temporary officers may remain another year in the Navy, and he is now complaining about that because they will have a higher rank than those who passed the examinations and went into the regular Navy at a reduced rank. In order to remedy that, he proposes to go a step further and to take these aviation officers and make them a special class and give them a privilege which was not accorded to any other class of temporary or reserve officers in the Navy, and to provide by law in a wholesale way what their rank in the Navy shall be——

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. For one year.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Not to leave it to the Navy, but to provide by act of Congress that their rank in the regular Navy shall be the same as their temporary rank.

I have known major generals in the Army, who served through the war with credit and came out, to be reduced to the permanent rank of colonel. All through the regular as well as the reserve service in the Navy, when the Navy was readjusted upon the peace basis—a process which has been going on since the war—the officers were reduced in rank.

The objection to the amendment which the Senator from Massachusetts proposes is that, while it might remedy the one condition which he describes, it would create another set of discriminations which would be worse than that. To give these men the same regular rank that they held in the temporary service and to refuse it to all the others, would be a discrimination. Then we would have to go back, in order to remedy that, and build up a further pyramid, and provide that all the other temporary officers who have been reduced in rank should be restored to the temporary rank which they held.

Mr. President, I am informed from the Navy Department that instead of 69 men—the number mentioned in the Senator's amendment—there are only 40 who would come within the terms of the provision; that the effect of it would be to promote 8 ensigns to the rank of lieutenant, junior grade, and to promote 22 ensigns to the rank of lieutenant, and to promote 10 lieutenants, junior grade, to the rank of lieutenant, making a total of 40; and if that is done we will have to increase the appropriations in the bill in pay $32,580, and a rental allowance of $7,680. Of course it is all legislation of the most obvious kind, and subject to a point of order; and I am compelled to make the point of order against it upon that ground.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, let me say first in answer to the Senator that, of course, my amendment would have no standing unless I was able first to prove that those who failed were given an unfair examination. Therefore, before the committee investigating this question the only issue was in regard to those who failed. It having been determined that they did not have sufficient time to prepare, that they had not been given sufficient opportunity to study, because every one of them was kept at his duties; it having been proven that it was an unfair examination for those, it proved unquestionably that the examination was unfair for those who passed, but who were given low marks, and therefore reduced in rank. You can not get away from that. You can not deny that assertion. If it is unfair for those who failed, it is unfair for those who passed and got low marks.

There are only 69 of them; as fine a body of men as there are in the service of the country, in the Army or in the Navy. I am surprised that the Senator should raise the question here of a point of order in regard to giving these men an opportunity to go to sea to study navigation and the other subjects of this examination, and to be given relief from their service and duties in order to prepare for this examination.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, all the men to whom the Senator's amendment refers have passed their examinations.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Ah, but their situation is worse than if they had failed. They have been penalized because they passed. They have been humiliated. Let us note once more the facts.

These men who at the end of the war were ensigns and upon the recommendation of their commanding officers since the war were first made lieutenants (junior grade) and then within the year before their examination made lieutenants (senior grade), because they were efficient, because they were competent, because they were capable aviators; they are now told: "It was all a mistake. The recommendation of your officers was misleading. We should not have encouraged you. It was all wrong. You are only fit to be an ensign." That is what has happened; and it is a pretty poor spectacle that 40 of these men, or 69, as my information is, are treated in this way. Now, understand that. They have been told time and time again: "Stay in the Navy, stay in; marry and settle down; we need you." They have stayed in only, as it now appears, to train men to take their places; and they are now told: "You are unfit to be higher than an ensign in the Navy. We made a mistake when we recommended you for lieutenant (senior grade) or lieutenant (junior grade). You are only fit to be ensigns." "Why?" "You are only fit for ensigns because you have not gone to sea, because you have not gone to Annapolis, because you have not had any practical experience in the subjects that a line officer must know." Was deception or fraud ever more boldly practiced? Why did you promote these officers if they were unfit for their rank?

I can not conceive of anything more unfair. Ah, how different it is in the Army, or in the Marine Corps even, a branch of the Navy. The Army took over its aviation reserve officers on their records as aviators without any examination upon general military tactics with which an Army officer has to be familiar. The Marine Corps took over its aviators on their records as aviators, without any general examination on military subjects. Only the Navy has acted in this way, and only after these men had been used for five years to train other men to take their places. It is gross deception.

It is a sad commentary on our sense of gratitude and fairness, and I am surprised and sorry that the Senator from Washington is willing to treat these officers in this way. Give men between 25 and 35 years of age after 5 years of efficient service and experience the same rank as schoolboys just leaving the Naval Academy at Annapolis! Are you going to assist in promoting this rank injustice? It is just such practices that lead men to denounce the autocracy of the military system. And this is the treatment you give your citizen soldiery after their service is ended? They are among those whom we proudly call our war veterans. They belong to the class of men who constitute our war heroes. They will soon be mingling among their comrades. They will tell the story of how they have been treated; and it does not become us or the Army or the Navy to let these men go out and tell of treatment of this character and this nature.

Mr. President, as to the point of order that has been raised, the amendment proposed by me simply authorizes the Secretary of the Navy, in his discretion, to provide that these officers who have passed the examination shall be, for one year only, carried with the same rank that they had before the examination, in order that in the coming year we may do justice to those who failed and those who were reduced in rank.

I feel very keenly about this, because it is little injustices like these that have made a lot of trouble in this country. It is little injustices like this which have caused a great deal of discontent among our ex-service men. It may be a small matter, but it is a very vital matter to these men and their families, and I hope the Senator will withdraw his point of order, allow this matter to go into conference, and have it straightened out satisfactorily to all concerned. I do not see how the amendment calls for an appropriation. It gives discretionary power.

This is not an unusual thing. There are on the rolls of the Navy at this hour 57 officers carried as extra numbers. It is not an unusual or an uncommon thing to do, and these men can be carried as extra numbers during the next fiscal year.

Furthermore, four hundred or more young men graduated from Annapolis a few days ago. That will mean that there will be more officers in a higher rank, lieutenants (junior grade) and lieutenants (senior grade), and these men can be given those grades temporarily without disturbing the regulations or the rules or the practices of the Navy. I respectfully ask that the point of order be overruled.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The proposed amendment calls for an expenditure of money, which would make necessary an appropriation. It is general legislation, and the Chair rules that the point of order is well taken.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator in charge of the bill with reference to the Hydrographic Office. I submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $100,000 to enable the Hydrographic Office to print charts, and so on, to carry on their work more extensively. I did it in order to bring the proposition before the committee, so that it could be considered. The subcommittee I have no doubt did consider it carefully, but they did not recommend the amendment. So I ask the acting chairman if he will state briefly the reasons which led the committee not to recommend that provision.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, on an examination of the different parts of the bill we found that the items affecting the Hydrographic Office totaled $507,730, which the committee considered a very large appropriation for practically the exclusive work of producing charts. It was not considered that there was such an emergency or pressing need at this time as to demand this extra appropriation. While, of course, like many other things, it would be desirable that we should have our own charts of every part of the world, in the effort to hold the bill down as much as possible we did not believe there was such need for it as to justify making this appropriation.

The whole point is whether or not we shall produce here in our own country plates from which can be printed charts of every navigable portion of the seven seas, or whether we shall continue, as we have in the past, making such proportion of them as the appropriations will provide for and purchasing the rest of them from foreign countries, which there is no difficulty in doing.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I want to call the Senator's attention to this statement in the report of the Hydrographic Office, which to my notion brings out the real point to be carefully considered. It says:

> From the above table it will be seen that our Navy and merchant marine are dependent upon the British Admiralty for 1,178 charts as against the 3,364 furnished by our own Government (2,720 by Hydrographic Office and 644 by Coast Survey).

This is the special point:

> A further study of the details of the table will show that the entrance of our ships into European waters is practically under the control of the British Government.

We are seeking to build up an American merchant marine. We have a large number of ships owned by the Government which, of course, it is hoped to put into private hands in the very near future.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Can the Senator inform the Senate as to the extent to which the Coast and Geodetic Survey produces charts of European waters?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I can not state absolutely.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I think they make plates and print charts of waters, but just to what extent I do not know.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I think the Coast and Geodetic Survey cover our coastwise waters.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I know that the Shipping Board is very much in favor of this appropriation, and I submitted to the committee a letter from the Shipping Board. The private merchant marine are also in favor of it. I submitted a letter from one of their organizations to the committee. Personally, at some future time, perhaps in the next appropriation bill, I will be very much disposed to go further into the question, with a view possibly to make further provision for charts of European waters.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I wondered if the Hydrographic Office had any representative before the subcommittee.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Yes; the hydrographer, Captain Bassett, appeared before the subcommittee and made a very strong statement and a very urgent request for this appropriation.

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is what I thought. I believed the subcommittee gave the matter very careful consideration, and I was willing to accept their judgment. Therefore I am not going to offer the amendment. But I do hope that the committee will give that matter very special consideration in framing the next appropriation bill, because I believe that it is a matter of vital importance to our shipping and our merchant marine.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am very much in sympathy with the views of my colleague in regard to the desirability of having independent equipment for the navigation of the entire world, as far as possible, under our own control, and in the preparation of the next appropriation bill I would like to have the Senator give the committee some assistance in the matter.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I shall be glad to do that, because I think it is absolutely essential that we should have our own charts of the principal harbors of the world. We are going to be in a merchant marine contest which will bring against us all the forces which can be employed to prevent the establishment of our merchant marine, and if these charts are necessary to marine navigation, and are necessary to a merchant marine, then everything possible is going to be thrown in our way to prevent us from having the necessary charts. If we do not make them, then our competitors will have them before we get them, if so getting them means any advantage to them.

I shall be glad to cooperate with the committee in the consideration of the next appropriation bill. I felt, however, that this was a matter which the subcommittee would carefully consider at this time and that they would pass upon the advisability of incorporating the provision in this bill. That is the reason why I am not going to offer the amendment which I introduced and had printed. I hope the subject will be given very careful consideration, and I think it ought to be taken care of in the next bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I think we have reached a point now where the amendment I sent to the desk would be in order, and I ask that it be read.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 8, line 19, strike out "$19,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$21,000," under the heading "Naval war records."

Mr. HEFLIN. I understand that the officers in charge of this work claim that this additional sum is very necessary, that they need this addition of $2,000, and that it will be very helpful to them in carrying on the work.

Mr. POINDEXTER. This matter was specially considered in the subcommittee, and the committee was perfectly well satisfied, from the testimony which was submitted to it, that the work could be efficiently carried on with the amount provided in the bill.

Mr. BROUSSARD. Mr. President, I do not know very much about this matter. I understood that the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] was to present it, but I have been informed he was called away. It increases the appropriation by $2,000. I think this additional amount is for the purpose of increasing the subordinate force so as to enable them to compile in a shorter time the history which they are to write, and that there will be a great saving by it. Whether or not that is true I do not know, and I would like to inquire of the acting chairman of the committee about it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. There is no estimate for it, and it is not recommended by a committee. Nineteen thousand dollars was the amount asked for in the estimate. The amendment is subject to a point of order, of course, and I make the point of order against it.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point is sustained.

Mr. FRANCE. Mr. President, I offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. On page 47, line 15, the Senator from Maryland proposes to add:

> Provided further, That all employees of the navy yards who were, as a result of the change in national policy, given furloughs without pay shall be paid six months' pay at the regular rate, and all those employees who shall have served 25 years or more shall be entitled to retirement with such compensation as may be determined by the Secretary of the Navy in harmony with the established governmental policy of caring for those who have faithfully served the Government through a long period.

Mr. FRANCE. I realize that this amendment is subject to a point of order, but I wished to present it at this time in order that the matter might be before the Senate. It can, perhaps, be better taken care of in some other bill. However, if the Senator from Washington feels that it would be appropriate to put it upon this bill, I would be much gratified.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It has not been considered at all by the committee, and it is a matter of such importance that it ought to be considered by a committee. I make a point of order against the amendment as being general legislation.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The point of order is well taken.

Mr. POINDEXTER. The Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] has an amendment which he desires to offer and debate at some length. So, it would be obviously impossible to conclude the consideration of the bill this afternoon.

JOHN B. ELLIOTT.

The VICE PRESIDENT laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 1784) for the relief of John B. Elliott, which was, on page 1, line 4, to strike out the word "pay" and insert "pay, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated."

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

FORT WINGATE MILITARY RESERVATION, N. MEX.

Mr. BURSUM. I ask unanimous consent to submit a report from the Committee on Military Affairs. I report back favorably with an amendment from that committee the joint resolution (S. J. Res. 185) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant permits for removal of rock and gravel from military reservations, and I submit a report (No. 778) thereon. I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of the joint resolution.

Mr. POINDEXTER. It is reported from the committee?

Mr. BURSUM. Yes; reported from the Committee on Military Affairs, and the War Department reports favorably upon it.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The amendment was, in line 5, before the name "Fort Wingate," to insert "the," and after "Fort Wingate," to strike out "Fort Bayard, and Fort Stanton Military Reservations," and insert "Military Reservation," so as to make the joint resolution read:

Resolved, etc., That the Secretary of War is hereby authorized to grant permits for the excavation and removal of rock or gravel from the Fort Wingate Military Reservation, in New Mexico, under such regulations as the War Department may prescribe, when same is to be utilized for highway or street purposes either by State or municipality.

The amendment was agreed to.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate as amended and the amendment was concurred in.

The joint resolution was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to grant permits for removal of rock and gravel from the Fort Wingate Military Reservation."

EXECUTIVE SESSION.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of executive business.

The motion was agreed to, and the Senate proceeded to the consideration of executive business. After five minutes spent in executive session the doors were reopened and the Senate (at 5 o'clock and 5 minutes p. m.), under the order previously entered, took a recess until Monday, June 19, 1922, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

SATURDAY, June 17, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Blessed Lord and Master, Thy mercy is our hope and trust. We are here not in our own strength but in the loving kindness and power of our Heavenly Father. Send forth Thy light, that we may fulfill the measure of duty that is plain to us. With our labors, bless us with a larger day. O enrich us with the fruitful joys of the Christian's faith. May it ever be our shield and our strong defense. Redeem our country from all enmities and jealousies. Shadow it with the sweet, gracious sentiment of brotherhood. Teach us that the lasting treasure of life is the presence of Him who quiets all alarms and stills the soul with heavenly peace. Through Christ. Amen.

THE JOURNAL.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I would like to have that part of the Journal read that refers to the permission granted to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HARDY] to file minority views.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

On motion of Mr. HARDY of Texas, by unanimous consent, Members are granted five legislative days in which to file minority views on the bill H. R. 12021, not to interfere with the consideration of said bill.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I suppose it would be so taken as to be restricted to the members of the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries?

The SPEAKER. The Chair thinks so.

Mr. BANKHEAD. I am sure that that was the purpose and intention of the request.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the correction will be made.

There was no objection.

The Journal was approved.

CALL OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. SNELL. Mr. Speaker——

The SPEAKER. For what purpose does the gentleman from New York rise?

Mr. SNELL. I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from New York makes the point that there is no quorum present, and it is clear that no quorum is present.

Mr. KNUTSON. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The roll was called, and the following Members failed to answer to their names:

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and twenty-seven Members have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

ORDER OF BUSINESS.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on Rules, who was to present a rule this morning, is unavoidably absent, and as the committee did not authorize anyone other than the chairman to call up the rule, it can not be called up in his absence.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I will.

Mr. GARNER. Is the chairman of the committee out of the city?

Mr. MONDELL. No; the chairman of the committee is in the city, but he is detained on important public business.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman from Wyoming yield?

Mr. MONDELL. Yes.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman is aware that I am interested in the measure referred to. I had been informed that the bill would come up to-day, and have had no notice to the contrary until now. Can the gentleman from Wyoming give the House, or those interested in the measure, any idea when that rule may be expected to be reported?

Mr. MONDELL. I have hopes, of course, Mr. Speaker, that the measure may be brought up very promptly. The ranking member of the Committee on Rules is here. I think I stated that I was told that only the chairman was authorized to call the measure up, but I have no very definite information on that point. Of course, the ranking member of the Committee on Rules has a right to call the measure up and have the question settled as to whether or no he is authorized by the committee to present the rule.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONDELL. I yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The Committee on Rules never, within my experience upon it, has passed a resolution authorizing or directing any particular member of that committee to call up a resolution reported by the committee. The resolution to which the gentleman refers was unanimously adopted. Of course, it is the custom of the chairman to call those matters up; but, so far as I know, there is no reason why any other member of the committee can not call them up.

Mr. MONDELL. With that statement of the gentleman from Tennessee, I think the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL] was justified in calling up the rule.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman from Tennessee yield for a question?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. With the permission of the gentleman from Wyoming.

Mr. MONDELL. I yield.

Mr. CRAMTON. I would like to ask the gentleman from Tennessee whether the rule to which he has just referred is the rule to make in order a bill for the reestablishment of certain land offices?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. That was my understanding. That is the rule to which the gentleman from Wyoming refers.

Mr. CRAMTON. May I further inquire of the gentleman from Tennessee, inasmuch as he states that the rule was unanimously adopted by the committee, if the gentleman from Tennessee was present at the meeting of the committee when the rule was ordered reported?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I was present.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman state to the House whether or not there was a quorum present at the time?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I suggest that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] reply to that. He is now here.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman would not state that there was a quorum present?

The SPEAKER. Does the gentleman from Oregon withdraw his demand for the regular order?

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, according to the authority of the committee to report this particular rule, I think the record of the committee is the best evidence. Others are interested in the rule besides the gentleman having the floor and the gentleman interrogating him.

The SPEAKER. The Chair would understand that that was a withdrawal of the demand for the regular order.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Having no responsibility in connection with the rule or with the matters that are brought before that committee for consideration, I do not think I should be called upon by the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] at this time to respond to his inquiry.

Mr. CRAMTON. I understand that; I appreciate that. I wish the gentleman would explain, however, what he meant when he said that the rule had been ordered reported by the unanimous consent of the committee. He refers only to those who were present at the meeting?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Yes; those who were not present did not vote. [Laughter.]

Mr. CRAMTON. If the gentleman from Tennessee will yield further, he did not mean to intimate to the House that all the members of the committee were present?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Regular order, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The regular order is demanded.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas submits a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Resolved, That immediately upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of S. 3425, an act to continue certain land offices, and for other purposes; that there shall be one hour of general debate on said bill, one-half to be controlled by those in favor thereof and one-half to be controlled by those opposed thereto. At the conclusion of the general debate the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment the committee shall rise and report the bill back to the House with the amendments, if any. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and all amendments thereto to final passage, without intervening motion, except one motion to recommit.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving all points of order on the report and the resolution, I will ask the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] to state to the House whether at the time this rule was reported by the Committee on Rules or when an attempt was made to authorize the report there was present a quorum of the committee?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. In answer to the inquiry of the gentleman I send to the Clerk's desk and ask to have read the minutes of the meeting.

The Clerk read the paper sent to the desk, which was later withdrawn from the consideration of the Speaker and from the RECORD.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order, first, that at the meeting at which there was an attempt made to authorize a report of this resolution there was not in fact present a quorum of the committee; second, that the committee did not have jurisdiction of the matter covered by this rule, no rule of this nature or upon this subject having previously been introduced or referred to that committee and no petition having been referred to that committee and the House not having in any way referred this matter to the committee.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in support of the first point of order, the extract just read from the proceedings of the Committee on Rules carries with it no signature whatever, no evidence of its authenticity, and is accompanied by no statement whatever of the chairman of the Committee on Rules, who offered it in the House, that it does state the facts.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield right on that point?

Mr. CRAMTON. I can not at this moment. I will later. And I may say to the gentleman from Kansas that he will not say to the House that that paper sent to the desk is a true statement of the facts, because that committee consists of 12 members, and 7 are necessary for a quorum; and I know absolutely that 6 members of that committee were absent all through the pretended session of the Committee on Rules, those members being the gentleman from New York [Mr. SNELL], who is on the floor now, and who will vouch for the statement he has previously made to me that he was absent at the time of the meeting; the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FESS], whom I do not see at the moment, but who is, I think, now in the city, and who has stated to me that he was not present at that meeting; the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU], whom I do not see just at this moment, but I understand he is present, and I am advised by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. BYRNES] that Mr. POU has stated to him that Mr. POU was not present at that committee session; Mr. RIORDAN, of New York, I am not sure whether he is present or not, but he was here in the last day or two, and stated to me that he was not in the city Tuesday, as I recall, but positively he was not at that committee meeting. The gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL] is out of the city, was out of the city on Tuesday, and has been out of the city a long time, as gentlemen from Kentucky have advised me. There are a number of gentlemen from Kentucky on the floor who will vouch for that statement, that the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. CANTRILL] has not been in the city for a week or more and could not have been at that meeting. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. KREIDER] was out of the city on Tuesday. He has not been here for a week or more, as gentlemen from Pennsylvania all very well know, and he could not have been at that committee meeting, because he has not been in the city for a long time.

There are six members absolutely, positively accounted for. There is one other, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SCHALL]. He is on the floor. I have tried to get in touch with him, but have not succeeded, and I can not say positively whether the gentleman from Minnesota was present or not at that meeting. I have information that he was not, but I am not positive as to the correctness of that information. But it is quite immaterial. There being six absent, even with the gentleman from Minnesota there could not have been present more than six, and there could not have been present at that committee meeting a quorum of the committee.

Now, Mr. Speaker, when we come to argue the question of parliamentary law and leave the question of fact, it may be that the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] will try to make a distinction, try to argue that regardless of any other evidence before the House, any other evidence before the Speaker, some purported paper coming in here that is claimed to be a record of the Committee on Rules must determine the question of fact, regardless of evidence to the contrary that satisfies every Member of the House present.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Just one more sentence and then I will yield to the gentleman. It may be—although I think that is not a controlling fact—it might be that upon that attitude he could obtain a decision of the Chair to-day. But, Mr. Speaker, I hope the time has not come in this Congress when the great Committee on Rules, which has in its power the decision of the question whether some great measure affecting the interests of the country or another great measure shall have a hearing before this House. I hope the time has not come in this House when the Committee on Rules and its chairman, the splendid gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL], will be willing to risk the prestige of that committee in this House through any subterfuge or technicality contrary to the facts. Now I yield to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. CONNALLY].

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Does not the gentleman believe that when the chairman of a committee presents a statement from the committee of which he is chairman he vouches for that statement speaking the truth?

Mr. CRAMTON. Knowing the gentleman from Kansas and his rectitude, and knowing the facts to be contrary to the paper presented, I am obliged to presume that the gentleman from Kansas has not vouched for the correctness of this paper.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. I will yield to the gentleman for a statement of fact.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I want to make a statement.

Mr. CRAMTON. As to the facts, I am very glad to yield to the gentleman.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Touching the fact. The question of a quorum was not mentioned, was not raised at that meeting. The presumption therefore is that there was a quorum present.

Mr. CRAMTON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The eliminations made by the gentleman from Michigan to the contrary notwithstanding, the presumption still stands, no question of a quorum having been raised, that there was a quorum present.

Mr. CRAMTON. Then I am to understand that the gentleman presents this paper, and claims for the statement therein that there was a quorum present, only that it is a formality that is put in regardless of the actual facts, unless some member of the committee raises the point of no quorum present. Is that correct?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I think two or three days ago here in the House a bill was passed, some bills, and I think I could go out now and get the names of enough men who were not upon the floor to raise a question as to whether or not a quorum was present and voted for the passage of those bills; and yet the records of this House presume that there was a quorum present when the bills were passed——

Mr. CRAMTON. I repeat my question.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. And the same thing occurred in the Committee on Rules.

Mr. CRAMTON. The gentleman will state, then, that the only foundation for the statement in the paper presented, which purports to be a record of the meeting of the committee, the only foundation for the statement that there was a quorum present was the fact that no one made the point of no quorum?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The presumption that a quorum is present when business is transacted, the point of no quorum not being made.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. But I understand that on that day the Rules Committee declined to report a rule on the Tincher bill because there was no quorum present?

Mr. CRAMTON. The correct statement would be that word having been sent to the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] that if the Tincher bill was brought up the point of no quorum would be made, therefore the Tincher bill, which I assume has the friendly support of the gentleman from Kansas, was not brought up.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Is not the gentleman from Kansas willing to agree that at the time the Tincher bill was spoken of in the committee there was no quorum present, and that that is the reason why it was not taken up?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. The very last thing that occurred was the question was raised—not openly in the committee but privately—whether another resolution should be agreed to, just before the adjournment of the committee, and it was decided not to submit the matter.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Why? Did the gentleman state why?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am not called upon to give the details of what occurred in that committee meeting.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. The gentleman said it was decided not to submit the matter, but I did not understand the gentleman to state why?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I did not give the reason why.

Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina. Does the gentleman mean to say that the statement contained in the minutes as to the presence of a quorum was incorrect and hence the gentleman decided not to submit the Tincher resolution? Does the gentleman say that there was a quorum present?

Mr. WILLIAMSON. Mr. Speaker, I demand the regular order.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GARNER. I want to refer to the statement of the gentleman from Kansas as to the minutes of the committee. I have served on three different committees in Congress since I have been a Member of it, and the minutes of those committees have never recited that there was a quorum present if there was not a quorum present in fact. Now, if it is the custom of the minutes of his committee to recite facts that do not exist, that falsifies the record, and I do not believe you can find another committee in the House of Representatives whose minutes will recite the fact that a quorum was present when, as a matter of fact, a quorum was not present. I recall the procedure in the Committee on Ways and Means, and we have reported bills out of that committee without a quorum, but the minutes of the committee did not recite that there was a quorum present at that time, and I do not believe that the minutes of any committee ought to recite that there was a quorum present unless there was actually a quorum there.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I agree entirely with the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. If the gentleman is right in saying that the mere recital in the minutes imports verity and can not be disputed, then he must logically insist that if there were no members of the committee present, but only the clerk or secretary who wrote the minutes, then there could not be any inquiry into the fact as to whether there was a meeting of the committee or not.

Mr. VAILE. A parliamentary inquiry.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. VAILE. If the question of the presence of a quorum was not raised in the committee, is it in order to raise it now?

The SPEAKER. That is the question before the House.

Mr. CRAMTON. I am not yielding except for a statement of facts. I want the facts developed, and then we can discuss the other questions afterwards.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman yield at this point?

Mr. CRAMTON. I yield to the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have never before heard read, either on the floor of the House or in the Committee on Rules, the minutes of the committee.

The procedure of the Committee on Rules has been quite informal. It is a fact that the Committee on Rules, where no objection was made, has in the past voted out rules when a quorum was not present, but an important and dangerous precedent might be made here to-day if the document presented by the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] were held to be unquestioned. Half the bills in the House of Representatives probably pass with a quorum not being present. It is not the custom of the Journal to show that a quorum of the House is present, as a quorum is presumed to be present until the question is raised in the House. My own thought has been that that same rule applied to a committee in so far as the committee was concerned, but the right to raise the question on the floor of the House ought to be held inviolate, in my opinion. I want to say here and now that if the Committee on Rules has the practice of reciting in its minutes the proposition that a quorum was present, whether a quorum was present or not, I shall feel it my duty in the future to see to it, no matter how inconsequential the thing we may be considering is, that there is a quorum present in order that the minutes may speak the truth. [Applause.]

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I think it might occur to the gentleman from Kansas that even if in the future this erroneous feature of the record kept by the Committee on Rules should be eliminated by reason of the activity of the minority, there might remain some lack of confidence on the part of the House as to other features of the record of that committee.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. To what does the gentleman refer?

Mr. CRAMTON. Simply this, which I am sure will not be the case: If the Committee on Rules should show to this House that they are willing to rely upon a false record as to the attendance at a meeting, then that committee will be bound to weaken the confidence of the House as to other features of the records of that committee.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. May I state this: I never saw the minutes of the meeting of the Committee on Rules until within the last few minutes. To-day when the House convened I was necessarily absent on an errand at the other end of the Avenue. I handed the rule to the ranking member of the committee before I left. After I came into the Chamber I was handed the resolution. I presented the resolution, and immediately afterwards the gentleman from Michigan took the floor. I have not had an opportunity to see whether or not it has been the universal custom of the committee to keep minutes in this way. I do not know when a copy of the minutes were procured. I have no knowledge upon that question; but I do know, as the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT] has stated, that the Committee on Rules for the past 12 years has transacted much important business without a quorum of the committee being present.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. This is not the first time, of course, that the question has been raised as to whether a quorum of a committee was present.

Mr. CRAMTON. Oh, that question has been raised a number of times.

Mr. BANKHEAD. Will the gentleman yield to me in order that I may ask the gentleman from Kansas a question?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

Mr. BANKHEAD. It might be important to the Speaker in deciding this question, inasmuch as the fact of a quorum being present is challenged, to learn from the gentleman from Kansas whether as a matter of fact he controverts that challenge, and I ask the gentleman from Kansas to state whether or not as a matter of fact a quorum was present at that meeting.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There is no question about that fact. There was not a quorum of the committee present. That is a fact about which there can be no controversy. The presumption, however, has always been when any committee of this House has transacted business and the question of a quorum not being raised, that it had the right to transact business that was transacted, just as this House passes bills every week when a quorum is not present.

Mr. CRAMTON. That is another question entirely. Mr. Speaker, I am sure that the statement which the gentleman from Kansas has made fully vindicates the absolute confidence in his integrity which every Member of the House feels, and always has felt, and may I be permitted to suggest to the gentleman that the parliamentary situation would be well adjusted if the gentleman would withdraw from the consideration of the Speaker the purported statement of the records of the Committee on Rules?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I ask that the Chair not take into account, in rendering his decision, the minutes of the meeting of the Committee on Rules, and that they be eliminated from the record.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will hear anybody who is opposed to the point of order.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I wish to state this, that the right of the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] to raise the question of fact as to what transpired in the committee is not questioned. He does raise the question of fact. There is no question that at the meeting of the committee referred to there were not seven members present, seven members being necessary to constitute a quorum of that committee. The question of a quorum, however, was not raised in the committee, and it is raised here for the first time.

Mr. STEVENSON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. STEVENSON. Was there at any time during that meeting a quorum present? In other words, was there a quorum present when the committee started?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. No. There were not seven members of the Committee on Rules in the city. Mr. Speaker, now that I have said this much, I think I am justified in taking a little of the time of the House in making a statement about quorums in the Committee on Rules. The Committee on Rules meets usually upon the call of the chairman. Sometimes a necessity for a meeting of the Committee on Rules is pressing, and the committee must be called together immediately. It is very difficult to get a quorum of that committee. Very often a quorum of the committee is not in the city. I doubt if there is a quorum of the committee in the city at this moment, and yet here is an important matter brought up for consideration, and if the Speaker rules that the gentleman from Michigan properly raised the question as to the legality of the proceedings in the Committee on Rules at its last meeting, then the Committee on Rules should meet at once and agree to this resolution; but there is not a quorum of that committee in the city, and the public business can not be transacted.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. In a moment. I am not responsible for the fact that the Committee on Rules, which must meet suddenly and without much notice, has 12 members upon it. It is very difficult to get 12 members of any committee to meet upon a sudden call.

Mr. CRAMTON. What would happen to the public business if there was not present in the city a quorum of the House?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Bills passed yesterday when I doubt if there was a quorum present. Bills have passed many times when it was doubtful if there was a quorum in the House.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Let me say that all the bills that passed in the House yesterday were passed without a quorum. I was present all day, and I know. Will the gentleman permit a question?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Certainly.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Is there a different rule governing a quorum in the Committee on Rules and where we do business here in the House without a quorum? The presumption is that a quorum is present and that everything transacted is legal until some gentleman rises and makes the point of order that no quorum is present. Bills passed yesterday and not one passed with a quorum present. They all went over to another body. Can some Member of that other body raise the question as to whether there was a quorum present in the House? If anybody can raise the question of a quorum being present in the committee after the bill is called up in the regular way here in the House, what becomes of the business of the House when hundreds of bills are reported from committees without a quorum being present if the question of fact can be raised in the House as to whether there was a quorum present in the committee reporting the bill?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. There is much logic in what the gentleman says.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Will the gentleman let me make this answer to the gentleman from Iowa?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I yield.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. It so happens that the five or six members who were present at a meeting of the Committee on Rules on this particular day when this rule was reported were favorable to the reporting of the rule, therefore there was no minority there. Let me show where the position of the gentleman from Iowa might lead to. It probably would not occur, and yet it might occur in times of stress, strain, and passion, that a political majority of the committee would get together, pass a rule without a quorum, even without a political majority being present, and there would be no way under Heaven whereby it could be challenged except in the way the gentleman from Michigan is challenging this.

Mr. RAMSEYER. There has been no question raised as to the call of the committee being proper. The presumption is that every member was notified, and it certainly presents a different situation than what the gentleman is assuming, that a political majority might do business without the minority knowing of it. If such a situation should arise and a political majority calls a meeting and has no quorum, and the minority is not notified, I should say that that was an illegal meeting.

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. The facts in this case will refute all that the gentleman intimates in that statement, because in this case the Members were notified by telephone and not in writing, and of course if they were not here they could not be notified.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Is not notice by telephone as valid and binding as a notice in writing?

Mr. GARNER. The difference between a quorum in the House and a quorum in committee, to my mind, is this: In the House each Member has a right to make a point of no quorum. Only the members of a committee have a right to make a point of no quorum in committee. Every man in the House ought to have the right to see that a quorum is present in committee and ought to have the right on the floor to question it.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. GREENE of Vermont. Is not the very purpose and function of the Committee on Rules to take away some right that the minority may have in the House and therefore is there not all the more reason why the commitee should proceed with a quorum?

Mr. GARNER. I agree with the gentleman. The Journal of the House does not each morning recite that there was a quorum present. If the Speaker in this instance is convinced as a matter of fact that there was not a quorum present at the reporting of the rule or of a bill, the integrity of the House of Representatives is involved and the Speaker ought to say that the committee did not have a legal right to report the bill.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield to me to propound an inquiry to the Speaker?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I want to make a further statement and then I will yield. What I want to say further is this: If the Committee on Rules is to function, if the House expects the Committee on Rules to aid the House in the transaction of its business, the House must provide for a Committee on Rules that can secure a quorum of its members. [Applause.] During the period of the war, as a member of the Committee on Rules, I met with the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. POU] and one or two others. Much of the most important legislation that has ever been acted upon in the history of this Republic was brought on the floor of the House from the Committee on Rules when sometimes there were not to exceed three members of that committee present. It was done by unanimous consent, and the question of the attendance of a quorum was never raised. The gentleman from North Carolina was laboring under the same burdensome conditions then that some of the rest of us have been laboring under since then. He could not upon a sudden call secure a quorum of his committee. I never raised the question of a quorum on any important matter in that committee. Matters were brought here on the floor of the House of the greatest import to the country without any question ever being raised as to whether or not there was a quorum present in the committee.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. If the minutes of the clerk of the committee can not be questioned, if a point of no quorum is made in it and some certificate should come in——

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Just let me say that I never saw the minutes of the Committee on Rules until just now, when they were sent to the Clerk's desk. I did not know that that was the form that they used.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. If it could not be inquired into whether a quorum was present, then if the clerk's minutes show that a quorum was present it would be conclusive.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I do not follow the gentleman.

Mr. DOMINICK. I would like to ask if this matter was considered at a regular or a special meeting of the committee?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. We do not have regular meetings of the committee; only upon call.

Mr. DOMINICK. And this meeting of the committee was called in the usual way?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Yes; in the usual way.

Mr. OLIVER. It is not usual in reporting a rule to report the preamble attached to this rule reciting the minutes of the committee?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Oh, no.

Mr. OLIVER. And the gentleman very properly, when it was called to his attention that there was no quorum, withdrew the recital.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, unless the Speaker indicates the desire I shall not take more time in support of the point of order than to call the attention of the Speaker to two precedents. I only want to be sure they are mentioned in the RECORD. One is a decision on this point by Mr. Speaker Clark on May 17, 1918, in connection with the question of committee authorization for the calling up of the Senate bill for Hawaiian prohibition. The other is a decision by the present Speaker on October 9, 1919, in connection with the rule for the bill proposing vocational rehabilitation of persons disabled in industry. The first is found in CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 56, page 6688; the other in CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, volume 58, page 6652.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker [applause], the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] had some reason for complaint. When the Republican members of the Committee on Committees were working on the appointments to be presented to the House the gentleman from Kansas saw me and other members of that committee and insisted that a majority of the Republican members of the committee should be Members who would be present and help to make a quorum of the Committee on Rules when that committee met. There were several Republican members of the committee in the prior Congress who had not been very attentive on the Committee on Rules, or, I might say, on the House itself. I informed the gentleman from Kansas that it was a very difficult matter to remove a man from a committee under the practice and precedents of the House unless he would agree to it, and I took the trouble to ask the men who were slated to go on the Committee on Rules on the majority side of the House whether they would attend, and those who had been absent in the past whether they would reform, and received a pledge of every Republican member of the Committee on Rules that when it was necessary to have a quorum of the Committee on Rules those Members would be in Washington and present, and I am inclined to think that some members of the Committee on Rules on the majority side had better resign or else the House may be forced to elect Members in their places. [Applause.] Mr. Speaker, in the old days the Committee on Rules, consisting of five Members, three majority and two minority, with the Speaker at the head, very frequently were called in meeting on the floor of the House or in the cloak room or in the lobby and reported rules.

Since the Committee on Rules was reconstituted and finally made a committee of 12 it has met with difficulties all the time. I think there has never been a time since the reconstitution of the Committee on Rules when it did not frequently, both when the Democrats were in control and when the Republicans came in control, meet and act without, in fact, a quorum of the committee present, and it was generally considered that when the minority side would agree with the majority members of the Committee on Rules rules might be reported regardless of a quorum, so that no criticism can be had of what action has been taken up to the present time, and I might say probably no criticism would exist if that practice were to continue. But here comes a question where the Speaker is required to rule on the right of the gentleman from Kansas, chairman of the Committee on Rules, to report a rule ordered reported by his committee when, in fact, no quorum of the committee acted upon the order. The House does business on the theory of a quorum being present, but it has always been my understanding since I have been a Member of this House that a committee must develop a quorum before it can transact any business. [Applause.] And it is the practice, at least in most of the committees, to call the roll of the committee—a matter which is never called in the House at the meeting of the House to ascertain whether a quorum is present before the House can commence business—to ascertain whether a quorum is present. I was chairman of two committees of this House for a number of years and never acted upon any proposition or reported any matter to the House until a quorum was developed in the committee and a quorum acted upon the matter to be reported to the House. I think myself that in the interest of good parliamentary procedure, in the interest of orderly legislation, it would be wise for the Speaker to hold that when the chairman of the committee or a member of the committee reporting to the House did not state when the question was asked that a quorum of the committee was present when the order was made, that order would be held invalid, and that no committee had the right to report to the House without a quorum of the committee being present. [Applause.]

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. May I ask the distinguished gentleman, whom we are all so glad to see back this morning, a question?

Mr. MANN. Certainly.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Does not the gentleman think it is always competent for the House to inquire into the question of fact and ascertain whether a quorum of a committee was present when a bill or resolution which it reports is presented for consideration?

Mr. MANN. Well, the custom has always been of the House, where a question of that sort was raised, for the Speaker to ask the man reporting the bill what action was taken by the committee or whether a quorum was present, and his answer was considered final.

Mr. POU. Mr. Speaker, my recollection is not entirely in accord with that of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. CAMPBELL] in respect to the reporting of bills under the Democratic control of this House when there was no quorum present. My recollection is very distinct that we kept a record of the meeting; that the first business in order was the calling of the roll, and that if a quorum was developed the committee proceeded with the transaction of business. If a quorum was not developed, then no business was transacted. I will not say that there was no exception to that procedure, but if there was I do not recollect it, and my recollection in this respect is corroborated by my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. GARRETT].

Now, Mr. Speaker, I submit this observation: Unless there is a quorum present, it is not a meeting of the committee, and the Speaker now has this statement of fact that this meeting of the committee was held, to which I, unfortunately, did not receive a summon and concerning which meeting I had no knowledge until after it was held, and the affirmative statement is made that a quorum was not present. It seems to me that there is nothing for the Speaker to do but to sustain the rights of the minority and sustain the rights of every Member of this House by sustaining the point of order.

The SPEAKER. The Chair is ready to rule.

The ruling of the Chair has been very much simplified by the frank admission of the chairman of the committee that there was no quorum present. Otherwise it would have raised a different question as to what evidence was necessary to contradict the official minutes or record of the meeting. But it is admitted that there was no quorum present, and therefore it seems to the Chair that the conclusion is very clear.

The Chair was for many years a member of the Committee on Appropriations, and it is the recollection of the Chair that that committee was scrupulous that there should always be a quorum present. That, of course, does not mean—and it has occurred to the Chair that it might have happened in this present instance—that a quorum of the committee was present every minute. Men would go in, and would go out, and come back. But the roll call must disclose that a quorum was present, and the Chair thinks that is the practice of most of the committees. But inasmuch as it is admitted here that there was no quorum present, the Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. CRAMTON. Of course, Mr. Speaker, it is to be understood that the second point of order that I presented is not passed upon in any way, it not being necessary?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. SINNOTT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the present consideration of Senate bill No. 3425, and I would like to arrange for some time for debate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Oregon asks unanimous consent for the present consideration of the bill S. 3425; but, after consideration, the Chair does not think that he has the right to recognize the gentleman for that purpose.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. DUNBAR, for seven days, on account of business.

To Mr. YOUNG, for one month.

To Mr. KETCHAM, for one week, on account of attending graduating exercises of his children.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had insisted upon its amendments to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate numbered 1 to the bill (H. R. 10101) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the House of Representatives, had agreed to the conference asked by the House and had appointed Mr. Phipps, Mr. Jones of Washington, and Mr. Glass as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTION PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT FOR HIS APPROVAL.

Mr. RICKETTS, from the Committee on Enrolled Bills, reported that June 16 they had presented to the President of the United States, for his approval, the following joint resolution and bills:

H. J. Res. 127. Joint resolution to reerect the statue of Abraham Lincoln upon its original site;

H. R. 11407. An act to amend an act entitled "An act for the retirement of employees in the classified civil service, and for other purposes," approved May 22, 1920;

H. R. 7052. An act for the relief of G. C. Caldwell;

H. R. 6313. An act authorizing the Secretary of Commerce to grant a right of way for a public highway to the county of Skagit, Wash.;

H. R. 11646. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Ohio River near Steubenville, Ohio;

H. R. 11265. An act to authorize the maintenance of a bridge constructed across the Pend Oreille River at the town of Usk, in the State of Washington;

H. R. 9859. An act making appropriations for the Post Office Department for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes;

H. R. 8785. An act granting the consent of Congress to the Mobridge Bridge Co., of Mobridge, S. Dak., to construct a pontoon bridge across the Missouri River;

H. R. 10330. An act to extend the time for the construction of a bridge across Lake St. Croix at or near the city of Prescott, in the State of Wisconsin;

H. R. 11345. An act authorizing the construction of a bridge across the Allegheny River at or near Freeport, Pa.; and

H. R. 11827. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county courts of Howard and Saline Counties, in the State of Missouri, to construct a bridge across the Missouri River.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 1 o'clock and 39 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until Monday, June 19, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ELLIOTT: A bill (H. R. 12060) providing additional funds to continue in effect the act providing for the care and treatment of persons afflicted with leprosy and to prevent the spread of leprosy in the United States; to the Committee on Appropriations.

By Mr. FAIRCHILD: A bill (H. R. 12061) to make the Star-Spangled Banner the national anthem of the United States of America, and to punish any disrespect to said national anthem or to the national flag of the United States of America; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. EDMONDS: A bill (H. R. 12062) to prevent the entering into ports of the United States of vessels upon which intoxicating liquors are sold; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts: Resolution (H. Res. 369) for the immediate consideration of House bill 12021; to the Committee on Rules.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas: A bill (H. R. 12063) granting a pension to Austin Thomas Dickerman; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. PARKER of New York: A bill (H. R. 12064) granting an increase of pension to Carrie M. Flandreau; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

6025. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of Takamine Manufacturing Corporation, New York City, relative to the pending tariff bill; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

6026. Also, petition of Metal Trades Council, Brooklyn, N. Y., urging passage of House bill 10967; to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

SENATE.

(Legislative day of Thursday, April 20, 1922.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

NAMING A PRESIDING OFFICER.

The Secretary, George A. Sanderson, read the following communication:

UNITED STATES SENATE,
Washington, D. C., June 19, 1922.

To the Senate:

Being temporarily absent from the Senate, I appoint Hon. WESLEY L. JONES, a Senator from the State of Washington, to perform the duties of the Chair this calendar day.

ALBERT B. CUMMINS,
President pro tempore.

Mr. JONES of Washington thereupon took the chair as Presiding Officer.

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11228) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). The bill is before the Senate as in Committee of the Whole and open to amendment.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will call the roll.

The roll was called, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Colt	Harreld	Lenroot
Borah	Culberson	Heflin	Lodge
Brandegee	Curtis	Johnson	McCormick
Broussard	Dial	Jones, N. Mex.	McCumber
Bursum	Dillingham	Jones, Wash.	McKinley
Calder	Edge	Kellogg	McLean
Cameron	Ernst	Kendrick	McNary
Capper	Fernald	King	Nelson
Caraway	Gooding	Ladd	Newberry

Nicholson	Poindexter	Smoot	Wadsworth
Norbeck	Pomerene	Spencer	Walsh, Mass.
Norris	Sheppard	Sterling	Walsh, Mont.
Oddie	Shortridge	Sutherland	Warren
Overman	Simmons	Townsend	Watson, Ind.
Phipps	Smith	Trammell	Willis

Mr. TRAMMELL. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] is absent on account of illness.

I was also requested to announce that the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] is absent by reason of illness.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS in the chair). Sixty Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, pending the final vote on the bill, which doubtless will be taken before long, I ask unanimous consent to offer for immediate consideration a concurrent resolution bearing on the bill, to which members of the committee, I believe, will make no objection. I seek to have action now in order that the concurrent resolution may be before the committee of the House when the bill goes to conference. I ask that the concurrent resolution may be read for the information of the Senate.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The concurrent resolution will be read.

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 27) was read, as follows:

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That a special committee, to be composed of six Members, to be appointed in equal number from the Committees on Naval Affairs of the two Houses and by the respective chairmen thereof, be and hereby is authorized and instructed to investigate the efficiency and economy of the administration of the United States Navy, including naval bases, navy yards, and stations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the concurrent resolution proposes to investigate questions of efficiency, and so forth. Would that include authority or jurisdiction to recommend the discontinuance of some of our navy yards?

Mr. McCORMICK. If the Senator will consider the list of naval stations, so called, which I introduced and had printed in the RECORD, he will conclude, I think, that not only ought their operation to be discontinued in many cases, but that the land itself ought to be sold. That can not be done without an act of Congress, of course. The Acting Secretary of the Navy, I believe, is of the opinion that many of the establishments should be closed, and the land in many instances may be sold. We shall never get action by Congress except upon the recommendation of such a committee. I am of the opinion that probably one-third of the naval establishments in continental United States are unnecessary.

Mr. BORAH. Does the resolution authorize the committee to make recommendations?

Mr. KING. It ought to be amended to include that.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, may we have the latter part of the concurrent resolution again read?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The concurrent resolution will be reported again.

The reading clerk again read the concurrent resolution.

Mr. JOHNSON. May I inquire of the author of the resolution if anything beyond the mere efficiency of the particular bases now established is sought?

Mr. McCORMICK. The language speaks for itself—economy and efficiency.

Mr. JOHNSON. When he says "economy and efficiency," is it in the mind of the author of the concurrent resolution that other bases may be suggested because the economy and efficiency of the particular existing ones may not meet the approval of the committee?

Mr. McCORMICK. Certainly. I think that would be embraced within the resolution. Let me ask if the Senator recalls the brief debate upon proving grounds, of which the Army and Navy now have six? I think no one believes that six proving grounds are necessary for the Army and Navy. If the Senator will turn to the list of stations published in the RECORD he will find that there are ammunition depots almost innumerable, with marine guards at each. Talk about the river and harbor pork barrel! There is a Navy pork barrel which has dotted the coast from Kittery to Key West and from Key West to Puget Sound with little naval stations.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. An establishment might be very efficient and yet not be necessary. The word "efficient," I think, does not cover what the Senator has in view.

Mr. JOHNSON. It was that point to which I was directing the author's attention. I know nothing about the pork barrel, sufficient or insufficient, of the Navy, but under the four-power pact it may be we have protection of naval bases and for our Navy from Great Britain and Japan; and if this be so, it may be a matter of some indifference exactly what the resolution provides; but it ought, if adopted, to be plain and unambiguous with the powers of the committee clearly defined.

Mr. DIAL. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from California yield to the Senator from South Carolina?

Mr. DIAL. I thought the Senator had concluded. I wish to object to the immediate consideration of the concurrent resolution.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. That terminates the whole matter and the concurrent resolution goes over.

Mr. McCORMICK. In that case I will ask that the concurrent resolution be referred to the appropriate committee.

Mr. BORAH. I want to say that I think I am in perfect harmony with the object in view and desired by the Senator from Illinois. I only suggest to him that in all probability the committee might not feel that it was authorized to do what it ought to do, and that is to recommend what should be done in reference to reducing the number of these establishments.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The concurrent resolution will be referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I wish to give notice that when the resolution offered by the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McCORMICK] is taken up for consideration I shall move, at the end of the resolution, to strike out the period and insert a comma, and add the following:

and to report to the Congress its findings; and further, to report the extent to which the naval air personnel and naval aircraft should be increased or substituted for the present regular line naval personnel and naval surface craft.

Mr. President, let me say that I quite agree that the public money is being unnecessarily wasted, and to some extent dissipated, in the maintenance of the Navy on its present lines. I am a great believer in the necessity and importance of naval defense, but I am not a believer in the present naval defense policy of this Government. One certain conclusion reached by the limitation of armament conference held at Washington last winter was that the nations of the world made no agreement upon the limitation of aviation armament. They held themselves free to maintain as large an air service and to build and maintain as large fleets of aircraft as they saw fit to establish. We know that Great Britain has been making great strides in developing her means of defense through aviation. With her usual vision and foresight she is developing the strongest and best air service in the world. We know that Japan has employed the best German experts to train her aviators and develop her aviation system; we also know that Japan is fully cognizant of the importance of this new means of defense.

Our Navy is and has been, notwithstanding congressional sentiments and existing laws, discouraging the development of naval aviation.

Even school children know that the World War proved that the old naval craft was beginning to decline as a means of national defense, while naval aircraft was in the future to supplant to a great extent seagoing surface craft. The proper amount of aircraft, amply manned, armed with sufficient bombs and other ammunition, and three coast aviation stations along the Atlantic, could completely wipe out our naval fleet before it had moved half way from New York to the Panama Canal. All well-informed national defense—not naval—authorities know this.

I think the time has come to realize that the old naval armaments are rapidly deteriorating and becoming useless; that the chief and best means of defending our coasts in the future are to be largely through the air; that we ought to get away from the policy of the old-line naval officers who will not recognize the dawn of a new day, and the value, indeed, prime necessity of this new means of defense, but cling to obsolete naval seacraft for the purpose of perpetuating themselves and their policies in power.

I wish to call attention to the need of Congress investigating this subject without regard to former positions or policies, and to take up the question as to whether we should not divert some of the money which we are now spending under our naval appropriations for the development of aviation and of an up-to-date active and energetic naval aviation personnel and naval aviation aircraft. One-half the money we appropriate for our Navy could be better spent in building up our national defense through a merchant marine and well-equipped naval air armament.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to suggest to the Senator from Massachusetts that, inasmuch as the resolution offered by the Senator from Illinois has been referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, it might be wise for him to ask to have his amendment printed and likewise referred to that committee.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I appreciate the suggestion of the Chair, and ask that my amendment be printed and referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE MUSCLE SHOALS PLANT.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to say that in the colloquy which I had on Saturday last with the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] I made a certain criticism on what I supposed the Senator from Alabama had said in regard to the Gorgas plant being included in the Ford offer at Muscle Shoals. Of course the Gorgas plant is included in the Ford offer, and I knew that the Senator from Alabama was opposed to eliminating it, although almost everyone who has considered it realizes that it makes the Ford offer a great deal more complex than it otherwise would be. However, the Senator from Alabama said at the time that he had made no reference to the Gorgas plant. I said then that if I found on examination of the RECORD that the Senator had not I should be very willing and very glad to admit that I was mistaken. I have since examined the RECORD, and I find that while the Senator from Alabama used the name "Gorgas," his reference was to General Gorgas. I suppose I must have misconstrued what he said. He made no reference to the Gorgas plant. In that respect I was in error, and I cheerfully correct the mistake.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I can understand how the Senator from Nebraska misunderstood the situation in our colloquy on Saturday. The Gorgas plant was named for General Gorgas, but in what I said I had reference to General Gorgas. I mentioned the name "Gorgas" two or three times, and I am sure that the Senator from Nebraska thought that I had reference to the Gorgas plant. I can very well understand how it was that he got the two references confused.

PETITIONS.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington) laid before the Senate resolutions of the thirty-seventh annual meeting of State and Provincial Health Authorities of North America, favoring the making of continued appropriations for combatting venereal diseases among civilians; the coordination of Federal, State, and local health agencies in controlling such diseases; and the transfer of legal and police activities incident to protecting service men from such diseases from the Interdepartmental Social Hygiene Board to the Department of Justice, which were referred to the Committee on the Judiciary.

He also laid before the Senate resolutions of the thirty-seventh annual meeting of State and Provincial Health Authorities of North America, favoring the making of a survey in certain foreign countries that control the production of narcotics relative to the real need for medicinal purposes of narcotic drugs, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. McKINLEY presented petitions numerously signed by sundry citizens of Chicago, Ill., praying that only a moderate duty be imposed in the pending tariff bill on ladies' and children's leather gloves, which were ordered to lie on the table.

Mr. CAPPER presented resolutions adopted by the Acacia Chapter of the Delphian Society, the Grandview Chapter Woman's Christian Temperance Union, and the congregation of the Immanuel Baptist Church, all of Kansas City, Kans., favoring the enactment of legislation creating a department of education, which were referred to the Committee on Education and Labor.

JUDICIAL DISTRICTS IN NEW YORK STATE.

Mr. NELSON, from the Committee on the Judiciary, to which was referred the bill (H. R. 6110) amending section 97 of the act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, reported it without amendment.

CLAIM OF HOBOKEN, N. J.

Mr. SPENCER. From the Committee on Claims, I report back favorably, without amendment, the resolution (S. Res. 254) to investigate the claim of the city of Hoboken, N. J., for losses as result of the occupation by the United States of certain docks, and so forth, on the Hudson River, formerly the property of the North German Lloyd Dock Co. and Hamburg-American Line Terminal & Navigation Co. I move that the resolution be referred to the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, as it proposes to make a payment out of the contingent fund.

The motion was agreed to.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. SPENCER:

A bill (S. 3728) authorizing the use of special canceling stamps in the post office at St. Louis, Mo.; to the Committee on Post Offices and Post Roads.

By Mr. KENDRICK:

A bill (S. 3729) for the relief of John F. White and Mary L. White (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Claims.

A bill (S. 3730) to provide for the filing of mineral claims in land offices of the United States (with accompanying papers); to the Committee on Public Lands and Surveys.

ADDRESS BY DR. NICHOLAS MURRAY BUTLER.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, last week Dr. Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia College, delivered in my home city, before the State bar association, a notable and timely speech on constitutional interpretation. I would like to have unanimous consent to have an abstract of that address printed in the RECORD, in 8-point type.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and that order will be made.

The abstract of the address is as follows:

ABSTRACT OF ADDRESS AT THE ANNUAL BANQUET OF THE NEW JERSEY STATE BAR ASSOCIATION, ATLANTIC CITY, N. J., FRIDAY, JUNE 16, 1922, BY NICHOLAS MURRAY BUTLER.

"The public press of yesterday reports the text of a speech made by the senior Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, before the annual convention of the American Federation of Labor at Cincinnati. This speech presents a view of our American Government that is so false, and announces a political program that is so revolutionary, as to justify, indeed to demand, quick reply. Senator LA FOLLETTE made an attack not only upon the American judiciary but upon the very corner stone of our American political system, which is the judicial protection of individual liberty and private rights against any encroachment even on the part of Government itself.

"Senator LA FOLLETTE is quoted as saying: 'A century and a half ago our forefathers shed their blood in order that they might establish on this continent a government deriving its just powers from the consent of the governed, in which the will of the people, expressed through their duly elected representatives, should be sovereign.'

"Our forefathers did nothing of the sort. They took good care to do something quite different.

"What our forefathers did was to retain sovereign power in the people of these United States and to erect a Government of strictly limited powers and functions, divided into an executive, a judicial, and a legislative branch. Each one of these branches of the Government rests upon one and the same constitutional foundation. Each in its own sphere represents the people and gives voice and effect to the public will. The motion that the legislative branch of the Government in some mysterious way more adequately represents the will of the people than does the executive or the judicial branch is without warrant either in legal theory or in our political history.

"The judicial branch of the Government represents the people's fundamental principles, their controlling ideals, and their continuing purpose. It brings, and justly brings, to the test fixed by these any and every legislative act that may be challenged. This power of judicial review and of judicial protection is distinctive American doctrine and constitutes America's greatest single contribution to the cause of free Government. Without it we should be swept hither and yon by the swiftly shifting tides of mere opinion and by the active propaganda of aggressive minorities. Destroy the principle of judicial protection of public law and of private rights and the America that we have known falls to pieces.

"The Executive, too, directly represents public opinion and the popular will. The President of the United States is the one public officer for whom the whole people vote. His constituency is the Nation; he speaks for the Nation and is responsible to the Nation.

"While in theory the legislative branch of the Government directly represents the people's will, it has in fact during recent years come to be less representative of public opinion and public interest than either the executive or the judicial branch of the Government. Parochialism, sectionalism, and various forms of self-interest and fanaticism have all operated to weaken the truly representative character of the legislative branch. It is now far from certain that when a State legislature or the Congress enacts a law that law has the support of public opinion. When the Congress meets, the public heart sinks, and when the Congress adjourns public pæans rise to heaven.

"The program announced by Senator LA FOLLETTE is not new, but it is ominous that it should have been cheered at a convention of American workingmen, for those of us who work have most to gain from the preservation of the American system of government and most to lose from the overthrow of the principle of judicial protection.

"Senator LA FOLLETTE's illustrations are unfortunate. The Congress has twice endeavored to deal with the problem of child labor in the wrong fashion. One may suspect that many of those who voted for these two measures know that they were probably, if not certainly, unconstitutional and would eventually be overturned by the courts. There need be no difficulty and not much delay in getting rid of child labor where it still exists by constitutional and American methods. It has been publicly stated that in all but three of the States there is already upon the statute book child labor legislation that is quite as satisfactory as that proposed by the Congress. Why not bring to bear the influence of public opinion upon the legislatures of the three backward States instead of endeavoring to overturn our American form of government by constitutional amendment or otherwise?

"The fact seems to be quite overlooked that while our Government is dual in form, the sovereignty of the American people is single and undivided. That sovereignty operates as truly through the legislatures of the several States when they perform their constitutional functions as through the Congress when it performs its constitutional functions. If, under the pressure of sentiment or self-interest or through sheer ignorance, our dual form of government should ever be destroyed and our States should become, like the ancient provinces of France, mere geographical names, then America would have ceased to be a Federal Republic and would have become an imperial state with all that that ominous term may well signify.

"Surely it is not fitting that in preaching doctrines so anti-American and so inimical to liberty and to justice, Senator LA FOLLETTE should continue to wear the livery of either of the historic political parties. Republicans and Democrats differ as to principles and policies, but they are united in their loyal devotion to the Constitution of the United States and to the American form of government that has been built upon it. If Mr. LA FOLLETTE wishes to wage war upon that form of government, we shall provide him with all the fight he can stomach. Let him, however, in all fairness, put on the livery which he should wear and take both the name and the uniform of a destructionist and a revolutionary. Let him stop boring from within and be compelled to attack America openly from without."

ADDRESS BY SENATOR RANSDELL.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have before me a copy of an address delivered by the able senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] before the International Convention of the Knights of St. John at Cleveland, Ohio, on June 18, 1922, on the subject of "The United States leads the world in divorce." It is a very timely address, and I happen to know that the Senator has given a great deal of thought and time to the study of this question. His address, therefore, I think will be very interesting to Senators as well as to the public, and I ask unanimous consent to have it incorporated in the RECORD in 8-point type.

There being no objection, the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type as follows:

ADDRESS OF HON. J. E. RANSDELL, UNITED STATES SENATOR FROM LOUISIANA, BEFORE THE INTERNATIONAL CONVENTION OF THE KNIGHTS OF ST. JOHN, CLEVELAND, OHIO, JUNE 18, 1922.

UNITED STATES LEADS WORLD IN DIVORCE.

Senator RANSDELL spoke as follows:

"It is my intention to discuss to-night what in my opinion is one of the most important problems facing the American people: The divorce evil. For many years I have given the deepest thought to this subject, and have watched with a heavy heart our steadily and ominously increasing divorce rate, which to-day is greater than that of any other nation. We lead the world in divorces to-day. Japan, which for many years had this unenviable distinction, has yielded to the Christian United States of America.

"This statement is founded on the divorce statistics for 1916, published by the United States Census Bureau in 1919, which gives the number of our divorces for that year as 112,036, or a little more than 112 per 100,000 population. If we exclude from this population Roman Catholics, who, as we all know, are not permitted by the church to divorce, although in rare cases the Pope declares marriages to have been null and void ab initio, the rate rises to 134 divorces for each 100,000 net population. Statistics for Japan show that her divorce rate, which has been steadily decreasing since 1893, when it granted 116,775 divorces, or 233 per 100,000, amounted to only 60,254, or 109 per 100,000 population, in 1916, and in 1917 Japan's divorce rate was 55,812, or only 100 per 100,000 population.

DESTROY DIVORCE OR IT WILL DESTROY US.

"We hear every day warnings being uttered against our enormously increasing divorce rate by prominent public men and women of every denomination and sect. Are such expressions of alarm impelled by casual or exceptional conditions? Most emphatically I say that they are fully justified by the condictions prevalent in our land to-day. Nearly everyone who has given the divorce problem the slightest study admits that it is one which must be solved, and that promptly. We must either destroy divorce, or it will destroy us.

"In the United States divorce is spreading with alarming rapidity. It has permeated every walk of life and is prevalent among every class of people. The total number of divorces in 1867 was 9,937, or 27 per 100,000 population. Forty years later, in 1906, there were 72,062 divorces, or 86 per 100,000 population. Fifty years later, in 1916, there were 112,036 divorces, or 112 per 100,000 population. Thus in actual numbers there were more than eleven times as many divorces granted in 1916 as in 1867, or, allowing for the increased population, divorce had increased 415 per cent. To put it in another way, in 1867 there was 1 divorce for every 3,666 people, while in 1916 there was 1 for every 895 people.

"A comparison of our divorce statistics with those of Japan shows that in Japan the number decreased from 282 per 100,000 to 100, nearly 200 per cent, in the last 30 years, whereas in the United States the number increased in 50 years from 27 to 112 per 100,000, or more than 400 per cent. This is certainly a very favorable comparison to Japan and one of which the United States can well be ashamed.

ONE DIVORCE TO FIVE MARRIAGES BY MIDDLE OF CENTURY.

"If divorces multiply at the same rate in the future as in the past—and there is every indication that they will increase faster—then before the middle of this century we will have annually in the United States 275 divorces per 100,000 population, or 1 divorce for every 5 marriages. In 1887 there was 1 divorce for every 17 marriages; in 1906, 1 for every 12 marriages; in 1916, 1 for every 9 marriages, and at the same rate we will have in 1946 the appalling figure of 1 divorce for every 5 marriages.

"Our closest competitors in Europe are Switzerland, with 40 divorces annually per 100,000 population, and France with 33 per 100,000 population, according to the census of 1910, which are the latest figures available for the whole country.

"England stands in bold contrast with this country. In 1919, with a population of 38,000,000, she granted only 5,763 divorces, or 15 per 100,000, while the United States in 1916 granted 112,036 divorces, or 112 per 100,000 population. During the 20 years ending 1906 Ireland granted only 19 divorces, or an average of less than 1 absolute divorce per year for her entire population of about 4,500,000 souls. These are the latest statistics available.

"As a matter of fact, it has been said that the United States granted twice as many divorces during the last 35 years as all the rest of Christendom combined; yes; actually more than two times as many divorces among 100,000,000 Americans as among the 400,000,000 souls of Europe and other Christian countries.

"Divorce is absolutely prohibited in Italy and Spain, while the Latin-American countries, such as the Argentine Republic, Brazil, Peru, Chile, and others, have similar laws. A legal separation, however, without the right to remarry, is recognized in all of these jurisdictions.

"In Canada the important Provinces of Quebec, Ontario, Prince Edward, and the northwest territories have no divorce laws, though divorce may be obtained in exceptional cases by special act of the Canadian Parliament. From 1867 to 1922—a period of 55 years—these Provinces rendered only 431 absolute divorces. The total number of divorces granted during 1916 in Canada, for the whole country, containing 7,206,643 people, was only 67, or less than 1 per 100,000 population. These people are our next-door neighbors and descendants of the same European ancestors, have substantially the same religious beliefs, live under the same conditions, and struggle against the same adversities as ourselves. Why should the divorce rate be so enormous in the United States and so inconsequential in Canada?

COUNTRIES RESTRICTING DIVORCE HAVE FEWER ILLEGAL BIRTHS.

"I have recently seen statements to the effect that countries having stringent divorce laws, or laws absolutely prohibiting divorce, have a greater number of illegitimate births than countries having easy divorce laws. These statements are not sustained by citation of authority or by accurate census reports, and I unhesitatingly deny their correctness. Statistics on this subject are very hard to secure, but so far as I can ascertain they not only disprove the assertion but show that illegitimacy is greater in countries where divorce is easy. In fact, Ireland, which has practically no divorce, has the lowest illegitimacy rate among all the countries of Europe.

"It can not be gainsaid that divorce destroys the home, and the home is the base and foundation of the State; hence we must stop divorce or ruin the State, which can not continue to exist if its base is allowed to crumble and fall. While many excellent people are divorced, and some of them make new homes, the inevitable trend of divorce is to break up many more homes than it builds up, and to materially reduce the number of children. When marriage is dissolved the true home ceases to exist, the parents and children are separated, and the sweet ties that bind father and mother to their offspring and to each other are broken forever.

WHILE ROME ABSTAINED FROM DIVORCE IT PROSPERED.

"Let us turn to the history of Rome, the greatest Republic and Empire of the ancient world, examine her customs, take warning from her example, and try to profit by her experience. A careful and painstaking research into the history of Rome convinces the investigator that during the early times of that nation the marriage tie was considered inviolate. For 520 years there was no such thing as divorce in Rome. Up to the latter days of the Republic the principal form of marriage in use in Rome was the confarreatio, which was essentially a religious ceremony. The bride and bridegroom, in the presence of the Roman priest and 10 witnesses, partook of a cake made of old Italian grain called far; a sacrifice was offered to the gods that they might look auspiciously upon the marriage, and the skin of the victim was stretched over two seats, upon which the wedded couple had to sit. The sublimity and perpetuity of the Roman religious marriage are beautifully expressed by the jurisconsult, Modentinus, who defined it 'a lifelong fellowship of all divine and human rights.'

"The early patriarchial family occupied a prominent and powerful position in Rome. It was the bone and sinew of the nation; the temple where the husband and wife and children worshipped the household gods; around it was cast the sacred mantle of religion, and one of the essential elements of the religious marriage was its indissolubility. The family was the integral unit of the government; a State within a State; and Rome owed its primitive solidarity and strength in a great measure to the unity and perpetuity of the Roman family.

WEALTH AND LUXURY BROUGHT RIOT OF DIVORCE.

"But gradually the wealth of the world was poured into the lap of Rome; philosophical skepticism and oriental superstitions undermined the morals of the people. Luxury and sensuality went hand in hand, and the Romans, enervated by a life of ease, became victims of the most depraved vices. Conjugal fidelity became the scoff of the poet, marriage vows the target for the shafts of the satirist, and womanly virtue the laughing stock of the servile courtier.

"Marriage lost its sacred character and became a civil contract. The confarreatio developed into the free marriage, in which the wife was no longer under control of the husband, and which might be dissolved by mutual consent. The ease with which divorces might be secured was the strongest inducement to enter into rash and ill-considered marriages. In this regard Gibbon, volume 7, page 349, Decline and Fall, says:

"In three centuries of prosperity and corruption, this principle (divorce) was enlarged to frequent practice and pernicious abuse. Passion, interest, or caprice suggested daily motives for the dissolution of marriage; a word, a sign, a message, a letter, the mandate of a freedman declared the separation; the most tender of human connections was degraded to a transient society of profit or pleasure. * * * A specious theory is confuted by this free and perfect experiment, which demonstrates that the liberty of divorce does not contribute to happiness and virtue. The facility of separation would destroy all mutual confidence and inflame every trifling dispute; the minute differences between a husband and a stranger, which might so easily be removed might still more easily be forgotten; and a matron who in five years can submit to the embraces of eight husbands must cease to reverence the chastity of her own person.

"Shortly before the Christian era, after marriage had become a civil contract, things went from bad to worse. Cicero repudiates his wife, Terentia, while Augustus forces the husband of Lydia to divorce her that he may have her himself. One woman has 10 husbands, according to Martial; another, relates Juvenal, has 8 husbands in five years, while St. Jerome states that there is in Rome a woman who has married her twenty-third husband, she herself being his twenty-first wife. Ovid and Pliny and Pliny the younger had three wives; Cæsar and Anthony four; Sulla and Pompey five.

"The evil was national in prevalence. It existed not only among the great but also among the lowly. It permeated every stratum of society, and was widespread in every class of people. While doubtless there were many instances of the practice of the domestic virtues, the Roman life, as a whole, was rotten to its very core. From this time on, to the reign of Constantine, the depravity of the morals of the Empire of the Cæsars baffles description. Suffice it to say that during this period Rome was a vast slough of iniquity, reeking with the stench of every form of immorality.

DIVORCE, IMMORALITY, CHILDLESSNESS SAPPED ROME'S NATIONAL LIFE.

"As a result of this riot of divorce and immorality, celibacy, childlessness, and infanticide rivaled one another as the reigning evils. 'The marriage relation,' says Professor Seeley, 'became so intolerably disagreeable that men shunned it as they would have shunned the plague.' Not only were the Romans weakened physically and mentally, not only was the strength of their bodies and the vigor of their minds sapped by dissipation, but the corruption of the national life caused a most alarming decrease in population.

"Mr. James Bryce, former ambassador from Great Britain to the United States, in his book, 'Marriage and Divorce,' page 63, states that, concurrently with and following the change from the old, formal religious marriage in Rome to the free contract, marriage fell from the high esteem in which it had been held and that 'Men grew less willing to marry; women as well as men less and less faithful. Fewer children were born. As neither religious nor moral associations sanctified the relation, and as it could be terminated with pleasure, it was lightly entered upon, and this very heedlessness, making it frequently a failure, caused it to be no less lightly dissolved. Thus social habits and a standard of opinion were formed, against which the reforming efforts of Augustus and his successors could do little, and which resisted even the far more powerful efforts of Christianity, until Roman society itself went to pieces in the West and passed into new forms in the East.'

BARBARIANS GUARD ROMAN FRONTIERS.

"Rome was then forced to hire barbarians to guard her frontiers and repel her enemies. The Emperor Probus inaugurated this system by enrolling 16,000 Alemanni in his legions, and the Roman Empire was eventually compelled to depend for its very existence for the most part upon the much despised barbarian who at heart hated the very name of the country he was defending.

"Thus the final disintegration and destruction of the Western Empire was caused not by a foreign army but by its own. For Rome had no Romans left to fight her battles. History relates this in no uncertain words. And this was the logical and inevitable result of divorce coupled with luxury and the irreligion resulting therefrom.

"Let us take this lesson to heart and apply it to our own country and our own times. We are as rich and as powerful as Rome in her palmiest days, and the census informs us that only about 40 per cent of our people profess any religion. If luxury, divorce, and irreligion caused the fall of Rome, how can America hope to escape unless we profit by her example and mend our ways before it is too late?

"Simultaneous with the change in the sacred character of the Roman marriage came the belief that the marriage tie could be broken; and once this idea was prevalent, frequent divorces became only a matter of time. As soon as the seal of religion was removed from marriage it became a mere transient union.

"The condition prevailing in Rome is true of modern times. As long as the Catholic view of marriage was accepted throughout Christian countries and its sacramental character acknowledged, divorce was unknown. But when the specious doctrine that marriage was a civil contract or civil status, in which the church has no concern, was promulgated by the early reformers the sanctity and indissolubility of that relation was denied.

UNITED STATES MUST TAKE WARNING FROM ROME'S DOWNFALL.

"We have seen how in Rome celibacy, childlessness, and infanticide followed in the wake of divorce. The grim statements of Petronius and other Roman writers of the Empire sound strangely like the language of Dr. M. S. Iseman, who has given the subject deep study and investigation, and who says in his book, 'Race Suicide,' page 133, referring to this unnatural crime:

"Slowly and surely the contagion has spread over the land until it has honeycombed the entire Nation. The practice is just as prevalent in New Orleans as it is in Boston. It is as unblushing in Atlanta as it is in Providence; as common in Richmond as it is in St. Louis. The Anglo-Saxon cradle is just as bare of babies in Denver as it is in Chicago, and the little ones who call their father 'Dad-dad' are just as scarce in San Francisco as they are in Cleveland. There are as few babies born in the old Colonial mansions facing the Battery at Charleston as there are in the palaces lining Fifth Avenue.

"Let these words strike home. In Rome with the frequency of divorce and the growth of luxury came childlessness and infanticide, and on the heels of these twin evils followed the gradual extinction of the native Roman stock and the depopulation and downfall of the Roman Empire. Shall not the United States take warning from Rome's example?

PROMINENT DIVINES URGE MORAL TRAINING.

"I recently wrote to some of the most prominent divines of the different denominations in the United States, asking them to give me their suggestions as to the plan we should adopt to curb this ever-increasing evil, and quote below from a few of the answers received.

"Rev. F. S. Idleman, of the Central Church of Disciples of Christ, New York City, writes me as follows:

"The first remedy which must be sought to curb this ever-increasing menace to our civilization must be in the education of our youth. The study of ethics ought to be compulsory in every public school in America. Unless children get an early impression of the necessity of the stability of marriage and the safeguard it brings to the home and to the Nation, we shall continue to have increasing harvests of silly girls and muddle-headed young men who have gotten easy and cheap impressions of marriage and rush into it without previous thought. I believe most thoroughly also in the old publication of bans, as it was called, the method of announcement for three weeks of an intended marriage of any young couple.

"Rev. Rufus M. Jones, a member of the Society of Friends, Haverford, Pa., writes:

"There is such care exercised before marriage is entered into that it almost invariably proves to be a happy union, and we have no expectation ever of having members of the Society of Friends divorced.

"The Quaker families endeavor to furnish a genuine home life for their children, and the parents keep in very close touch and contact with their children as they develop. The whole method of marriage procedure is one that carries with it serious solemnity. I feel sure the marriage tie will never be sacred until every effort is made to help young people realize what an important step they propose to take.

"It is fair to assume from this statement that Quakers train their members so thoroughly in religious principles that they are able to withstand the temptation of divorce.

"Rev. W. Sockman, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, New York City, says:

"In my opinion, the frequency of divorce is another symptom of the increasing restlessness of our day. Much of the so-called incompatibility is simply the lack of ability to remain loyal to any one affection. There is a general need of increasing the moral stability of our people.

"Another prevention, in my opinion, more important is a law regarding a sufficient time to elapse between remarriage after divorce. We ought to make sure that no passing passion has upset our home. If we enforce a period of a year or more, we may prevent some of our divorces."

"Rev. Harry F. Ward, of the Methodist Federation for Social Service, New York City, advises:

"My judgment is that the divorce question is fundamentally the marriage question. We shall not avoid a high divorce rate and its disastrous effects upon our society until we have better legislation, better regulation of marriage, and better preparation for it. The time to remedy the divorce fever is before the marriage takes place.

"Undoubtedly Reverend Ward believes in such healthy moral training of people that they will not readily succumb to the fever of divorce.

"Rev. A. W. Taylor, of the Board of Temperance and Social Welfare, Church of Christ (Disciples), Indianapolis, Ind., says:

"The first necessity is a revival of the religious sense of obligation. The church, the school, and the editorial should promote it, basing their argument on the necessity of an unbroken American home.

"Dr. John W. Langdale, of the New York Avenue Methodist Episcopal Church, Brooklyn, N. Y., gives his views as follows:

"It is impossible to insist too strongly that the family is an institution that can not be superseded. Women, especially, may well wage relentless opposition upon all proposals to tamper with the sacred perpetuity of the marriage vows. While some can undoubtedly do more in a single life, for the average woman no career contributes as much to the world's welfare as that of motherhood. Wherefore, we should so honor the homemaking woman that she will never have an occasion to suppose that there is more reason for rendering distinction to the artist, the missionary, the writer, teacher, or physician.

"The divorce problem is primarily a marriage problem. Most divorces are of marriages that never should have taken place. Followers of Christ are bound to frown upon the present flippant conception of marriage. Marriage is the most popular jest of the drama. A count of a miscellaneous lot of comic papers showed that marriage furnished 71 per cent of the jokes. Popular fiction no longer ends with its characters married in forevermore happiness, but deals with martial unhappiness and the pleasure of irregular relationships. Ministers with their cheap sermonettes on love, courtship, and marriage are not guiltless. The European custom of publishing bans has this to commend it, that it makes impossible the clandestine wedding of impulse where a passing fancy may be mistaken for an undying affection. We need a national divorce law framed under the recollection that laws can not be enacted much above the standards of the people without inviting greater evils.

"This is a powerful statement against the evil of divorce from a leader in the great Methodist church. His views are entitled to serious consideration.

"Rev. Charles R. Brown, dean of the Divinity School of Yale University, New Haven, Conn., writes:

"The fact that so many marriages are thoughtlessly and hastily made increases the number of divorces. The idea in 'the publication of the bans' was a good one, and inasmuch as society is asked to sanction and to accept the married relation it has a clear right to ask that people shall in some appropriate way make known their intentions publicly and a ceratin number of days before the marriage is to be accomplished.

"Rev. Henry E. Cobb, of the West End Collegiate Church, New York City, says:

"I question whether the remedy can be effected by legislation. Divorce and its kindred social evils can only be restrained by a deep moral conviction of the sanctity of the home and the responsibility of the married life.

MARRIAGE TIES CONSIDERED TOO LIGHTLY.

"Particular attention is called to the fact that every one of these clergymen, some of the most prominent men of their denominations, places the greatest stress upon the absolute necessity for educating our people to realize the sanctity and importance of the marriage relationship before it is entered into.

"Rev. Mr. Idleman feels that the first remedy must be in the education of our youth, and recommends the compulsory study of ethics in every public school in America. He firmly believes that unless children get an early impression of the necessity for the stability of the marriage and the safeguard it brings to the home and to the Nation we shall continue to have young people who have gotten easy and cheap impressions of marriage rush into it without previous thought. You will agree with me that there is a great deal of food for thought in the conclusions he draws.

"Rev. Mr. Sockman thinks there is a general need of increasing the moral stability of our people and urges a law requiring sufficient time to elapse before remarriage after divorce.

"Several of these clergymen believe that we should enforce a sufficient delay between the time the marriage is announced and the time the ceremony is performed. Some of them recommend the old-fashioned publication of the bans. I heartily believe that something of this nature is necessary to curtail our huge crop of thoughtless, runaway marriages, which almost invariably end in the divorce courts. Already some of our States have taken matters in hand and enacted laws to cope with the situation. Maine has a law requiring that the parties intending to marry shall cause notice of their intention to be recorded in the office of the clerk of the town in which they reside at least five days before the marriage certificate is granted. The statute provides that the clerk shall deliver to the parties a certificate specifying the time when such intentions were entered with him, and this must be delivered to the minister or magistrate before he begins to solemnize the marriage. I understand that New Hampshire and Massachusetts have similar laws. Let us hope that our other States will follow the lead of these illustrious pioneers.

"There is no doubt that the evil underlying our divorce problem is the tendency of our people to consider the marriage relationship too lightly. Something must be done to bring about a return to our old-fashioned conception of the sacredness of the marriage tie. Two generations ago there was a general, although not invariable, reluctance to label oneself as a divorced person; the idea was socially and personally repugnant and somewhat of a stigma attached to anyone seeking rupture of the matrimonial ties. At that time the influence of religion on the people was far greater than it is to-day and they were more prone to follow the teachings of Christ in this respect. To bring them back to proper regard for the sanctity of their marriage vows we must inculcate in the minds of the coming generation love and reverence for our blessed Savior and His teachings.

"In this connection, I quote below a few lines from an address made recently by Vice President Calvin Coolidge, referring to the lack of religious teaching in American colleges.

"If our colleges have yielded to the spirit of commercialism, if they have swung away from their original moorings of liberal culture, they have, to some extent ceased to fulfill their original purpose of supporting the foundations of government and religion. The hasty conclusions by those who are on the outside are not to be given too much weight, but there is considerable public opinion, which is by no means lacking in expression, that there is a tendency in some of our colleges to give too much attention to the criticism of the administration of government and too little attention to the examination and demonstration of the soundness of the fundamental principles of free institutions. There is some feeling also that they are not giving effective instruction in the truths of religion.

"These are very wise words of our able patriotic Vice President. They call particular attention to a most important matter in connection with education, the principal purpose of which is to make real sincere men and women, and everything he says about religion in colleges has a direct bearing on the subject of divorce.

DIVERSITY IN LAWS LARGELY TO BLAME.

"Many students of divorce assert that the great diversity in the laws of the different States of the Union contributes largely to the existing state of affairs. A study of this feature of the question compels me to give a great deal of weight to their statements. In all the history of marriage and divorce legislation, I find no more strange and paradoxical situation than that existing in the United States. Since the family is the fundamental unit of the State, it would seem that the laws governing its foundation and dissolution should be written with the most scrupulous care as would befit a subject which so vitally concerns the well-being of the Nation. The contrary, however, appears to be the case. Mr. James Bryce, in his book on 'Marriage and Divorce,' page 51, says:

"The legislation which the thirteen colonies and the newer States added to the Union since 1789 have produced presents the largest and strangest and perhaps the saddest body of legislative experiments in the sphere of the family law which free, self-governing communities have ever tried.

"Our marriage and divorce laws are framed according to the whim of the legislators of each individual State, and the result is a veritable patchwork, which runs the gamut of matrimonial delinquencies from that of South Carolina, which grants no divorce, and New York, which grants divorce for adultery and desertion only, to that of the State of Washington, which permits absolute divorce for 'any cause deemed by the court sufficient.'

"In some States marriages between blacks and whites are absolutely void, again they are prohibited under pain of punishment, and in other States they are permitted. The laws in regard to void and voidable, bigamous and incestuous marriage vary so that hardly any two States are alike.

"In Virginia a marriage between a negro and a white person is void, but this is hardly a bar, because should it be desired to contract a marriage, the parties have only to cross the Potomac River into the District of Columbia and have the nuptials celebrated in the Capital City of our Nation, the home of our Presidents, and the political center of the United States. In New York a gilded fool may saddle himself with an immoral woman as a wife, because of a secret and imprudent expression of a present intent to consider her as such. But in Arizona, if a man forms an immoral connection with a woman and lives with her as his concubine, the union being wholly meretricious from its inception, at the end of one year she, by force of law, without any intent on his part, becomes his lawful wife.

"To give more than a hasty glance at our divorce laws would be to tax both your time and patience. Adultery is cause for divorce in all of the 48 States, save South Carolina. Physical cruelty, and that most elastic phrase "mental cruelty," is a cause in 46 States. In 1916 cruelty was resorted to in 30,752 cases, an increase of 75.8 per cent over 1906, when 17,496 marriages were dissolved on this ground.

"All the States save South Carolina grant divorce for desertion. This easy means of dissolving the marriage tie is fast increasing in popularity.

"There were 27,407 homes broken up on this ground in 1906, while in 1916 there were 39,990.

"Some of our States require a residence of two years before a divorce can be obtained, while others require only six months.

QUESTION OF JURISDICTION CAUSES GREAT CONFUSION.

"Beyond all divorce laws there arises the much-mooted question of divorce jurisdiction. To what extent are the divorce decrees of one State to be recognized in the other States of the Union? This question is so technical that it is impossible to enter upon a thorough discussion of it now. Suffice it to say that the Supreme Court of the United States has decided that under certain conditions a State may refuse to recognize the extraterritorial effect of a divorce granted in another State. The result has been confusion worse confounded. The eminent jurist, Judge Noah Davis, in the North American Review, volume 139, page 39, gives an excellent illustration of the evils caused by the diversity of our laws on marriage and divorce:

"A is married in New York where he had resided for years, and has a family and is the owner of real and other estate. He desires a divorce and goes to Indiana where that thing is cheap and easy. Upon complying with some local rule and with no actual notice to his wife he gets a decree of divorce and presently is married in that State to another wife, who brings him other children. He again acquires new estates; but, tiring of his second wife, he deserts her and goes to California, where in a brief space he is again divorced, and then remarries again, forming a new family and acquiring new real and personal estates. In a few years his fickle taste changes again and he returns to New York, where he finds his first wife has obtained a valid divorce for his adulterous marriage in Indiana, which sets her free and forbids his marrying again during her lifetime. He then slips into an Eastern State, takes a residence, acquires real property there, and after a period gets judicially freed from his California bonds. He returns to New York, takes some new affinity, crosses the New Jersey line, and in an hour is back in New York enjoying so much of his estate as the courts have not adjudged to his first wife, and gives new children to the world. * * * He dies intestate. Now, what is the legal status and condition of the various citizens he has given to our common country, and what can the States of their birth and domicile do for them? A few words will show how difficult and important these questions are. The first wife's children are doubtless legitimate and heirs to his estate everywhere. The Indiana wife's children are legitimate there, but probably illegitimate everywhere else. The California children are legitimate there and in New York, that marriage having taken place after his first wife had obtained her divorce, but illegitimate in Indiana and elsewhere; while the second crop of New Yorkers are legitimate in the Eastern States and in New York and illegitimate in Indiana and California. There is real and personal property in each of these States. There are four widows each entitled to dower and distribution somewhere, and to some extent, and a large number of surely innocent children, whose legitimacy and property are at stake. All these legal embarrassments spring from want of uniformity of laws on a subject which should admit of no more diversity than the question of citizenship itself.

"Divorce is never the result of accident. It can not just happen. Somebody must plan for it, scheme for it, work for it, and pay for it. If a criminal should take his choice as to the State in which he should be tried he would beyond question pick the one with the most lenient laws in regard to the particular crime of which he was guilty, hoping to receive an easy sentence or to be set free. We would revolt against such a proceeding, yet the very same state of affairs exists with respect to our divorce laws, and no one moves a finger. Men and women who go about breaking up homes are worse than criminals.

SOUTH CAROLINA WITH NO DIVORCE A SHINING EXAMPLE.

"Amid the shifting sands of divorce legislation throughout the United States is found one rock that, Gibraltarlike, stands immovable. The State of South Carolina—all honor to her—grants no absolute divorce. The charge has been repeatedly made that in that State the very stringent divorce law has produced great hardships; that it has been conducive to immorality; and has been a striking example of the evil effects of such a prohibition. These statements are not based upon facts. They are made by those who never thoroughly investigated conditions in South Carolina; who speak from hearsay and not from personal experience. It does not appear that these assertions are backed by a single iota of truth, and I am at a loss to know upon what grounds this conclusion is based. Let us see what the people of South Carolina think about their law. We find this no-divorce law spoken of in the most eulogistic terms by her courts. Judge J. O'Neil, of the South Carolina Court of Appeals, in the case of McCarthy v. McCarthy (2 Strobhart, 6), uses this emphatic language:

"It has received the entire sanction and acquiescence of the bench, the bar, the legislature, and the people. The legislature has nobly adhered to the injunction 'those whom God hath joined together let no man put asunder.' The working of this stern policy has been to the good of the people and the State in every respect.

"Judge J. Richland Witherspoon, in the case of McCreedy v. Davis (44 S. C. 195), before the Supreme Court of South Carolina, praises in the strongest terms the law that protects the sanctity of the home.

"I have received a number of letters from the Protestant clergy of South Carolina, and they are unanimously of the opinion that the no-divorce law works admirably. The two United States Senators from South Carolina indignantly deny the charge that the prohibition of divorce has caused any increase in immorality. On the contrary, it is their unalterable conviction that the no-divorce law, which is the proud boast of their State, has been an inestimable boon, has placed the family on a higher plane, and has safeguarded the home, the bedrock of the State. A prominent Catholic clergyman of South Carolina wrote me on the subject as follows:

"We have no divorce law. There is still a strong sentiment against it. It may be said that some are leading double matrimonial lives. I suppose it is true, but if such a condition exists I have heard no more of it here than I did in the District of Columbia and in Maryland. Divorce laws do not lessen immorality. I am convinced that they increase it. Here in South Carolina the law does not wink at men who try to break up homes. The law does not put its seal on affinities begotten of sensual passion.

"If you hear that men are leading double lives in South Carolina because of no-divorce laws, you can deny it. If it were so, I am sure I should know something of it.

THOUSANDS OF INNOCENT CHILDREN MADE TO SUFFER.

"The most pitiful aspect of the present divorce situation is the suffering inflicted on the thousands of innocent little children of these divorcees. The figures issued by the Census Bureau show that 41,009 of the cases of 1916 reported having children. If we assume an average of 4 children to each case, we find that there were about 164,036 children whose homes were broken up during that one year without fault of their own. What can we expect of them when they grow up?

PRESS ADDING FUEL TO FLAME.

"In connection with this subject I have been very much impressed and shocked at the great prominence given to divorce cases in the daily papers. Few issues of many of our leading papers fail to contain under big headlines an account more or less salacious of a divorce trial in some of our big cities, giving the most intimate details, baring secrets of weak human hearts to the public gaze, pandering to depraved tastes, making suggestions that would probably never have entered the minds of other couples, and thereby becoming an agency, not of legitimate, proper news, which is the function of a newspaper, but making themselves the agents of Satan. This is unfortunate, unnecessary, contrary to the proper apostolate of the press, which should stand for the good, the true, the beautiful in all things, and never for what is low and vicious and depraved. There is no agency in our land more powerful than the press. Its printed words reach millions of hearers who never enter a church or read a good book, and never receive a moral lesson except what the press teaches. There is enough decent news to make the papers readable without going into the parlousness of the criminal courts and flaunting all the vicious immoralities of some of our great cities' "four hundred" in their divorce proceedings. It would no doubt take a long time to bring about effective remedies in our marriage and divorce laws, but there is one thing that we can do immediately, and that is to refuse to support newspapers which publish demoralizing and filthy news. A decent reading public can force a respectable press. Thank heaven, there are many good papers which do not pollute their columns with anything improper. Subscribe to those papers, read them only, permit only such papers to enter your household, and everyone of you will become an agent in promoting public morals.

DIVORCE TOO RESPECTABLE.

"Indeed, I doubt if laws would go far toward curing this disease unless we can have positive prohibition of divorce such as prevails in South Carolina, Spain, Italy, Argentine Republic, etc., or such practical prohibition as exists in Ireland. Public sentiment in many parts of Canada is strong against divorce, and it has been very hard to dissolve the marriage tie there. We must in some way create a similar sentiment against divorce in this country. It is considered too respectable now. We must frown upon it, and people must look askance at those who are divorced.

CHURCHES MUST UNITE TO CHANGE PUBLIC SENTIMENT.

"The churches must all join in an earnest effort to so train their members in the love of God and home that all their predilections will be unfriendly to divorce. The effect would be marked if all ministers of the gospel should refuse to perform the marriage ceremony when either of the contracting parties had been divorced, in which case, if the wedding must take place it could be contracted before an officer of the law and not an officer of God.

"The churches should sink their differences in so far as marriage and divorce are concerned and present a united front against it. Their followers should be taught to observe the sanctity of marriage, to look upon it as the most sacred and solemn step a human being can take, to understand that no separation with a right to remarry should ever be granted, that for better or worse they are married for life, and that God's blessing is sure to follow all who obey his laws on this most important of earthly matters—the only one which relates directly to the procreation of children and the perpetuation of the human race.

ALL HONOR TO CATHOLIC CHURCH.

"In conclusion, permit me to appeal to you, my fellow Catholics and Knights of St. John, to uphold the hands of mother church in her great fight to sustain the indissolubility and sanctity of the marriage tie. She has ever waged a fearless and most admirable fight against this dread malady—divorce—which seriously threatens the destruction of our Republic. The Catholic Church deserves for this patriotic task the heartfelt praise and gratitude not only of her own children but of all true Americans who believe in the great mission for the welfare of mankind intrusted to our Republic by the God of hosts. No country of modern times has done as much for the uplift of humanity, for the spirit of free institutions throughout the world, for the general betterment of men and women of all lands, as our own wonderful country—the United States of America. We all love the Union and are proud of its glorious history. We feel that it has ever done and ever will do great and good things for its own people and for those of every other country on earth. Our country must be maintained in its pristine strength and purity to continue its great mission for humanity. Divorce is the greatest enemy of the home, the base and foundation of the Republic, and all who wish to save the Republic should unite to destroy this enemy and save the home."

SLACK-WATER SYSTEM OF THE OHIO RIVER.

Mr. ERNST. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD a resolution which was adopted by the council of the city of Louisville, Ky., in reference to the slack-water system of the Ohio River.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas the council of the city of Louisville is informed that water transportation on the Ohio River is developing with considerable rapidity, but that its greater expansion and permanent operation depends upon completion of the slack-water system as yet only partially constructed; and

Whereas the city of Louisville has already begun to be extensively used by large manufacturing companies who are shipping their products here by barge as a distributing point for inland destinations, and said service would greatly increase and widely extend its benefits to shippers and consumers if the Ohio were completely canalized: Be it

Resolved, That the council of the city of Louisville hereby urges upon the Congress of the United States the earliest possible action to complete the slack-water system of the Ohio River as designed by the Engineering Corps of the United States Army, and that copies of this resolution be addressed to every Member of Congress, and that the Representatives from Kentucky be especially urged to unite their efforts toward securing early action in the matter.

ARTICLE BY SENATOR WALSH OF MASSACHUSETTS.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] contributed to the New York Times a few weeks ago an interesting discussion of the problem of aviation, pertinent to the discussion of the bill now before the Senate. I ask unanimous consent that it may be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

OUR AVIATION PROBLEM.

[By Hon. DAVID I. WALSH, junior Senator from Massachusetts.]

"It is regrettable that in or out of Congress there is so little interest in what our Government is doing, or rather failing to do, to stimulate interest in aeronautical matters and to foster and encourage in every manner possible this most important means of defense and transportation which has come to be generally acknowledged among progressive nations as of vital necessity to their commercial and industrial expansion and to their protection and prosperity.

"The inestimable value of this comparatively new science was demonstrated during the World War, and no one will deny that it must play an even larger part in any future controversy between nations—whether on land or on the sea.

"Since the termination of the World War much progress has been made and rapid strides have been taken in the development of this science. Many foreign nations, cognizant of the necessity and importance of aircraft, have initiated military programs and programs of mail and passenger transportation in the air far superior to the present policy of our Government, and have done much to encourage the general development of aeronautics through governmental aid to commercial industry. Great Britain particularly, very soon after the war, reached the conclusion that the dominance of the air is at least of equal importance with that of the seas and set about to plan a definite policy of aerial development and the coordination of her aircraft activities, leading to the establishment of a separate ministry of air, which has taken the lead in practically every phase of aerial development.

"Economic considerations as well as those of national defense demand that the United States immediately formulate a definite, comprehensive, and intelligent policy for the development of every phase of aeronautics and of actively encouraging the aerial transportation industry, which is vitally essential to the future progress and prosperity of the Nation. To neglect longer the establishment of an intelligent policy is inexcusable.

"Because of the absence of any well-defined sympathetic program on the part of our Government since the armistice, the American aeronautical industry, built up at such great expense of money and effort during the war, is rapidly disappearing. The almost antagonistic attitude of our Government toward this industry has discouraged business men, and under the circumstances they were entirely justified in withdrawing their money from this field. Ninety per cent of the aviation industry created during the war has been liquidated, and unless a more sympathetic and definite policy of cooperation is established without delay, it is inevitable that the remaining 10 per cent will also disappear. The future development of aerial navigation generally is in no way limited to military and naval functions, and the closest possible cooperation must at all times exist between the aeronautic agencies of the Government and the commercial industry engaged in the production and development of aircraft.

"In July, 1919, an American aviation mission, which was formed at the instance of the then Secretary of War to investigate and study all forms of organization, production, and development of this science, submitted a report to the Secretary of War outlining the results of their investigations. This report presents the results of the only aviation investigation ever made for the United States Government. The findings of this commission were extremely unpopular with old Army and Navy officers, and the conclusions and recommendations as incorporated in these findings are apparently being entirely ignored by the present as they were by the past administration. They are frowned upon by the General Staffs of both Army and Navy, in spite of the fact that they are even more sound to-day than in 1919, when the report was made.

"The report was, in part, as follows:

"As a result of our studies, your mission desires to emphasize the universal opinion of its members that immediate action is necessary to safeguard the air interests of the United States, to preserve for the Government some benefit of the great aviation expenditures made during the period of the war, and to prevent a vitally necessary industry from entirely disappearing.

* * * * * * *

"That we of to-day are conceivably no more qualified to judge as to the scale and development of the aircraft of 10 years hence than were we of even 5 years ago able to foretell the achievements of to-day. We must bear in mind always that for every one mind focused upon things aeronautical in this earlier period, some thousands of keen minds are now versed in aeronautics. With proper governmental encouragement, rapid progress seems inevitable.

* * * * * * *

"The principal recommendations made by this commission, none of which have been adopted, and which were discredited rather than discouraged, were the establishment of a department of air, with a Cabinet officer at its head coequal in importance and in representation with the Departments of War, Navy, and of Commerce; the establishment of governmental institutions of education and training, including an air academy, all open alike under proper restriction to military, civilian, and naval personnel, and the adoption of a system of circulating Army, Navy, and civil personnel through the national air service.

"Is not the time at hand to demand that an efficient, intelligent, and definite policy be formulated and carried out?

"Those who have studied this matter thoroughly and fairly are of the opinion that this will be impossible as long as our present policy of distributing our air activities among several governmental departments is tolerated, and it is necessary that we have a reorganization of our national-defense agencies if our future as an air power is not to be entirely eclipsed by other nations.

"The indifference of our Government and the manner in which aviation is being discouraged and our aviation personnel demoralized may be appreciated from what has recently been brought to light in the Navy.

"Evidently we learned little from the war, for our Government has maintained an inert, vacillating, and dilatory attitude which has resulted in demoralizing the personnel, and at the present time our aviation, especially in the Navy, is in a chaotic state. Unless some action is taken in the immediate future I can see nothing ahead other than a complete disorganization of what little air force we have thus far been able to retain in spite of, rather than with the help of, Government officials. Our aircraft in the Army and Navy is insignificant, and the personnel has been reduced and discouraged in every way possible.

"Prior to 1917 aviation was a comparatively negligible adjunct to our armed forces, but during the war aircraft sprang into prominence rapidly, awakening in the minds of a larger number of people ideas as to the unlimited possibilities of aviation as the coming strong arm of our national integrity.

"Just how soon the destinies of nations will be decided in the air is, of course, difficult to say. The complexity of the problems and of the possibilities of the development of aircraft is unlimited, so much so that the experts of the world, assembled at the Conference on the Limitation of Armament, found the possibilities of development in the air so vast that they did not feel justified in attempting to define the limits of those possibilities.

"The aviation problem in the United States as it exists to-day can be best illustrated by a study of the present aviation situation in the Navy.

"In the beginning our naval aviation activities were carried on by a mere handful of Regular officers. At the time of our entry into the war the effectiveness of naval aircraft was becoming generally acknowledged, especially in actually combating enemy submarines and, through systematic patrols, in the discouragement of their activities, and steps were taken almost immediately to train a large number of men as naval aviators. The Navy proper needed all its trained line officers, hence young men, drawn mostly from our high schools and universities, were enrolled in the air service of the Naval Reserve Force. They were rushed through their flight instruction by the original handful of Regulars, and, in turn, after being commissioned in the Naval Reserve Flying Corps and designated naval aviators, trained the ever-increasing number of applicants for this branch of the service until, at the signing of the armistice, our naval aviation consisted, besides the original Regulars, of nearly 2,500 officers of the Naval Reserve Force who were qualified as naval aviators.

"Soon after the armistice a large number of these reserve officers were released from active duty and returned to their homes, while others remained on active duty at their own request, with the idea of making aviation their life work and with the idea of eventually being commissioned in the regular Navy. After the war, and while still in the reserve force, these officers on active duty were repeatedly promoted on the strength of their records upon the recommendations of their respective commanding officers.

"These reserves had made naval aviation during the war, and even after the war it was up to them to continue to do so, as there were no others to take their places. To be sure, some few Regulars have been trained since the war, but because of lack of operating experience and lack of the real "air" spirit which had been acquired by the reserves under the shadow of war, they have not been and, for the most part, are not yet ready to take the places of the reserves.

"From the end of the war and until October, 1920, the reserve officers, who remained on active duty with the idea of making naval aviation their life work, had no definite idea as to what was to be done in their case.

"In October, 1920, they were definitely informed that in May of the following year they would be required to qualify as line officers through competitive examination. In other words, they were given a scant eight months in which to prepare for examinations in navigation, seamanship, ordnance and gunnery, steam engineering, electricity, military law, international law, and naval regulations, such as graduates of the Naval Academy are given after three or more years of duty at sea. During this eight months they were at no time relieved of their regular duties in order to study but were actively engaged in carrying on the training of the Regulars and the greater part of the operations of the air stations and fleet air squadrons. There was no one to relieve them, as in most cases there were no Regulars sufficiently experienced to do so.

"These examinations were held during the week of May 16, 1921. Almost all the reserves on active duty took these examinations, though greatly disheartened and discouraged after devoting years to specializing in aviation, to learn that they must be line officers and go to sea on naval craft like all other naval officers.

"Though Congress authorized the taking over into the regular Navy of 500 reserve officers from the Aviation Service of the Navy, they were given examinations prepared by old-line naval officers who know nothing about aviation, and on the first marking of the papers only 27 out of 285 passed. A re-marking increased this number materially. Even those who were finally held to have passed the examinations were given, in most instances, a greatly reduced rank. The result of all this has been very injurious to the morale of our Naval Air Service, and has given a body blow to aviation in the Navy that assumes the proportions of a knockout.

"All qualified naval aviators of the Naval Reserve Force who did not pass the examinations or who did not feel justified in taking them, and the others who declined the lower rank offered them, but who, because of their exceptional experience and ability, are holding positions of great trust and responsibility, will be lost to the service. Except in a few instances there are no Regulars ready to take their places. This means that after July 1 there will be a curtailment of operations until Regulars who have completed their elementary training have acquired sufficient experience to take up the important duties. How long it will take them to acquire this experience is hard to say. It has taken the reserves, who are now to be rejected after giving the best years of their lives to their country, five years.

"If these reserves are let go, it will be necessary to train additional Regulars as naval aviators. It cost during the war about $40,000 to produce a trained aviator. To let these aviators, trained and expert in their subject, go will mean the expenditure of millions to replace them, and even then years to duplicate their seasoned knowledge and experience. According to the figures as estimated by the Bureau of Aeronautics, the training of these additional officers will cost between $3,000,000 and $5,000,000. This sum covers their preliminary training at Pensacola and one year's training with operating units. By the time they have had enough experience to equal that of the reserves the training cost will run in millions of dollars more.

"The Army seems to insist that we have Army pilots, while the Navy insists that we have Navy pilots. What is needed is a large number of Air Service pilots prepared and ready at all times to cooperate with the Army and Navy. To insist that pilots be Army or Navy officers first is to make aviation a subordinate and secondary defense rather than primary defense.

"Among those who are to be relieved from duty because they are not naval line officers but aviators are such officers as—

"The pilot of the NC-4 on its trans-Atlantic flight.

"The commanding officer of one of the only two United States naval air stations in Europe actually under enemy fire.

"The executive officer of one of the active air stations abroad and since for more than two years and to date executive officer of one of the most important naval air stations in the United States.

"The one-time commanding officer of a naval air station.

"The commanding officer of the aviation mechanics' school at Great Lakes, through whose hands have passed 3,500 naval aviation mechanics.

"Nearly all the best and most experienced instructors at the pilots' school at Pensacola.

"Six officers who have made such flights as from Philadelphia to Panama and return, and from Philadelphia to the Virgin Islands and return.

"Three heads of departments at the experimental station at Hampton Roads, Va., and scores of other extremely valuable officers who are experts in bombing, aerial gunnery, aerial photography, and so forth, all war trained and experienced to a degree impossible to duplicate in peace times.

"Can the Navy and the Nation afford to lose the services of these men and their knowledge of aviation because of being unable, largely through unavoidable circumstances, to qualify for duty entirely foreign to their experience and specialized knowledge?

"The advancement of aviation in the Navy and to a great extent in the Army is greatly hindered by the attitude of the older officers of the line. Almost without exception they are bitterly opposed to it, and in some cases have even taken steps to discourage it. These officers of the old school believe that the battleship is supreme and will be so forever. If they have any thoughts as to the possibilities of aviation, they say and do nothing but prefer to let the coming generations shoulder the responsibilities of our national defense when the other nations of the world loom over us like a cloud with their great fleets and squadrons of efficient fighting craft of the air. The younger officers who have seen the "handwriting on the wall" are, in attempting to bring forth their ideas about aviation and in attempting to reconcile the advocates of the old school to the new order of things, jeopardizing their own individual careers in the Navy. They are up against the same stone wall as were those in generations past who brought forth steam propulsion, armor plate, steel ships, and rifled guns.

"The Navy Department makes no distinction between naval aviators and officers of the line. They are all line officers. The department contends no longer openly, because the idea has been exploded, that after a few years an aviator will be too old to fly and that he will have to return to ordinary line duties, when there have been many notable examples of officers over 45 years of age all over the world who have made excellent pilots. How can the average officer put his heart and soul in his work if he knows that in a few years he will have to return to line duties? How much interest would a doctor devote to the furthering of his profession if he knew that at the end of a few years he would be required to become a paymaster because he would be considered to be too old to perform the duties of a surgeon?

"How is this state of affairs to be rectified?

"The first step to be taken is the conciliation of the older officers of the Navy to the new order of things. They must acknowledge the 'handwriting on the wall.' Their attitude can scarcely be changed from within the Navy itself. Any such attempt on the part of the younger officers would jeopardize their own careers. Pressure must be brought to bear from other sources. The weight of public opinion must be brought into play and the Senate and House of Representatives must take a stand for aviation and make the advocates of the old-fashioned Navy forsake their selfish and antiquated ideas and face the facts.

"As has been stated in the findings and recommendations of the Aviation Commission, heretofore referred to, any future war will inevitably open with great aerial activity on both sides. Lying as we are between two oceans, our first steps in war will be over the sea. Early in the war the disadvantages of having our Army Air Service as part of the Signal Corps were recognized, and it was made a distinct and separate service of the Army. As a result our Army Air Service is more efficient than it ever could have been otherwise as part of the Army. If we are to uphold our defense over the sea we must have an air Navy. Our naval aviation service must be rounded out into a distinct and separate corps, and then combined with our Army Air Service and our Bureau of Civil Aeronautics into a great, efficient, and well-balanced national air service.

"What we need now is the consolidation of our War and Navy Departments into a single Department of National Defense, with a Secretary for National Defense as its head and an Undersecretary for Army, an Undersecretary for Navy, and an Undersecretary for Air. The underdepartment for air should have, in addition to the Undersecretary for Air at its head, three subadministrative officers: An Assistant Secretary for Army Air, an Assistant Secretary for Naval Air, and an Assistant Secretary for Civil Air.

"Such an organization would not only foster greater economy and cooperation between our present Army and Navy, but would create a great, efficient, and well-balanced national air service.

"Such a service would carry with it a morale and a spirit equal to that of our much-admired Marine Corps. It would facilitate the establishment of schools of strategy and tactics of the air and of well directed study of the science of aeronautical engineering. It would give the personnel an opportunity to devote their attention to the promotion of the development of aeronautics. It would retain all experienced aviators in the service. It would bring our present more or less disorganized and dissatisfied Navy and Army aviation into a well-organized, efficient, and valuable unit of our armed forces.

"The 'handwriting on the wall' must be seen and action must be taken. Our future in the air must be governed and guided not by the selfish desires of the advocates of the old school but by the requirements of the defense and preservation of our national integrity."

NAVAL APPROPRIATIONS.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 11228) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I regret that the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL] objected to the consideration of the resolution offered by the Senator from Illinois. It has been revealed during the progress of the debate that more than 440 naval stations or establishments under the control of the Navy Department are being maintained. Perhaps 150 or thereabouts are radio stations, but there are more then 200 establishments which might be denominated adjuncts to the Navy, and a very large number of them ought to be discontinued. It costs millions of dollars for their upkeep.

I wish, however, to ask the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] whether anything has been done toward correcting the mistakes which have been made in the construction of our submarines? The Senator will recall that during the consideration of the former naval appropriation bill there was considerable evidence to show that many of the submarines were improperly constructed; that many of them were not comparable to the submarines constructed by Germany and Great Britain; that many of them had imperfect shafts and electrical machinery. Promises were made—not by the Senator but by others, and, I think, by the Navy Department—that some of these undersea craft would be rejected, and those that did not measure up to specifications would be repaired. May I inquire of the Senator whether that has been done and whether there have been any changes and improvements in our submarines?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, at my instance that matter was gone into at very great length by the subcommittee to which this bill was referred, and I am very glad to say to the Senator from Utah that it was shown to the committee that the deficiencies of certain submarines, particularly of the S series—and I think that is the class to which the Senator from Utah refers—had been corrected, or, rather, they were in process of correction. I may say to the Senator that there was no difficulty about the electrical machinery; the difficulty with those submarines was in the size of the crank shaft of the engine. Through a difference of opinion between the Navy and the contractors the size of the crank shaft, which the Bureau of Engineering of the Navy first designed to be 8 inches, was reduced to 7 inches. However, in practical use the views of the Navy were found to be correct, and apparently they were rather weak in having made the concession to the contractors. But a very thorough series of tests were carried out upon that specific proposition, and a very firm stand was taken by the Navy that the 8-inch shaft must be installed in these engines without additional expense to the Government. That is now being done, and the prospect is that it will soon be finished.

Mr. KING. The Senator will recall that the evidence showed, too, that we did not have a submarine that was large enough—or, at least, we had only perhaps two or three—to accompany the fleet to sea. Their radius was limited, and they did not have the speed, the capacity, the endurance, or the qualities essential for what might be denominated a "fleet submarine." May I inquire of the Senator whether there has been any improvement along those lines and whether we now have any submarines that are able to accompany the fleet?

Mr. POINDEXTER. We have submarines which can accompany the fleet in the sense that they have sufficient radius of action to go to any place where the fleet may go, but, of course, there are no submarines that have the speed of the fleet. The fleet has a speed of over 20 knots an hour, and there is not a submarine that has ever been designed by Germany, Great Britain, or any other country which has that speed; but we have submarines of sufficient radius of action to accompany the fleet in the sense that they can go to the same place where the fleet may go, and they are called "fleet submarines."

Mr. KING. The Senator will recall that the evidence disclosed that our submarines were not comparable to the German submarines in speed, in endurance, in workmanship, or in technical features. The evidence showed, I think quite conclusively, that one or more of the establishments which were making our submarines were constructing imperfect machinery; and we had a promise that there would be reforms, changes, and improvements in the submarines upon which we were relying so much.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, the observations made a few moments ago by the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] and the debate as it is now proceeding seem to me not dissimilar to the debate in France which is now going forward, particularly in the press, upon the treaties which were negotiated some time ago for the limitation of armament. It is all exceedingly interesting. The disarmament parley was called for the purpose of stopping competition in naval armament. That was one of the great objects to be attained and one of the great objects which was supposed to have been attained. We find now, within a few months after the treaties are signed, that the argument which is being advanced in France for the ratification of the treaties is that they in no way limit the building of naval armament upon the part of France in anything which she desires to build; that while there is some limitation upon battleships—a craft which she does not want to build and does not propose to build for two reasons, first, from an economic standpoint, and, second, because of the impression abroad that they are becoming obsolete—as to all other instruments of modern naval warfare there is no limit, and therefore the ratification of the treaties would in no wise embarrass France in the future in building up her navy, which she proposes to do. That leads to the further suggestion that at the present time in Japan—not so much in Great Britain but in Japan—naval armaments, aside from battleships, are being built as rapidly and as effectively as prior to the meeting of the disarmament parley.

So, Mr. President, while these treaties may be ratified and technically observed, the great object and purpose in calling the disarmament parley—to wit, to stop competition in naval armament—seems to be utterly frustrated by reason of what, in my judgment, may be properly styled bad faith upon the part of the countries in carrying out the spirit of the disarmament parley and the treaty. We are to-day just as thoroughly engaged in naval-armament competition as we were prior to the calling of the disarmament parley, with the exception of one instrument of modern naval warfare.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, I should like to inquire if any other nation except our own has ratified the four-power pact?

Mr. KING. No.

Mr. BORAH. No; no other nation, I understand.

Mr. OVERMAN. Is there any probability of their ratifying it soon?

Mr. BORAH. In the view which France takes of it, I think France will likely ratify it, because she does not consider that it embarrasses her in the slightest in going forward with her program.

Mr. OVERMAN. It does not require her to disarm?

Mr. BORAH. No.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, let me say to my friend from North Carolina that I put into the RECORD the other day excerpts from a very admirable article appearing in the New York Herald, in which attention was challenged to the fact that no nation other than the United States, party to these treaties that were to usher in the millenium, according to the statements of some of our Republican friends, had ratified them. I called attention to the fact that Lord Lee of Fareham had presented to the House of Lords the treaty—it did not state for action, but presumably for action—but no action had been taken. Japan has taken no action, nor has Italy or France. The statement just made by the Senator from Idaho illustrates the futility of these treaties negotiated at the Washington conference, and which were proclaimed as the greatest achievement of all time. They may have some value, but as yet it is somewhat difficult to perceive the same. At any rate, there is still naval preparation, and the treaties are not ratified. The four-power treaty dealt only with capital ships, but did not pretend to limit submarines, aircraft, land armaments, and other forces or instrumentalities which the present may know or the future may devise for use in war on land and sea and in the air.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to ask the Senator, if his theory was correct, and that of others who took the position that the four-power pact and the others were very much to the selfish interest of England and Japan and against the interest of the United States, is it not a little curious that they have not speedily ratified them?

Mr. KING. I am not quite clear that I apprehend the meaning of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. LENROOT. The Senator took the position, as I understand——

Mr. KING. Does the Senator mean now or in the past?

Mr. LENROOT. When the treaties were before us—that these treaties were not to the interest of the United States, but were very much to the interest of Great Britain and Japan. My query is, If the Senator was correct in that, is it not a little curious to the Senator that those countries did not speedily ratify the treaty, instead of delaying ratification?

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator has accurately stated my position. The position which I took, or intended to take, was that the four-power treaty possessed so many uncertainties and involved so many problems that, in my opinion, it would not make for world peace; or at least that it would prove an obstacle to a world union which would promote world peace. I contended that there should be an association of all nations; and that an attempt to form a group of these powerful nations would provoke resentments and antagonisms and jealousies among other nations, and would lead, or be calculated to lead, to other groups and alliances, which in the end would constitute impediments to a league of all nations, and thus prove injurious to the peace of the world. I opposed the treaty because it would lead to counteralliances. I agreed with the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] and others that the four-power pact constituted an alliance—the able Senator from California [Mr. JOHNSON] took that position with great force and clarity—and that whenever an alliance was formed, particularly between great powers, other alliances would be formed to check or thwart what was presumed to be the purpose of the first alliance.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. KING. I yield.

Mr. LENROOT. Did not the Senator take the position that it was an alliance in the interest of Great Britain and Japan and against the interest of the United States?

Mr. KING. No; I did not take that position. I took the position that it was an alliance, and I stated that in my opinion it would provoke a counteralliance between Germany and Russia, and perhaps other nations. I have contended ever since the end of the World War that there should be an association of nations; and accordingly I supported the League of Nations plan. I then asserted that attempts to form groups, particularly of powerful nations, would inevitably lead to the formation of other groups. The history of the past shows the evil effects of alliances and the efforts to maintain a "balance of power" by the formation of limited national associations. I suggest that the net results of the Washington conference can not be satisfying even to the most ardent disciples of the prophets who guided it.

Mr. President, I offer the following amendment:

On page 64, line 9, after the numerals, I move to insert the following:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be used for the purpose of maintaining or employing marines, either officers or enlisted men, in the Republic of Haiti or the Dominican Republic after December 31, 1922.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, before that is finally disposed of, may I ask if the Senator is advised at this time whether or not our marines are still guarding the White House at Managua, Nicaragua? They have been there for 8 or 10 years. I do not know whether they have gone away yet or not.

Mr. KING. I think they are. The last authentic information I had was that a portion of the marines—to wit, 24—had been brought home in irons, sentenced to from 8 to 40 years, for alleged offenses committed in Nicaragua, and that there were still marines in Nicaragua.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. In order that this amendment may be properly considered, it will be necessary to reconsider the vote whereby the amendment in line 9, page 64, was adopted. Without objection——

Mr. POINDEXTER. I ask to have the amendment stated. My attention was diverted for a moment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to add, after the total for the Marine Corps on page 64, line 9, after the figures "$26,146,748," the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be used for the purpose of maintaining or employing marines, either officers or enlisted men, in the Republic of Haiti or the Dominican Republic after December 31, 1922.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote whereby——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to inquire of the Chair why it is necessary to reconsider that amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the opinion of the Chair that inasmuch as this amendment is offered in the form of a proviso to that appropriation, it will be necessary to reconsider the vote so that the whole question may be open.

Mr. NORRIS. It is not offered as an amendment to a committee amendment and does not change a committee amendment in any sense. We have reached the stage in the consideration of the bill where individual amendments are in order. I do not see why it will be necessary to reconsider the action on the committee amendment. It does not pretend to change the amount of the appropriation. It does not cut it out at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. It is the opinion of the Chair that inasmuch as the amendment now offered attaches to the committee amendment which was agreed to in order to make it entirely parliamentary that vote ought to be reconsidered. Of course, a majority of the Senate can determine otherwise.

Mr. NORRIS. Suppose that view prevails, and it is reconsidered, and then this amendment is voted on, whether in or out; what difference would it make as far as the committee amendment is concerned? Either you put it in or you keep it out, and in either case it does not modify or change in one iota the committee amendment.

Mr. LENROOT. If it is adopted it affects the committee amendment, because it limits the appropriation.

Mr. NORRIS. It does not change the committee amendment. It applies to the whole thing. Suppose no committee amendment had been made, would it for that reason be out of order? The simple statement of it, it seems to me, is sufficient. The Senator's amendment does not depend upon the committee having made an amendment here. He could offer it just the same if this committee amendment had never been made.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, may I say to the Senator from Nebraska—and I hope I may have the attention of the Senator from Washington—that when we were considering these items dealing with marines I suggested, not in open session but privately to the Senator from Washington, that I would not offer this amendment and another which I intend to offer until we had gone through with the bill; then the amendments could be considered even after the amendments which had been offered by the committee were finally disposed of; and that, if necessary, the action of the Senate could be set aside for the purpose of considering such amendments as I desired to offer.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What was the question?

Mr. KING. I say, it was understood that if any votes were taken upon the items relating to the marines, when we got through with the bill I could offer such amendments as I desired without the formality of moving to reconsider.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I do not want to stand in the way of the Senator offering any amendment that he chooses to offer. My understanding of the colloquy that we had on the subject to which the Senator is now referring was that if he succeeded in securing the adoption by the Senate of an amendment either raising or lowering the number of marines provided for I would agree to corresponding changes in the appropriation to suit the changed personnel provided in the bill; but that does not involve the parliamentary inquiry of the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. KING. I will say that I stated to the Senator that I should offer two amendments, one to reduce the number of marines and another to prevent the employment of marines in the Republic of Haiti or the Dominican Republic.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I have not any objection at all to that. I am perfectly willing to agree to that. The Senator has offered the amendment now.

Mr. KING. And the Senator stated to me that we could take a vote upon it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the reconsideration of the vote whereby the amendment on line 9, page 64, was agreed to?

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington will state it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Has the inquiry of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] been decided by the Chair?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair stated it to be the opinion of the Chair that inasmuch as the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah is attached directly to and really is to become a part of the committee amendment that has been agreed to, therefore it would be necessary to reconsider the vote whereby that amendment was agreed to. That is the opinion of the Chair. Is there objection to the reconsideration of that vote? If there be no objection, the vote is reconsidered.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington will state it.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Is the amendment proposed by the Senator from Utah in order, in view of the fact that if adopted it would change the existing law and policy of the Government as to its foreign relations? It would have the effect, whatever the means of reaching the object may be, of undertaking through an appropriation bill to direct the President of the United States, who is the Commander in Chief of the Army and Navy, what orders he should make as to the disposition of the armed forces of the United States. It would also have the effect, for a limited time at least, of interfering with the President's conduct of our foreign affairs and the carrying out of treaties with foreign countries, for the occupation of Haiti is in pursuance of a treaty with that country. We would be doing that without even referring the matter to a committee, without having the opportunity of securing the consideration of the question by a committee, to say nothing of not referring it to the executive branch of the Government.

The State Department or Executive is the branch of the Government which has the control and direction of our relations with Haiti and Santo Domingo, and I make the parliamentary inquiry of the Chair whether this amendment is not out of order for those reasons, as changing existing law by an amendment upon an appropriation bill? If the Chair says it is out of order, I will be compelled to make a point of order.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I want to say, first, in reference to the ruling of the Chair a few moments ago, that while I acquiesce in the decision of the Chair, I want the record to show that I do not agree that that is the proper procedure, because the ruling might be cited as a very important precedent in the future. The Chair's decision practically means that if the committee had not made this particular amendment the Senator's amendment would be out of order.

I contend, however, while I am on my feet, that the question raised by the Senator from Washington is a very simple parliamentary proposition. The amendment offered by the Senator from Utah is purely and solely a limitation upon the appropriation. Such an amendment is always in order. If the amendment included the word "hereafter," so as to make it permanent law, it would be subject to a point of order, if the things alleged by the Senator from Washington in regard to its changing law, and so forth, are accurate; but it applies only to this appropriation.

The point made by the Senator from Washington that it would interfere with the policy of the State Department, or even violate a treaty, is not good. If that were a good point, then Congress would not be called upon to appropriate money to carry out a treaty. The State Department or the President, or whoever were the proper officials, would be authorized to take the money out of the Treasury without any appropriation. It is not to be assumed that Congress would fail to appropriate, but Congress can fail to appropriate even for the President's salary.

Congress can fail to appropriate for the salaries of the Members of the Senate or the Supreme Court, and that is one of the checks on Government, under our system, that is given to Congress. It can refuse to appropriate, and if it does, then whatever depends on an appropriation which otherwise would be made must fail. It is not a question of changing law. It is not assumed, of course, that Congress would fail to carry out a contract by refusing to make the necessary appropriation.

We have always had that question to contend with when we make a treaty. It is always argued that when we come to appropriate the money necessary to carry out a treaty made in accordance with the Constitution; the appropriation must pass the House of Representatives, and if it fails in the House, the treaty can not be carried out, if an appropriation is necessary.

This amendment simply limits the appropriation. It applies to none other. It may be that there is other money appropriated which could be used for this purpose, and if there is, by a proper construction of the law, of course the marines could be maintained there. This simply provides that no money appropriated in this bill shall be used for a particular purpose. We can do that by this kind of a limitation. We can do it by failing to make a direct appropriation. We could refuse to make any appropriation for the marines, and if we did, no public money could be used in paying any marines, officers, or privates. It seems to me it is very clear that this limitation is proper, if we adopt the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Utah desire to be heard on the point raised by the Senator from Washington?

Mr. KING. If the Chair has any doubt about the parliamentary status——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is ready to rule, but the Chair is willing to hear the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. If the Chair is willing to rule my way, I do not want to say a word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is ready to rule. Does the Senator from Utah desire to be heard on the point of order?

Mr. KING. I think I shall submit the question to the Chair, having confidence in the correctness of my position, and knowing that in the past the rulings of the presiding officers in the Senate have been to the effect that amendments of which this is a type were limitations upon appropriations and were therefore admissible under the rule. I also have confidence in the fairness of the Chair, and feel assured that he is familiar with the parliamentary precedents.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. WILLIS). On the question of order raised by the Senator from Washington it is the opinion of the Chair that the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah is simply a limitation on the appropriation, according to all the parliamentary precedents with which the Chair is acquainted, and that the amendment is in order. Therefore, the Chair is of the opinion that the point of order raised by the Senator from Washington is not well taken, and that the amendment is in order. The amendment will be stated by the Secretary.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to insert, on page 64, line 9, after the figures "$26,146,748," the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be used for the purpose of maintaining or employing marines, either officers or enlisted men, in the Republic of Haiti or the Dominican Republic after December 31, 1922.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

Mr. KING. The Senator from Idaho asked a few moments ago whether marines were still kept in Nicaragua. I have before me the Senate hearings, and I find, on page 293, the report that in Santo Domingo there are 2,291; in Haiti, 1,696; in Cavite, 162; in Olongapo, 125; in Nicaragua, 107; at Pearl Harbor, 375; in Guam, 500; at Guantanamo Bay, 175; in the Virgin Islands, 150; in Peking, 325; and in the Russian Islands, 15.

Mr. POINDEXTER. What is the date of the authority the Senator has quoted?

Mr. KING. I find that statement in the last hearings before the subcommittee of the Committee on Appropriations. The report appears to be dated March 1, 1922.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I am informed that the number of marines in San Domingo and in Haiti has been reduced since that time, so that at the present time there are approximately 2,100 in San Domingo and approximately 1,300 in Haiti.

Mr. KING. That is some reduction since March, when this report was submitted.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I am interested in the particular matter covered by the amendment now being considered because I am interested in the policy which seems to be growing up touching our relationship with Central American countries and the islands near our coast—in other words, our Latin American policy.

We went to Nicaragua in 1910, I believe. In my judgment we never had any sufficient reason for going. Nevertheless, we sent our marines there, landed them, took possession of the country, marched to the capital, killed some 200 Nicaraguans, and placed in control, as the nominal President of Nicaragua, a clerk or employee of a corporation of Pittsburgh. We maintained him there for a number of years, and he could not have remained in the capital of Nicaragua 48 hours, as seems to be conceded by everyone, without the presence of the American marines, who kept him there. He was a dictator of the Nicaraguan people, and made dictator by our Navy, under orders from Washington.

During the time that our created—so-called—President was President of Nicaragua there was a treaty with Nicaragua proposed. That treaty went before the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate, and was there defeated by the solid vote of the Democrats and one Republican vote. That vote I had the honor to cast. The treaty was again submitted after a change of administration, practically in the same terms found in the original treaty, and in this instance it was reported favorably by the committee. The vote was a little embarrassed by reason of the vote which had been taken theretofore. The Democrats, with one or two exceptions, supported the administration and Republicans supported the previous administration. At any rate, the treaty was favorably reported, was considered in the Senate, and finally ratified. I made a motion to consider it in open session, but the motion was defeated. It was considered in secret, naturally.

The treaty which we made with Nicaragua did not in any sense represent the expression of view or wishes of the Nicaraguan people. So far as Nicaragua was concerned, it was made by a government which we set up, which by force we maintained, and which did not represent the views of the Nicaraguan people at any time. We made an important treaty with a helpless people, a people under our military domination.

The American admiral who had charge of the affairs in Nicaragua stated in the hearings that if the Nicaraguan people were permitted to express themselves, 80 per cent of them, in his opinion, would be opposed to the government as it then existed and would be opposed to the treaty as submitted.

I have never regarded the Nicaraguan treaty as binding upon the Nicaraguan people. We were making a treaty with ourselves. We were making a treaty with a government which was our puppet. We were making a treaty with a government which represented us at the other end of the treaty-making negotiations. It is one of the most indefensible transactions of which I have knowledge in international affairs. But I am not to-day going into the Nicaragua affair at length, except to suggest that the views which I entertain in regard to this matter are not lately formed, have not been lately considered by me for the first time.

About 1915 we went to Haiti, largely under the same circumstances and conditions under which we went to Nicaragua. I shall not to-day discuss at length why we went to Haiti. Suffice it to say that, in my judgment, there was no sufficient reason for our invasion of Haiti, and suffice it to say, further, that if the Haitian people had been a much stronger people, a more powerful people, a people with a navy and an army, we would not have gone to Haiti even if the same reasons had existed which did exist. We have some two or three policies with reference to our foreign affairs, and those policies are adjusted to the size and strength of the people. In my humble opinion, the policy which prevailed with reference to the Haitian people was by reason of the fact, in large measure, that they were helpless to resist the invasion and the encroachment of the American marines or the American Navy.

It was said that we went there for the purpose of restoring law and order. If we had gone there for that purpose, we never would have done the things which we did after we arrived there. The things which we did indicated that we were not there temporarily for the purpose of restoring law and order, but that we were there for a more permanent and a more abiding reason.

No American citizen had been killed in Haiti; no American property had been destroyed; no offense had been committed against our people. The Haitian people were at peace with all the world. They were at peace with the United States, and they had committed no outrages and no wrongs against the American citizens who may have been in Haiti, nor had they confiscated or destroyed any property belonging to them.

There were disturbances in Haiti and always have been. They were, in my opinion, no different, either in moment, extent, or seriousness, than had existed there many different times during the 100 years in which Haiti has been a Republic.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a question?

Mr. BORAH. Certainly.

Mr. McCORMICK. There had always been almost similar occurrences in Cuba, had there not, before intervention there in 1898?

Mr. BORAH. Yes. The relevancy of the question I do not see, and I would be glad to have the Senator explain.

Mr. McCORMICK. It seems to me that it is at least arguable that there is analogy between intervention on the part of the United States to establish order and peace in Cuba and to do as much in Haiti.

Mr. BORAH. I do not think the analogy exists in any particular.

We talk, Mr. President, about the sacredness of life and the security of property in Haiti. Property was just as secure and life just as sacred in Haiti when we entered as it is in some parts of this country, even in some of our large cities. They were not as efficient and capable of self-government as we claim to be, and yet I venture to say that, compared in population, the sacredness of human life was just as thoroughly observed in that island during the months in which we were entering and invading their territory as it has been for months and months in some of the great cities of the United States. When you examine the record of robberies and murders in great cities, the lynchings and burnings in this country, and compare them with lawlessness in Haiti, you will find little excuse for our going to Haiti.

Mr. President, in my judgment, we did not enter that island by reason of the fact of the disturbances there. For more than 40 years there have been powerful influences at work in this country to induce the United States to become active in the affairs of Haiti. While I do not charge that it has its conscious effect upon the State Department or our Government, it was so presented to the Government that the Government undoubtedly yielded to those influences. Let us follow up, therefore, what we did after we arrived there, and see if we can not ascertain why we went and why we are staying. Remember, Mr. President, that we have been there now nearly eight years. We have given them in that time nothing but a military form of government. We have not set up or attempted to set up anything like a civil government. While nominally they retain their President, he is in every sense the representative of the military power of the United States, and the only thing that we offer the Haitian people after seven or eight years occupancy is a military form of government—the most undesirable, the most intolerable, the most brutal, the most arbitrary and cruel form of government that can be placed over any dependent people.

One of the first things we discover when we come to investigate affairs in Haiti is the fact that they had in their constitution a provision which prevented foreigners from owning or acquiring land in Haiti. This was written into the original charter in 1804. They believed it necessary to their defense. They realized that they had an island the soil of which was exceedingly fertile, and that if foreigners were permitted to come in there and acquire lands and exploit their natural resources, they would not be able to stand against that kind of encroachment, that kind of peaceful penetration, and that ultimately, through the acquisition of their property, their natural resources, and their land, the foreigner would come to dominate the situation in Haiti. One of the first things which we did was to force out of the constitution that provision. That could not have been connected with the proposition of temporary occupation. That never could have been any part of the program for the mere restoration of law and order in Haiti. That had to do with laying the foundation for the permanent occupancy of Haiti.

I am informed, and I think reliably informed, because one of the parties informing me is the owner of property in Haiti, that since that provision of the constitution was changed large acreages have been gathered up by citizens of the United States and some 200,000 acres have been acquired by different companies or corporations, and that this acreage is now passing into the hands of those other than citizens of Haiti. Of course, Mr. President, if that is true, then what was called temporary occupancy of Haiti will necessarily become a permanent occupancy. Having forced out of the constitution their protection against foreign purchasers, will we ever withdraw from the island and leave the foreign purchaser to be governed by the Haitian people? The influence which is now going there for the purpose of exploiting those islands will have a right to say, "We purchased after you had changed the constitution and under the implied terms, if not the express terms, that we would be protected in our holdings in Haiti." We are practicing peaceful penetration. Having forced a change in their constitution, we are taking advantage of the change to seize the lands, and when the time comes to get out we will be asked by our own people to stay. Having invested therein, because that was what the changing of the constitution meant, we will not leave them to the mercy of the people whom they have exploited.

It indicates, in other words, that although there might have been the announced purpose of temporary occupation, the thing which we have been doing indicates a permanent occupation.

How was this constitution adopted by Haiti? In no sense was it ever the expression of the Haitian people. The story of the forcing upon those people of this constitution is one which can not be defended. I have never seen any defense of it. In the discussion of the Haitian question it is avoided. It is 110,000,000 people with a great Army and a great Navy proceeding against 3,000,000 people without an army or a navy and dictating to them a change in their fundamental law detrimental to their interests.

On June 17, 1917, General Cole, who was then in charge of military affairs under the Haitian Government, so called, telegraphed our Government as follows:

> Antagonism national assembly to foreign ownership of land such that no endeavor short of dissolution will prevent passage constitution along lines reported my 13107. If assembly refuses to heed such warning, it will be necessary to dissolve assembly to prevent such passage—

That is, the passage which did not eliminate the question of ownership of the land by foreigners.

> The number of marines in Haiti should be increased by at least eight companies to prevent disorders that may follow dissolution of assembly.

Here we have the exact and simple question presented. We go to Haiti ostensibly to restore law and order. We immediately begin the wrecking of their form of government. That which they consider as the corner stone of their security—to wit, the question of foreigners owning land—immediately comes up for consideration, and the assembly stands against the change and refuses to yield until it is adjourned by the power of our military forces.

On June 18 General Cole notified the authorities here as follows.

> Unless contrary instructions received, if necessary to prevent passage proposed constitution, I intend to dissolve the National Assembly through President if possible; otherwise direct.

Mr. OVERMAN. What authority did he have for adjourning ing the Assembly of Haiti?

Mr. BORAH. He had exactly the authority which any military despot has over a helpless people, and no more. This little Republic has stood for 111 years. It had had its troubles, its dissensions, its discords, but it had always treated American citizens and residents of ours in that country with justice, with fairness, and had protected them and their lives and their interests. I think it most unfortunate that a Republic which had stood for 111 years through all the vicissitudes which accompanied its history should finally be destroyed by its sister Republic, the great Republic of the West. To dissolve that assembly, which was bravely standing by what it believed to be the interests of the Haitian people, was an act of sheer brutal despotism, an act of despotism not often found in the history of modern times. It seems incredible that this was the act of a Government whose founders fought such shameless tyranny and whose people still advocate self-government and liberty. I do not believe that the American people as a people would approve such wanton disregard of the first principles of free government.

General Cole was given full discretionary power. So strong was the opposition that they could not succeed in this way, so they prepared a plebiscite. The plebiscite was a farce. It was held under the authority and menace of the American bayonet.

Mr. KELLOGG. May I ask the Senator what date that was?

Mr. BORAH. That was in 1917, I think. I will not be exact as to the date, but I think that is correct.

I am not going to take the time to read all the testimony with reference to the plebiscite. I call attention to enough, however, so that those who are interested in the subject may easily find the testimony.

The election was held on May 8, 1918, and was officially reported adopted by a vote of 98,294 in favor and 759 against. To what extent the vote represents the free will of the Haitian people may be gathered from the testimony of Col. Alexander S. Williams, chief of the gendarmerie, which had charge of the election, given at page 560 of the hearings. It is illuminating to note the colonel's statement that Haitian funds were used to indoctrinate the natives as to the virtues of the new constitution.

Rev. L. Tom Evans, who was a missionary and has been for years in Haiti, in his testimony said:

The bundle of pink slips (no) significantly showing the fraudulent nature of the whole scandalous business, remained on the other side of the table tied together. The poor native in charge, as well as the so-called voters, knew those packets were meant for mere show, for even if cut loose their terror-stricken Haitian brothers dared not refuse the "oui" (yes), but asked for the "non" at the risk of being imprisoned and shot as an enemy of the occupation and foe of the United States Government.

Further he describes how the forces at the polls—watched with an eagle eye and guarded by the (negro police) especially officered by the American generals, colonels, majors, captains, and lieutenants * * * for the sake of perfecting the farce. There were Haitian dummies sitting handing out the slips in the box, and a dummy Haiti commissarie sat alongside of the American marine officer.

I have noticed an article published lately in some of the New York newspapers written by some one who has styled himself "An American officer." He does not give his name. In that article the writer says:

It was this Government which put over the constitution of 1918 with its legislative joker, which bids fair to create an unprecedented situation in the recent election, and one which would have been very difficult to solve short of actual intervention in governmental affairs by the American high commissioner. The American occupation had absolutely nothing to do with either the voting of the constitution or the preparation of the people in a favorable attitude. The members of the occupation obeyed absolutely the strict rule of hands off political affairs, which has obtained from the beginning to the present moment.

This officer, whose identity is unknown, says that the army of occupation had nothing to do with the adoption of this constitution. I assert that the record—not only the sworn testimony, but the official reports, the official telegrams, and the official communications—shows unmistakably that the constitution was "put over," to use that expression, through the insistence, aye, through the use of force by those occupying Haiti for the American Army. To such an extent were they required to use force that they were compelled to dissolve the assembly which stood out against the consideration of the proposed constitution.

We have, therefore, Mr. President, the first step, which indicates, as I have said, a question of policy, the permament remaining in the island of Haiti. One of the telegrams which Secretary Lansing sent has this in it:

In order that no misunderstanding can possibly occur after election it should be made clear to candidates as soon as possible and in advance of their election that the United States expects to be intrusted with the practical control of the customs and such financial control over the affairs of the Republic of Haiti as the United States may deem necessary for efficient administration.

Gen. Alexander S. Williams, on page 566, testifies in regard to the campaign for the adoption of the constitution, and says:

I sent circular letters to all gendarmerie officers informing them that they would soon be called upon to supervise a vote of the people for or against the adoption of the proposed constitution. I told them it was desirable that this constitution pass. * * * I do not remember how long before the plebiscite was held that these instructions were given, but there was a considerable time, ample time, to enable the gendarmerie officers (who were marine officers also) to conduct this campaign, which was frankly proconstitutional. * * * I allotted from gendarmerie funds to enable each gendarmerie district and subcommander to have a popular meeting prior to the date on which the meeting was to be held. * * * On these occasions the gendarmerie officer mixed with the people, sometimes addressed them, and freely advocated the adoption of the constitution. * * * The plebiscite I considered in every phase, those which led up to it and the phase of operation and the events subsequent to be absolutely and entirely creditable to the gendarmerie. I am really very proud of the plebescite. So far as supervision orders, instructions, indoctrination could go, it was conducted as honestly as anything possibly could be.

One can well imagine the effect of such a campaign upon the free expression of opinion upon the part of the Haitian people with reference to their constitution, with the gendarmerie and the American military forces carrying on a campaign frankly proconstitutional, insisting that the American Government expected the adoption of the constitution and that the American people would expect to operate the affairs of the Haitian people under it.

Mr. KELLOGG. Was it an officer of the United States from whose testimony the Senator from Idaho has quoted?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

So much, Mr. President, for the change of the constitution. Now, what is the effect of that change? Some of the most fertile soil in the world is located in Haiti. That it is being purchased and gathered in at this time seems to be well established. Of course I have no evidence in regard to that except the communications from and personal interviews with men who have been in Haiti, with men who have themselves purchased interests in Haiti. Therefore I am unable to give the extent to which it has gone on; I know that it has proceeded to a considerable extent; but its full purport I am unable to state.

Mr. President, we profess to be in Haiti under a treaty. After we took possession of that portion of the island belonging to Haiti, we proposed immediately a treaty to the Haitian people. That treaty was finally ratified under the same influences and with the exercise of about the same power which caused the ratification of the treaty with Nicaragua. I do not regard it as a treaty which binds the Haitian people at all, in the sense that it was ratified as the free expression of the will or the uncontrolled judgment of the Haitian people. I regard it as a treaty by the United States dealing with itself; that the men who purported to ratify it or accept it upon the part of Haiti were not the agents of the Haitian people but the agents of the American Government.

On August 14, 1915, a treaty was presented to the Haitian Government at a time when we were in military control of Haiti. That treaty took over the entire machinery of government and destroyed the sovereignty of Haiti. The Haitian President was told to advise the Haitian congress to pass forthwith a resolution authorizing the President-elect to conclude without modification the treaty submitted. On September 3 Admiral Caperton declared martial law. On September 8, 1915, Caperton sent the following telegram to the Secretary of the Navy:

Successful negotiation of treaty is predominant part of present mission. After encountering many difficulties, treaty situation at present looks more favorable than usual. This has been effected by the exercising of military pressure at propitious moment in negotiations. Yesterday two members of the cabinet, who had blocked negotiation, resigned.

The treaty negotiation proceeds and advances—how? By the intelligent exercise of military power at propitious moments so that two members of the cabinet who were blocking the proceedings resigned. Can any man read that telegram and not feel a deep feeling of resentment that such a telegram should actually constitute a part of our history? We have been fond of late years of criticizing other governments for their arbitrary acts. But that telegram belongs nowhere outside of the archives of a military despot. I denounce it as un-American and indefensible.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. ASHURST. I did not understand by whom the cablegram was sent.

Mr. BORAH. It was sent by Admiral Caperton, who was in charge of affairs at that time in Haiti, representing the American Government, and was directed to the Secretary of the Navy.

Mr. ASHURST. Under the circumstances that treaty could very well stand side by side with Japan's treaty with Korea, could it not?

Mr. BORAH. We are under peculiar obligations to those people down there, and I do not think that the telegram referred to ranks in dignity or decency with the treatment accorded by Japan to Korea.

They next held up all customs receipts in order to bring pressure. The Senate, however, continued to stand out and refused to ratify the treaty. On November 10 our Government sent the following message:

I am sure that you gentlemen will understand my sentiment in this matter, and I am confident that, if the treaty fails of ratification, my Government has intention to retain control of Haiti until the desired end is accomplished—

And so forth.

Mr. NORRIS. Who sent that?

Mr. BORAH. That was sent by the Secretary of the Navy. There was a confidential memorandum attached to this message, which reads as follows:

It is expected—

This was directed to the Admiral.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, if I may interrupt the Senator, no doubt the Secretary of the Navy would have no legal authority to lay down the law as to how long we should occupy Haiti. There must have been some authority above the Secretary of the Navy in sending that message. I assume that undoubtedly it must have come from the highest executive authority, namely, the President.

Mr. BORAH. I presume that this was all a matter of policy and had been worked out.

Mr. NORRIS. I hope the Senator from Idaho will not forget that he started when he was interrupted to read a confidential memorandum.

Mr. BORAH. I am going to read it in a few moments. This telegram was sent on November 10, 1915, and I think it will bear reading as an entirety. It says:

Arrange with President Dartiguenave that he call a cabinet meeting before the session of the Senate which will pass upon the ratification of the treaty, and request that you be permitted to appear at that meeting to make a statement to President and to members of cabinet. On your own authority state the following before these officers: "I have the honor to inform the President of Haiti and the members of his cabinet that I am personally gratified that public sentiment continues favorable to the treaty; that there is a strong demand from all classes for immediate ratification, and that treaty will be ratified Thursday. I am sure that you gentlemen—

This is the address the officer was to make to the authorities—

I am sure that you gentlemen will understand my sentiment in this matter, and I am confident if the treaty fails of ratification that my Government has the intention to retain control in Haiti until the desired end is accomplished, and that it will forthwith proceed to the complete pacification of Haiti, so as to insure internal tranquillity necessary to such development of the country and its industry as will afford relief to the starving populace now unemployed.

Meanwhile the present Government will be supported in the effort to secure stable conditions and lasting peace in Haiti, whereas those offering opposition can only expect such treatment as their conduct merits. The United States Government is particularly anxious for immediate ratification by the present Senate of this treaty, which was drawn up with the full intention of employing as many Haitians as possible to aid in giving effect to its provisions, so that suffering may be relieved at the earliest possible date. Rumors of bribery to defeat the treaty are rife, but are not believed. However, should they prove true, those who accept or give bribery will be vigorously prosecuted.

Then this confidential memorandum, attached to it, reads as follows:

It is expected that you will be able to make this sufficiently clear to remove all opposition and to secure immediate ratification.

This was sent on November 10. The treaty was ratified November 11.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I should like to get this information, and I am satisfied that the Senate would like to have it: The Senator has not given the name of the person to whom that telegram was directed or by whom it was signed.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; it was sent to Admiral Caperton by the Secretary of the Navy.

I ask an American Senate if they think that this treaty is the expression of the Haitian people? Take into consideration, in the first place, the very fact that here we were in military control of the island; secondly, that we had declared martial law, and that the whole situation was within our dominance. Suppose no other act or step had been taken. Would any American Senator regard as binding a treaty which was adopted by a people at a time when a powerful nation was in military control of the island, of the entire people, and martial law had been declared, and we were the executors of martial law? Could the free expression of the Haitian people, or any part of the Haitian people be secured under such circumstances? Those facts alone would be sufficient to render null and void any treaty which was ratified under those conditions; but we did not stop there. We had taken control of the island; we had declared martial law; the assembly still held out and refused to ratify it; and then, as the man in charge, Admiral Caperton, says, "We are making progress only as I apply the force of the military power at propitious moments."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, the Senator might state that we seized the customhouses and refused to pay the officials' salaries, and so forth, until the treaty was ratified.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; that was another one of the influences which we brought to bear upon them. Having seized the customhouses, we refused to pay the salaries of the officials—the President, and so forth—until the treaty was ratified.

Admiral Caperton says very truly that since the ratification of the treaty the history of the American occupation has been purely one of military control. Since the 11th day of November, 1915, the occupation of Haiti has been one purely of military control; and we are still there, occupying the island as a military force, and governing those people under a military régime. That which was begun under the former administration is being carried out assiduously and in entire harmony with the program as it came down to us. There is no party politics, therefore, in it.

Mr. NICHOLSON. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator a question.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. BORAH. I do.

Mr. NICHOLSON. When the plebiscite was held, what percentage of the legal voters of the island voted, as compared with the total voting population?

Mr. BORAH. I do not know what the total voting population amounts to. About 98,000 voted for it and about 7,000 against it. That would make about 105,000, or something like that, out of a population of 3,000,000; but I do not know what the exact voting population is.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator is in error. Only 882 voted against it.

Mr. BORAH. Oh, yes; I said "thousand" when I meant "hundred."

Mr. KING. Ninety-eight thousand are alleged to have voted for it.

Mr. NORRIS. How did it happen that 882 voted against it, I should like to know?

Mr. KING. I will let the able Senator from Idaho answer that.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, it may be that it will not be uninteresting to know, as I said a moment ago, that for many years there has been a desire upon the part of certain financial interests to get a hold in Haiti, and they have been active in creating a sentiment that we should take control of those people and govern them because they were not fit to govern themselves. In fact, Mr. President, it has become a very dangerous thing for a dependent people to let it be known that they have great natural resources or great wealth. As soon as it is discovered that any helpless people have great natural resources or great natural wealth there immediately grows up a most benevolent desire upon the part of superior nations to govern those people and lift them up.

That was true with reference to Syria. If it were not for the great wealth of Syria, France would not be in Syria to-day. If it were not for the great wealth of Mesopotamia, Great Britain would not be in Mesopotamia. If it were not for the incalculable wealth of Siberia, Japan would not be in Siberia. As soon as it is discovered that a dependent people, a helpless people, have vast natural resources this benevolent desire immediately becomes active, and we feel at once that those people are not fit to govern themselves, that they ought to have a better form of government. Although some of them have been governing themselves for a hundred years, it is discovered that they are no longer capable of self-government, and we immediately proceed to give them a better form of government and in the meantime to gather up their natural wealth.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President, since forcing on them the adoption of this new constitution allowing foreigners to hold land, have any foreigners gone there and acquired land and, if so, to what extent?

Mr. BORAH. I have been informed that some 200,000 acres have been gathered up by some two or three companies. A gentleman from New York who has investments there now was in my office a few days ago. He is one of the gentlemen who think we ought to stay there. However, he does say that we ought to do away with the military government. He says the military government is unsatisfactory to everybody; that we ought to establish there a civil form of government, but that we ought to remain there permanently, and he advised me that very large acreages were being gathered up; to what extent, he could not say. He had some investments there himself. I have seen it in print, however—it appears somewhere in this testimony—that over 200,000 acres have been acquired.

The testimony of Mr. Roger L. Farnham, of the National City Bank of New York, indicates that the interests he represents have in view the seizing of lands that native Haitians held for over a century under squatter rights, without, therefore, the rights of legal title deeds. These interests urged a modern survey of the island by the occupation in order to establish definite title deeds, and it appears that far over 200,000 acres of valuable lands have already been acquired. The inhabitants are at the mercy of this system of commercial penetration.

The Haitian-American Corporation of New York is one of the companies formed to "organize extensive plantations" in Haiti, to build sugar mills, and so forth. Mr. H. M. Pilkington, technical expert, vice president and manager of the American Development Co., and formerly technical expert to the Haitian-American Corporation, in his testimony, at page 790 of the hearings, says:

The original financing of the Haitian-American Corporation was brought about and put to the public directly and definitely upon assurance in Washington by competent people and competent officials that the treaty between the United States and Haiti was in fact to be a living thing. The large feature in the floating of the securities of this company, all of which floating came under my personal observation at the time, was predicated, one might say, wholly as to security upon the implied bona fides of the United States in carrying out this treaty, the basing of which was security for foreign capital.

In recounting a conversation between himself and H. P. Davis, general manager of the United West Indies Corporation, who had written articles in the National Geographic Magazine and other journals months before, declaring that Haiti's constitution must be rewritten, especially the clause regarding lands, he said—remember, this change of the constitution has been advocated by these people before we went there, but in this statement written by himself he said:

In a conversation I had with him—Davis—at the Cape in April, 1918, when he seemed to unfold his plans, adding that his corporation had unlimited capital * * * with stockholders, if not directors, from within the United States Government, therefore the occupation was practically at his and his corporation's command, and that they had the right of way in Haiti. * * * This was said in the presence of an educated native missionary.

Whether Mr. Davis and his associates have special influence in Washington with the State Department or not, the fact remains that what they have advocated has been done. The Pan-American Magazine of March 19, 1917, carries an article by Mr. Davis from which I quote:

Haiti has the tremendous advantage of still being a virgin country * * * fertile soil * * * mineral deposits unworked and still open to exploitation. * * * The marvelous wealth of valuable timber is practically untouched. Labor is and for many years will continue to be exceedingly cheap and abundant. * * * Uncle Sam has undertaken to furnish this "firm, yet gentle and beneficent, guidance," * * * and an opportunity * * * is open to any American with sufficient energy and capital to take advantage of the radical change resulting from intervention.

Mr. President, I think there is no doubt but that they are taking advantage of this change; to what extent, in its fullest purport, I am unable to state.

The situation in Haiti at the present time, Mr. President, is that of complete military control, and as an evidence of the rights of those who are complaining of the present condition of affairs, I read a dispatch which appeared in the American papers on April 6 this last year. This particular print from which I read is that of the Christian Science Monitor, of Boston. It is as follows:

WASHINGTON, April 6.—Georges Sylvain, one-time Haitian minister to France, officer of the Legion or Honor, president of the Union Patriotique, and one of the most distinguished men in Haiti, and M. Henriques, president of the Haitian Federation of Labor, were among those arrested as provocative agents by American occupation officials because of their connection with the mass meeting held at Port au Prince last Sunday against the proposed election of a new President by the council of state under direction of the American occupation, according to cables received here to-day. The domicile of M. Jolibois, one of the editors of the Haitian Courier, was broken into and searched on a similar charge.

Under the martial law as it is enforced by the occupation in Haiti, these cables stated, it is not permitted to criticize either the acts of the occupation or of the Haitian Government officials. Hence, it is declared, any protest against the plan of the occupation to have the council of state, appointed by the President and subject to his will, elect the new President is a violation of martial law.

One of the causes of irritation in Haiti is held by the society to be the loans now being "forced" upon Haiti by the American banking interests, who, it was declared, seek to save former bad investments by refunding all debts and establishing industries on the island on a basis which shall attract American capital, regardless of the rights of the natives. One of the purposes to which it is proposed to devote a small part of these loans is to land surveying.

Most of the land is held under "squatter" rights, and, although the persons on it may have been there for years and years, from generation to generation, it is maintained that they have no legal title, and, under the survey, the land will be sold.

Mr. McCORMICK. From whom is the Senator quoting now?

Mr. BORAH. I am reading a press dispatch which was printed in the Christian Science Monitor under date of April 6.

Mr. McCORMICK. It is the correspondent of the Christian Science Monitor who says that the loan is to be used in part for carrying out the land surveys?

Mr. BORAH. That is correct. I continue the reading:

It is alleged that the cotton and cane-sugar interests are advocating the land survey, so that when the land has been declared to belong to the State the American investors can, through the American occupation, obtain large tracts of the best agricultural lands at their own price. The small farmers, it is declared, will then be obliged to work for the development companies at the current wages fixed by the occupation—20 cents a day in the working season, which is only six months long.

The same dispatch, in general purport, was published in other papers. I do not know that it has ever been contradicted or denied. So far as the opinions therein expressed are concerned, we may have different views, but it states as a fact that these men were arrested for expressing their disapproval of the present occupation of Haiti.

There is another feature of this matter which I will have to discuss later, because I have not the data here, and that is with reference to these loans—the loan which is being made and forced upon Haiti, and also the loan which is being made and, in my judgment, forced upon San Domingo.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING].

Mr. KING. Mr. President, it is not my purpose to enter upon a discussion of this question at this time, and I shall say but little unless something develops during this debate which may call for a reply. I am inclined to this course the more readily because I intend to have read to the Senate what has been said by a committee of able lawyers, and they have presented the subject so much better than I possibly could that any words of mine would be regarded as superfluous.

Mr. McCORMICK. May I say to the Senator that that memorandum has been incorporated in the hearings of the committee and he can find it there.

Mr. KING. I desire to have incorporated in the record of the proceedings of this day, and I am going to have it read, a report dealing with the military occupancy of the Republic of Haiti. It was prepared by eminent lawyers, among them being Nelson S. Spencer, Mr. Moorfield Storey, Raymond B. Fosdick, and others whose names appear upon the report. I ask that the Secretary read the report:

Mr. NORRIS. May I say to the Senator that I have on my desk an address which I expect to put into the record later in the discussion, and I am wondering if it is the same one. The address to which I have reference is one that was delivered to the Secretary of State. Is it the same one?

Mr. KING. No; that is not the same one. This address was prepared by several lawyers.

Mr. NORRIS. This was, too.

Mr. KING. I think the Senator is alluding to an address presented by the Popular Government League, of which the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] is president and Mr. Judson King is secretary.

Mr. NORRIS. That is correct.

Mr. KING. That is not the report I am now presenting.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. What is the request of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. KING. I ask that the Secretary may read the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah asks unanimous consent that the document be read.

Mr. POINDEXTER. May I inquire of the Senator the approximate length of the document?

Mr. KING. It will not take long to read it. It is a concise statement of the facts relating to the occupation of Haiti.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I wanted to inquire of the Senator if it would not be advisable to mark the passages in it which he regards as relevant and have those read?

Mr. KING. It would be difficult to discriminate. I ask that it be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

INTRODUCTORY NOTE.

(Every material statement made in this document is derived from the official report of the hearings before a Select Committee of the United States Senate pursuant to Senate Resolution 112, authorizing an inquiry into the occupation and administration of the territories of the Republic of Haiti and the Dominican Republic. These hearings took place from October 4 to November 16, 1921. The official record of the proceedings has been published by the Government Printing Office. The facts disclosed are not only a part of the history of Haiti but most of them are established by testimony, by public documents and official communications and reports passing between the Secretary of the Navy, the Hon. Josephus Daniels, Rear Admiral William B. Caperton, United States Navy, and other officials. It is intended that the facts recited shall supply their own commentary. It is hoped that a recognition of the truth will lead to the adoption of the logical remedy.)

THE SEIZURE OF HAITI BY THE UNITED STATES.

"From 1804 to 1915 Haiti was a sovereign state under a republican form of government. As a recognized sovereign nation she became a signatory to The Hague Convention of 1907.

She won her independence from France in 1804. She was deprived of it in 1915 by the United States. Since then we have been in virtual control of her territory, our marines have been in military occupation of the country, and the former Republic has been stripped by us of every vestige of her sovereignty. This startling condition has been brought about under cover of a convention between the United States and the Republic of Haiti bearing date September 16, 1915, but not ratified by Haiti until November 11, 1915, under circumstances that will be presently detailed.

RELATIONS BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND HAITI.

"The population of Haiti is somewhat less than 3,000,000. It is largely illiterate, and except in the more important towns there is no middle class. There is an upper class, comparatively small numerically, but highly educated and cultured. As a colony Haiti suffered all the horrors of cruel slavery, with the consequence that a century of independence has not effaced the fear of foreign encroachment and domination. As a measure of protection against alien control, the several constitutions of the Republic have embodied provisions rigidly excluding foreigners from the ownership of land. From an economic standpoint conditions have been and are exceedingly primitive. From time to time there have been internal political dissensions resulting in disturbances. It is noteworthy, however, that no American citizen has been injured in person or property by the people of Haiti; nor have any other foreigners been molested, even when internal conflict occurred. Foreign investments have at all times been respected, the interest on Haiti's foreign debt has been scrupulously paid, and her relations with other governments have been free from adverse criticism. She has never manifested hostility to the United States and has given no occasion for our intervention in her affairs.

"Haiti has, however, been long suspicious of possible attempts by the United States to gain a foothold in or complete control over her territory. From 1847 on, the United States has in fact made several attempts to obtain control of the harbors of Samana Bay, on the eastern coast of the Dominican Republic, and of Mole St. Nicholas, on the northwest coast of Haiti, for avowed use as naval bases. Haiti consistently declined to consider either a cession or lease of any part of her territory to the United States. Nevertheless, in 1891, our Government sent Admiral Gherardi with a considerable fleet to Port au Prince, the capital of Haiti, to treat for a cession or lease of Mole St. Nicholas. The Haitian Government objected even to a discussion of the proposal, and our fleet was withdrawn.

"On six occasions during 1914 and 1915 the United States made direct overtures to Haiti to secure control of her customhouses and their administration. All of these efforts proved futile. In the meantime a number of revolutions were in progress in Haiti, similar in character to those that have frequently occurred in Mexico and in various Central American and South American countries, and frequent changes in governmental administration took place.

"Vessels belonging to our Navy frequently entered Haitian waters. In the latter part of 1914 our Government offered assistance to the then President of Haiti, in view of a threatened revolution, upon conditions which were rejected. In October, 1914, Mr. Bryan, then Secretary of State, wrote to President Wilson:

> "It seemed to me of first importance that the naval force in Haitian waters should be at once increased, not only for the purpose of protecting foreign interests, but also as evidence of the earnest intention of this Government to settle the unsatisfactory state of affairs which exists.[1] [Italics ours.]

"In accordance with this program additional vessels were dispatched into the vicinity of Haiti. In November and December, 1914, the State Department communicated various terms, including the control of the customhouses of Haiti, as conditions upon which a newly chosen President would be recognized by our Government. Haiti again declined these conditions.

"On December 10, 1914, the United States Minister in Haiti formally presented to the Haitian Government a project looking to the control and administration of the Haitian customs service by our Government. This likewise proved unacceptable.

THE SEIZURE OF HAITIAN FUNDS BY THE UNITED STATES IN DECEMBER, 1914.[2]

"On December 17, 1914, without preliminary warning, a force of United States marines was landed at Port au Prince from the U. S. S. Machias. These marines proceeded to the vaults of the National Bank of Haiti, and forcibly seized and carried away $500,000, which were transported on the Machias to New York. This money was the property of the Haitian Government and had been deposited in the bank for the redemption of its paper currency. This bank was a French corporation, four-fifths of its capital stock being owned or held in France and the remaining one-fifth by New York banking interests. This institution was the sole depository of the Government funds and was vested with the privilege of issuing notes. The Haitian Government at once protested against this violation of its sovereignty and asked for an explanation, which was never vouchsafed.

"In March, 1915, the United States sent a special mission to Haiti to negotiate for American control, which was again refused. This was followed in May, 1915, by a further commission, which presented to the Haitian Government a project for United States military protection and intervention, arbitration of claims made by foreigners, and the prohibition of the cession or use of Mole St. Nicholas to any other government. To this proposal the Haitian Government presented a counterproject for financial and military aid, carefully drawn to limit absolutely the extent and duration of military aid by the United States in suppressing internal disorders. These proposals again came to nothing.

THE LANDING OF OUR MARINES IN HAITI IN JULY, 1915.

"On July 27, 1915, revolutionary disorders broke out at Port au Prince, during which the assassination of the President followed a massacre of political prisoners. For the moment there was no Haitian Government, but even during these disturbances no foreigners were molested. On the following day American naval and marine forces in Haitian waters, under the command of Admiral Caperton, landed and occupied Port au Prince, and shortly afterwards took possession of the other principal ports and towns in the Republic. During this period the admiral's official messages to the Navy Department state specifically that he had acquired and exercised control of the internal situation and that governmental functions were being carried on by a body of citizens acting under his directions. A few days later he directed this committee of citizens to resign and gave orders for the restoration of the government treasury service to the National Bank of Haiti, from which it had been removed previously by the Haitian Government.

THE ELECTION OF A NEW PRESIDENT FOR HAITI.

"The admiral's daily reports to Washington reflect with startling frankness the situation at the Haitian capital, the march of events looking to the realization of expectations, and the influence exerted by the United States in the election of the new President and in the negotiation and acceptance of a treaty.

"The Haitian Legislature, consisting of a Chamber of Deputies and a Senate, was in session and was about to proceed to the election of a new President to fill the existing vacancy, but under orders from our State Department Admiral Caperton twice induced the chambers to postpone the election. American naval officers at the capital canvassed the political situation carefully. Several prominent and universally respected Haitian citizens were asked to be candidates for the Presidency, but all refused. One of them, M. Léger, former minister at Washington, characterized by Lord Pauncefote as 'the ablest, most accomplished diplomat I have known,'[3] refused upon the ground that he was for Haiti, not for the United States, and that he would have to wait and see what the United States would demand of Haiti in order to be in a position to defend Haitian interests. When Sudre Dartiguenave, the president of the senate, proclaimed himself a candidate for election to the Presidency of the Republic and offered if elected President to accede to any terms which the United States might name, including the surrender of customs control and the cession of Mole St. Nicholas, Admiral Caperton notified Washington of the fact. He advised that the breaking up of the bands of revolutionaries by the forces of the United States was imperative if the United States desired at this time 'to negotiate a treaty for financial control of Haiti.'[4] The State Department, 'by the instruction of the President,' requested the Navy Department to send a sufficient force of marines to control the situation absolutely, and Caperton was instructed that the United States favored the election of Dartiguenave.[5]

"The policy that had been formulated at Washington was expressed in a message wherein the Navy Department directed the admiral by proclamations and otherwise 'to assure the Haitian people that the United States of America has no object in view except to insure, establish, and help maintain Haitian independence and the establishment of a firm and stable government by the Haitian people. * * * It is the intention to retain United States forces in Haiti only so long as will be necessary for this purpose.'[6]

"In the meantime the State Department had advised the American minister at Port au Prince of the procedure that he was to pursue to assist the Haitian Congress in electing a President, saying that the United States would expect to be intrusted with customs control and such financial control as might be deemed necessary. The night before the election

American naval officers informed the senators, deputies, and candidates for President of the intentions and policy of the United States, as instructed.

"On August 12, 1915, M. Dartiguenave was elected President, Admiral Caperton's chief of staff being on the floor of the voting hall and American marines guarding the approaches. The election was free in the sense that the deputies and senators who voted were not terrorized by revolutionary groups, but, on the other hand, the situation, precipitated by the events of July 27 and 28, was such that the naval and marine forces under Admiral Caperton clearly exercised a strong influence in favor of Dartiguenave. American intervention was a fait accompli; American military control was growing from day to day. The State and Navy Departments were kept fully informed of all developments, and the presence and activities of our naval forces were specifically directed from Washington.

"On August 14, 1915, two days after the election of Dartiguenave, the State Department notified the American Legation at Port au Prince to submit to the Haitian President at once the draft of a treaty providing for control of customs and finances and military intervention by the United States. The legation was instructed to advise the Haitian President that 'the Haitian Congress will be pleased to pass forthwith a resolution authorizing the President elect to conclude, without modification, the treaty submitted by you.'[7] The legation complied. A carefully formulated draft of a treaty, unquestionably prepared for the occasion with manifest deliberation, was accordingly submitted on August 17, 1915. Negotiations for its acceptance and ratification were unremittingly carried on by Admiral Caperton and his naval officers in conjunction with the legation.

THE TREATY.

"This elaborate document begins with a preamble which, in the light of the facts related and those about to be recounted, is the height of irony. It declares:

"The United States and the Republic of Haiti, desiring to confirm and strengthen the amity existing between them by the most cordial cooperation in measures for their common advantage, and the Republic of Haiti desiring to remedy the present condition of its revenues and finances, to maintain the tranquillity of the Republic, to carry out plans for the economic development and prosperity of the Republic and its people, and the United States being in full sympathy with all of these aims and objects, and desiring to contribute in all proper ways to their accomplishment, * * * have appointed for that purpose plenipotentiaries.

"By its terms the President of Haiti is to appoint, upon the nomination of the President of the United States, a general receiver, to collect, receive, and apply all customs duties on imports and exports accruing at the several customhouses and ports of entry of the Republic of Haiti. Upon nomination by the President of the United States the President of Haiti is to appoint a financial adviser, who shall be an officer attached to the ministry of finance, to give effect to whose proposals and labors the ministry will lend efficient aid. The financial adviser is, among other things, to devise an adequate system of public accounting; to aid in increasing the revenues and adjusting them to the expenses; to inquire into the validity of the debts of the Republic; to recommend improved methods of collecting and applying the revenues. The Government of the Republic of Haiti is to provide by law or appropriate decrees for the payment of customs duties to the general receiver and to extend to the receivership and to the financial adviser all needed aid and full protection in the execution of the powers conferred and duties imposed. All sums collected and received by the general receiver are to be applied, first, to the payment of the salaries and allowances of the general receiver, his assistants and employees, and expenses of the receivership, and the salary and expenses of the financial adviser; second, to the interest and sinking fund of the public debt of the Republic of Haiti; and, third, to the maintenance of a constabulary; and then the remainder to the Haitian Government for the purposes of current expenses. The Republic of Haiti is not to increase its public debt except by previous agreement with the President of the United States, and shall not contract any debt or assume any financial obligation unless the ordinary revenues of the Republic available for that purpose, after defraying the expenses of the Government, shall be adequate to pay the interest and provide a sinking fund for the discharge of the debt. The Republic of Haiti is not, without a previous agreement with the President of the United States, to modify the customs duties in a manner to reduce the revenues therefrom, and is to cooperate with the financial adviser in his recommendations for improving the method of collecting and disbursing the revenues and for new sources of needed income. The Haitian Government obligates itself to create without delay an efficient constabulary, urban and rural, composed of native Haitians. This constabulary is to be organized and officered by Americans appointed by the President of Haiti upon nomination by the President of the United States. These officers are to be clothed with the proper and necessary authority and to be upheld in the performance of their functions. The constabulary shall, under the direction of the Haitian Government, have supervision and control of arms and ammunition, military supplies, and traffic therein throughout the country. The Government of Haiti agrees not to surrender any of its territory by sale, lease, or otherwise, or jurisdiction over such territory, to any foreign Government or power, nor to enter into any treaty or contract with any foreign power that will impair or tend to impair the independence of Haiti. The treaty is to remain in force for 10 years from the exchange of ratifications, and for a further term of 10 years if for specific reasons presented by either of the parties its purpose has not been fully accomplished.

"The obligations assumed by the United States are contained in the provision:

"The Government of the United States will, by its good offices, aid the Haitian Government in the proper and efficient development of its agricultural, mineral, and commercial resources, and in the establishment of the finances of Haiti on a firm and solid basis.

PROCEEDINGS AFTER PRESENTATION OF DRAFT OF THE TREATY.

"On August 19, 1915, Admiral Caperton was notified that the State Department desired him to assume charge of the 10 principal customhouses in Haiti, to collect the customs dues, to use the funds for the organization of a constabulary and temporary public works, and to support the new Haitian Government. The funds were to be deposited in separate accounts in the name of Admiral Caperton, the United States Government holding these funds 'in trust for the people of Haiti.'[9] Admiral Caperton carried out these instructions, and between August 21 and September 2, 1915, seized the customhouses at the 10 principal ports. For several months naval officers collected all customs dues and made all disbursements. This deprived the Haitian Government of all income whatsoever, since the customhouses were practically the sole sources of national revenue.

"In response to the order of August 19, 1915, Admiral Caperton sent a long message to the Navy Department, reading in part as follows:

"Following message is secret and confidential. United States has now actually accomplished a military intervention in affairs of another nation. Hostility exists now in Haiti and has existed for number of years against such action. Serious hostile contacts have only been avoided by prompt and rapid military action, which has given United States control before resistance has had time to organize. We now hold capital of country and two other important seaports.[10]

"The seizure of the customhouses aroused the strongest opposition on the part of the people, and the Haitian Government, in a series of notes addressed to the American chargé d'affaires, protested vigorously against the violation of its sovereignty. No explanation or apology was ever offered by the Government of the United States.

OBJECTIONS TO TREATY BY THE HAITIAN CHAMBERS.

"In the meantime the Haitian Government was considering the draft of the treaty submitted to it on August 17, 1915. The President was favorable to the treaty, but opposition to it was growing in the cabinet and the chambers, due to 'fear of sentiment throughout the country against the American customs control, propagated constantly during the last few years by the faction leaders.'[11] The President and the cabinet thereupon threatened to resign for this same reason. Admiral Caperton recommended to the Navy Department that in the event of the resignation of the new Haitian Government a military government should be established, with an American officer as military governor, adding significantly: 'Present is most critical time in relations with Haiti, and our decision now will to a great extent determine future course. If military government is established, we would be bound not to abandon Haitian situation until affairs of country are set at right and predominant interests of United States of America secured.'[12]

THE PROCLAMATION OF MARTIAL LAW BY ADMIRAL CAPERTON.

"By the early part of September, 1915, the augmented forces under command of Admiral Caperton were in complete control of all the principal towns and routes in Haiti, had seized all the sources of national revenue, had the custody of all the national funds, and were engaged in expending them directly, without turning over any portion of them to the Haitian Government. Public order and the public purse were altogether in the mastery of the Navy Department. On September 3, 1915, Admiral Caperton declared martial law in the city of Port au Prince, by proclamation, in which he announced:

"* * * In order to afford the inhabitants of Port au Prince and other territory hereinafter described the privileges of the Government, exercising all the functions necessary for the establishment and maintenance of the fundamental rights of man, I hereby, under my authority as commanding officer of the forces of the United States of America in Haiti and Haitian waters, proclaim that martial law exists in the city of Port au Prince and the immediate territory now occupied by the forces under my command.

"I further proclaim, in accordance with the law of nations and the usages, customs, and functions of my own and other Governments, that I am invested with the power and the responsibility of government in all its functions and branches throughout the territory above described; and the proper administration of such government by martial law will be provided for in regulations to be issued from time to time as required by the commanding officer of the forces of the United States of America in Haiti and Haitian waters.

"The martial law herein proclaimed and the things in that respect so ordered will not be deemed or taken to interfere with the proceedings of the constitutional Government and Congress of Haiti, or with the administration of justice in the courts of law existing therein, which do not affect the military operations or the authorities of the Government of the United States of America. * * *[13]

"On September 8, 1915, Admiral Caperton sent to the commanding officer of the battleship Connecticut, in northern Haitian waters, the following message:

"Successful negotiation of treaty is predominant part present mission. After encountering many difficulties treaty situation at present looks more favorable than usual. This has been effected by exercising military pressure at propitious moments in negotiations. Yesterday two members of cabinet who have blocked negotiations heretofore resigned. President himself believed to be anxious to conclude treaty. At present am holding up offensive operations and allowing President time to complete cabinet and try again. Am therefore not yet ready to begin offensive operations at Cape Haitien, but will hold them in abeyance as additional pressure.[14]

"Naval officers were constantly urging the members of the Haitian Government to accept the treaty, pointing out the necessity of its acceptance without modification. The treaty was finally signed by the Haitian Government on September 16, 1915, and, although not ratified by the United States until May, 1916, a modus vivendi providing for the immediate application of the treaty followed.

THE WITHHOLDING OF FUNDS NECESSARY FOR CURRENT EXPENSES OF HAITIAN GOVERNMENT.

"Under the Haitian constitution the treaty, to be binding, had to be ratified by the senate and the chamber. To facilitate its prompt ratification, the Haitian Government asked for an immediate assurance that the United States would procure a temporary loan to the Haitian Government, and represented that it had no funds at its disposal, even to pay salaries and current expenses. No such assurance was received, but, exercising further pressure upon the Government, Admiral Caperton, under instructions from Washington, seized a consignment of unsigned bank notes intended for the Haitian Government, notifying the Navy Department that the notes so seized would be signed by the National Bank and turned over to the Haitian Government 'immediately after ratification of the convention.'[15] This was done in spite of the fact that the issue of these notes had previously been authorized by the Haitian Government. The admiral and the chargé d'affaires separately requested the authorities in Washington to permit the former to turn over to the Haitian Government funds sufficient for current expenses and for the payment of back salaries. The admiral informed President Dartiguenave that 'funds would be immediately available upon ratification of the treaty.' The President seemed utterly discouraged by this action, and humbly pointed out that the delay in ratifying the treaty was not due to any lack of effort by himself or his cabinet; that the withholding of funds only furnished another weapon to those opposed to the treaty; and that if the United States Government persisted in withholding all funds ratification would become so difficult that he and his cabinet would resign 'rather than attempt the fight in the senate under this handicap.'[16]

"Finally, on October 3, 1915, Secretary Daniels authorized Admiral Caperton to arrange for the payment to the Haitian Government of a weekly amount necessary to meet its current expenses, with the further statement: 'Question payment back salary will be settled by department immediately after ratification of treaty.'[17] The Navy Department inquired several times of Admiral Caperton why ratification of the treaty was being delayed, and received the reply that since the admiral had continually received assurances that a majority in the senate favored the treaty, he had 'refrained from taking any steps which might appear as using force to secure ratification.'[18] On October 6, 1915, the chamber of communes ratified the treaty. It was still necessary to obtain the ratification of the Haitian Senate.

"In the meantime, the funds collected at the several customhouses were being applied by the naval collectors to defray the expenses of the constabulary, of public works, and the like. No payment of the interest charges on the Haitian public debt was made, although the receipts of the customs service had previously been lawfully pledged by prior Haitian Governments. In fact, the treaty provisions for the use of customs funds for this purpose immediately after paying the expenses of the receivership were never complied with by the American receiver general until 1920, notwithstanding the fact that sufficient funds were realized from the customs to meet the demands of other categories of expenses, which, according to the treaty, were subordinated to the foreign loan service.

"On November 3, 1915, Admiral Caperton, referring to the treaty and to its criticisms, pointed out to President Dartiguenave that 'the only objections are unimportant technical points and abstract principles. These and other details can be arranged later.'[19]

THE FINAL ACT OF COERCION.

"On November 5, 1915, the Senate committee made a report on the treaty accepting some of its provisions and suggesting modification of others. A few days later the Hector, one of the American naval vessels in Haitian waters, at the instance of Admiral Caperton, made a special trip to bring one François, 'who will be elected to fill vacancy,' from Cape Haitien to Port au Prince in order to secure his vote for the ratification of the treaty, because, in the language of the admiral, 'Absolutely essential all possible votes for ratification be secured.'[20]

"On November 10, 1915, the Secretary of the Navy gave the admiral the following explicit and unprecedented instructions as to what he was to say and do:

"Arrange with President Dartiguenave that he call a cabinet meeting before the session of senate which will pass upon ratification of treaty and request that you be permitted to appear before that meeting to make a statement to President and to members of cabinet. On your own authority state the following before these officers: 'I have the honor to inform the President of Haiti and the members of his cabinet that I am personally gratified that public sentiment continues favorable to the treaty; that there is a strong demand from all classes for immediate ratification; and that treaty will be ratified Thursday. I am sure that you gentlemen will understand my sentiment in this matter, and I am confident if the treaty fails of ratification that my Government has the intention to retain control in Haiti until the desired end is accomplished, and that it will forthwith proceed to the complete pacification of Haiti so as to insure internal tranquility necessary to such development of country and its industry as will afford relief to the starving populace now unemployed. Meanwhile the present Government will be supported in the effort to secure stable conditions and lasting peace in Haiti, whereas those offering opposition can only expect such treatment as their conduct merits. The United States Government is particularly anxious for immediate ratification by the present senate of this treaty, which was drawn up with the full intention of employing as many Haitians as possible to aid in giving effect to its provisions, so that suffering may be relieved at the earliest possible date. Rumors of bribery to defeat the treaty are rife, but are not believed. However, should they prove true, those who accept or give bribery will be vigorously prosecuted.' It is expected that you will be able to make this sufficiently clear to remove all opposition and to secure immediate ratification. Acknowledge. Daniels.[21] [Italics ours.]

"The admiral complied with this command. In view of the express and covert threats thus conveyed, on the following day, November 11, 1915, the treaty was ratified by the senate.

"From the beginning of August, 1915, until long after the so-called ratification of the treaty, the situation in Haiti can best be described in the words of Admiral Caperton: 'The status of our administration in Haiti was at this time purely one of military control.'[22] During this period offensive military operations were conducted by our forces against Haitian revolutionaries, which resulted in considerable loss of life to the Haitians, under circumstances which will not be now discussed.

HAITI UNDER THE TREATY.

"Although war has never been declared by us against Haiti and there has been no possible cause for war against her or her people during the greater part of the six years following the ratification of the treaty, martial law has been maintained in Haiti by our marines, and martial law is in force there today. Repeated trials and sentences by our provost courts and military commissions have taken place there.

"The Haitian Chambers were dissolved in 1917 for the second time since the invasion, and no elections have taken place in nearly five years. Not a few Haitians welcomed the original offer of our friendly aid in July, 1915, as a means of escape from the chaos of the moment. First disillusioned by our seizure of their national revenues and funds and then by the successive coercive steps taken by the United States, they were long ago thoroughly disappointed not only by the lack of any constructive policy instituted in their behalf but by the suppressive measures which completely violated the spirit of our professed intentions. Knowing that the treaty was imposed by duress and that it has not been adhered to by the United States, the people of Haiti are now demanding its abrogation, the abolition of control by martial law, and the restoration of their national institutions suppressed during the years of the occupation. Under a subsequent protocol for a loan the receivership of customs and the financial control are to be retained during the life of the loan. Haiti is thus, under the present status, tied hand and foot to the United States under a treaty forced upon her by military occupation, by coercion and duress, by fear of the consequences of martial law, and by the forcible seizure, the placing under an embargo, and the withholding of all her national funds and pecuniary resources.

"Commentary upon this sad chapter in American history is superfluous. A stain has attached to our national honor which, unless speedily expunged, will become an indelible blot. For this great Nation to play the part of a bully toward another, weak in material resources and physically powerless to maintain its sovereign rights against incalculable odds, is nothing short of political immorality. The command of self-restraint leads one to refrain from drawing parallels, and a desire to avoid all sordid considerations does not permit a reference to the economic injury that our country would inevitably sustain were it to delay further the undoing of this stupendous wrong.

THE PRESENT GOVERNMENT IN HAITI.

"In the spring of 1917 the senate and chamber of deputies were in session engaged in considering the draft of a new constitution for the country, submitted by American officials. Much opposition existed to several provisions of the proposed constitution, chiefly to one which would allow foreigners to acquire and own land. The President and cabinet favored the draft; a deadlock was imminent. Thereupon the President dissolved the chambers. Since then there have been no elections to and no sessions of the chambers, which in consequence are now defunct. Such semblance of government as remains in the hands of the native Hatians is exercised by the President, a cabinet, and a council of state, whose members hold office solely during the pleasure of the President. It is common knowledge in Haiti that the present Government owes its continuance in power solely to the support and presence of our marines.

"The term of President Dartiguenave will expire on May 15, 1922. Under the Haitian constitution the President is chosen by the senate and chambers in joint meeting; the senators and deputies are chosen by direct popular vote in January of an even-numbered year, indicated by presidential decree. No call for an election in January, 1922, was issued and there can therefore be no session of the chambers in April to elect a President for the new term commencing May 15. There will thus exist either a vacancy or, without constitutional authority, the present incumbent, or a nominal successor, will be appointed by the council of state. In any event, after May 15, 1922, the Government will be even less representative than it has been since the treaty. It is not unreasonable to assume that Washington could without difficulty induce the Haitian Government to proceed to the election of chambers and of a successor to President Dartiguenave at an early day. It is only with such a new Haitian Government that any negotiations for a realignment of Haitian-American relations or for an adjustment of Haitian finances can fairly be carried on. To negotiate with the Government of President Dartiguenave would be in keeping with the methods employed in 1915 to force acceptance of the treaty. The continuance of this state of affairs is intolerable to those proud of American traditions and moved by the spirit of liberty and justice.

CONCLUSIONS.

"From the foregoing summary of the salient facts as to our intervention in Haiti and descriptive of the present status of the Haitian Government we deduce these general and specific conclusions:

"1. The presence of our military forces in Haiti after the disturbances of July 27–28, 1915, had quieted down was violative of well-recognized American principles.

"2. The seizure and withholding by our force in 1915 of Haitian national funds was a violation of international law and of the repeated professions by responsible American Government officials of our position and attitude toward Latin-American Republics and weaker governments.

"3. The imposition and enforcement of martial law without a declaration of war by our Congress and the conduct of offensive operations in Haiti by Admiral Caperton prior to the acceptance of the treaty by Haiti were equally clear violations of international law and of our own Constitution.

"4. The methods employed by the United States in Haiti to force acceptance and ratification of the treaty framed by the United States, namely, the direct use of military, financial, and political pressure, violate every canon of fair and equal dealing between independent sovereign nations and of American professions of international good faith.

"5. The maintenance in Haiti of any United States military force or of the control exercised by treaty officials under cover of the treaty of September, 1915, amounts to a conscious and intentional participation in the wrong of the original aggression and coercion.

"6. The present native Government of Haiti, chosen in 1915, unsupported by any elected representatives since 1917, being now at the end of its term of office, no negotiations should take place with such Government which involve the future of Haiti or which can in any material respect affect its future.

"7. The functions of a department of colonies and dependencies assumed by the Navy Department and conferred on it by mere executive action are unauthorized by Congress or by other sanction of law, and should be condemned as essentially illegal and as a usurpation of power.

"8. We declare, without qualification, that the honor and good name of the United States, the preservation of the sovereignty, and the cherished liberty of Haiti and her right to fair dealing on the part of the United States, as well as the possibility of assuring the continuance in the future of honorable and amicable relations between our country and Latin America, based on trust and confidence, all require—

"(a) The immediate abrogation by the United States of the treaty of 1915, unconditionally and without qualification.

"(b) The holding of elections of representatives to the legislative bodies of Haiti and of a President by the free will of the people at an early day.

"(c) The negotiation of a new treaty with a new Haitian administration for friendly cooperation between the United States and Haiti upon such terms as shall be mutually satisfactory to both countries and by the methods that obtain between free and independent sovereign States."

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I regret that the Senate regards this vital question as of so little importance that when it was so ably presented by the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] but a handful of Senators were present. The statement or report just read is so important, and deals with a question so vital, not only to others but to our own country and the policy of our Government, that it should attract not only the attention of the Senate and those in public positions but all who are interested in the welfare of our country and the preservation of the traditions and institutions of this Republic.

Mr. President, I also have a remarkably able and comprehensive discussion of the entire question, involved in the policy of the United States in intervening in the Republic of Haiti and in the Dominican Republic, prepared by Dr. Ernest H. Gruening, managing editor of The Nation, of New York, and published in Current History of March, 1922, which I ask may be printed in the RECORD. I regret that this great paper has not reached the homes of all Americans. It is a calm, judicial presentation of the salient facts in the case. It is convincing, and is so fortified that it can stand every attack.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

CONQUEST OF HAITI AND SANTO DOMINGO.

[By Ernest H. Gruening, managing editor of The Nation, New York.]

(A documented narrative of the United States Government's seizure of political and military control in the two island Republics. Ruthless destruction of Dominican self-government. "The gravest breach of fundamental American traditions in our history.")

Hispaniola, or Haiti, is the second largest island in the Antilles. It lies between Cuba and Porto Rico. It was discovered by Columbus, and the earliest Caucasian civilization in this hemisphere took root there. The tomb supposed to hold Columbus's ashes is in the Cathedral of Santo Domingo. The eastern two-thirds of the island is occupied by the Dominican Republic, the western one-third by the Republic of Haiti. The island was a French colony till 1804, although the French claims were frequently disputed by the Spaniards, who at various times established themselves in the eastern part, where language and culture remain Spanish. Following nearly 15 years of struggle, which began when the Bastile fell, the natives achieved their independence. The revolution was unique in that the revolutionaries, who had formerly been slaves, secured the political independence of their country and their personal freedom as well. The Republic of Haiti was established on January 1, 1804—the second Republic in this hemisphere. In 1844 the eastern two-thirds of the island seceded and set up the Dominican Republic.

The Republic of Haiti continued free and independent until 1915. During that 111 years it had troublous history. For many years recognition of this little State was refused by other world powers, who feared the effect on their own slaves. The French, under the constant threat of reinvasion, succeeded in exacting a 90,000,000-franc indemnity for the property of Frenchmen ousted in Haiti's war of independence. Charles X of France then recognized the Republic. American recognition did not come until the Presidency of Abraham Lincoln. The relations with the United States from then on until 1915 amounted chiefly to negotiations and efforts to secure the cession of Mole St. Nicholas, a harbor at the northwestern extremity of the island. It controls the Windward Passage, and the United States desired it for a naval base. All these efforts failed. The Haitians adhered firmly to the constitutional provision, which forbade the cession of territory. During 1914 and 1915 the United States began overtures to Haiti of a different character. A treaty giving Americans control of the customs and finances was proposed. The cession of Mole St. Nicholas appears also in the earlier exchanges. In October, 1914, Mr. Bryan, Secretary of State, wrote to President Wilson, urging the immediate increase of our naval forces in Haitian waters, "not only for the purpose of protecting foreign interests, but also as an evidence of the earnest intention of this Government to settle the unsatisfactory state of affairs which exists." More naval vessels were sent. At the same time the United States offered to assist the President of Haiti to put down certain threatened revolutionary disturbances. Certain conditions were attached to this assistance, and it was refused. In November and December modifications of previous treaty drafts were again submitted. They proposed the control and administration of the Haitian customs by the United States, and were again refused.

On December 13, 1914, without warning to the Haitian Government, American marines landed in the Haitian capital from the U. S. S. Machias. They went to the vaults of the National Bank of Haiti and carried away $500,000 in gold, the property of the Haitian National Government, on deposit in the bank for the redemption of paper money. This procedure had been arranged between the Secretary of State and the American director of the National Bank of Haiti, who had been in charge since the control was secured by the National City Bank of New York in 1911. The reason assigned for the removal of the gold was that the bank feared revolutionary activities. The Haitian Government protested to Washington against this violation of its sovereignty, but no explanation was ever given.

LANDING OF MARINES.

Subsequent negotiations brought about successive modifications, in Haiti's favor, of the proposed convention. The Haitians indicated willingness to secure American financial aid and friendly cooperation, but would not consent to any abdication of their sovereign rights, and so all negotiations came to naught. On July 1, 1915, the U. S. S. Washington, with Rear Admiral Caperton on board, arrived at Cape Haitien, on the north of the island. He established a field radio station ashore on July 3, and on the 9th landed marines from the Washington and bluejackets from the Eagle. On the 27th a revolution broke out in the capital. The President, Vilbrun Guillaume, seized some two hundred Haitians of the better class and threw them into prison. During the night, either at his order or that of the military commander of the capital, General Oscar, these political prisoners were massacred. The next morning a mob of friends and relatives of the victims marched to the presidential palace. The President fled to the French Legation. The mob pursued him there, dragged him and General Oscar out and cut them to pieces. Quiet was immediately restored. There was no looting and no other violence. A committee of safety took charge.

The same day, July 28, a regiment of marines was landed south of the capital. They took possession of all strategic points and disarmed the inhabitants. There was virtually no resistance. On August 10 Admiral Caperton issued the following proclamation:

"I am directed by the United States Government to assure the Haitian people that the United States has no object in view except to insure, establish, and help maintain Haitian independence and the establishment of a stable and firm government by the Haitian people. Every assistance will be given to the Haitian people in their attempt to secure these ends. It is the intention to retain United States forces in Haiti only so long as will be necessary for this purpose."

Meantime the election of the President by the Legislative Chambers was twice delayed at the request of Admiral Caperton, who was acting under orders from the State Department. Secretary Lansing's orders to the American minister were, in part, as follows:

"In order that no misunderstanding can possibly occur after election, it should be made perfectly clear to candidates, as soon as possible, and in advance of election, that the United States expects to be intrusted with the practical control of the customs and such financial control over the affairs of the Republic of Haiti as the United States may deem necessary for efficient administration.

"The Government of the United States considers it a duty to support a constitutional government. * * * It has no design upon the political and territorial integrity of Haiti."

FORCIBLE INTERVENTION.

In the interval granted, American naval officers in the capital sought a candidate who would agree in advance to sign and support any treaty which the United States would submit. Several thus approached refused. Among them was the Hon. J. N. Léger, for many years Haitian minister at Washington, characterized by Lord Pauncefote as "the ablest diplomat I have ever known." He could not agree to such conditions, he said; he was "for Haiti, not for the United States." Finally, Philip Sudre Dartiguenave, president of the senate, appeared as a candidate and offered, if elected, to accede to any terms the United States desired, including customs control and cession of Mole St. Nicholas. Upon being apprised of this fact, the Navy Department notified Admiral Caperton that it preferred the election of Dartiguenave. Under American supervision, he was elected on August 12.

Two days later, August 14, a draft of a treaty was presented. It contained all the clauses which the Haitians had rejected in previous peaceful negotiations—and further conditions. The American legation was instructed to advise the Haitian President that "the Haitian Congress will be pleased to pass forthwith a resolution authorizing the president elect to conclude, without modification, the treaty submitted by you." The legation transmitted the message. Negotiations for the acceptance of the treaty were thenceforth carried on by Admiral Caperton and his naval officers, acting jointly with the legation. On August 19 Secretary Daniels ordered the seizure of the Haitian customhouses, adding: "Confer for purpose of having Dartiguenave solicit above action. Whether president requests or not, proceed." By September 2 the 10 principal customhouses had been taken over. The Haitian Government protested in the strongest terms in a series of notes, but in vain. Meanwhile strong opposition was evidenced in the Haitian cabinet and congress against ratifying the treaty. On September 3 Admiral Caperton proclaimed martial law in the capital, and on September 8 sent the following message to Captain Durell, commanding the Connecticut at Cape Haitien:

"Successful negotiation of treaty is predominant part of present mission. After encountering many difficulties, treaty situation at present looks more favorable than usual. This has been effected by the exercising of military pressure at propitious moment in negotiations. Yesterday two members of cabinet who had blocked negotiations resigned. President himself believed to be anxious to conclude treaty. At present am holding up offensive operations and allowing President time to complete cabinet and try again. Am therefore not yet ready to begin offensive operations at Cape Haitien, but will hold them in abeyance as additional pressure."

Meanwhile the customs receipts, virtually the sole revenue of the Republic, were held up by Admiral Caperton, so that there were no funds for the payment of Government salaries and other current expenses. On October 2 Admiral Caperton informed the President that "funds will be immediately available upon ratification of the treaty." The President replied that if funds were further withheld he could not face the growing opposition of the senate, especially in view of the steadily increasing subjugation of the country by American naval forces, but would have to resign. Upon transmission of these facts to the Navy Department, the latter authorized the allowance of a certain weekly amount to the Haitian Government to meet current expenses, saying also: "The question of payment of back salary will be settled by the department immediately after the ratification of the treaty." The Haitian cabinet had ratified on September 16. The chamber of deputies followed suit on October 6. During these weeks several messages from the Navy Department demanded to know the cause of the delay in securing ratification. On November 3 Admiral Caperton, in a statement to the President, said in part:

"I have given Capt. Edward L. Beach, who is my senior captain, orders to do everything in his power to get the treaty ratified. Accordingly, he has repeatedly seen different members of the senate treaty committee, as well as other prominent and influential Haitians, and has earnestly and forcefully presented to these members my reasons why the senate committee should reconsider the report it has determined upon, and should recommend immediate ratification by the senate of the treaty as it has passed the House. Captain Beach will continue to work for this ratification. * * * The only objections are unimportant technical points and abstract principles. These and other details can be arranged later."

On November 5 the senate presented its objections to the treaty and demanded certain modifications. On November 7, following the election—to fill a vacancy—of a new senator known to be favorable to the treaty, Admiral Caperton sent the U. S. S. Hector to transport him from Cape Haitien to Port au Prince. On November 10 Secretary Daniels sent the following message to Admiral Caperton:

"* * * Arrange with President Dartiguenave that he call a cabinet meeting before the session of senate which will pass upon ratification of treaty and request that you be permitted to appear before that meeting to make a statement to the President and to members of the cabinet. On your own authority state the following before these officers: 'I have the honor to inform the President of Haiti and the members of his cabinet that I am personally gratified that public sentiment continues favorable to the treaty; that there is a strong demand from all classes for immediate ratification, and that the treaty will be ratified Thursday. I am sure that you gentlemen will understand my sentiment in this matter, and I am confident if the treaty fails of ratification that my Government has intention to retain control in Haiti until the desired end is accomplished, and that it will forthwith proceed to the complete pacification of Haiti so as to insure internal tranquillity necessary to such development of country and its industry as will afford relief to the starving populace now unemployed. * * *'"

The message ended with the confidential memorandum, "It is expected that you will be able to make this sufficiently clear to remove all opposition and to secure immediate ratification."

The admiral carried out these instructions, and the next day, November 11, the treaty was ratified by the Haitian Senate. It was ratified by the Senate of the United States the following May (1916).

FORCED LABOR INSTITUTED.

Since that episode the history of Haiti under the American occupation has been, in the words of Admiral Caperton, written at that time, "purely one of military control." Operations were conducted into the hills, particularly against all who offended against the existing régime. The military operations were, however, of minor consequence. The Haitians had no modern weapons. The annual report of the Secretary of the Navy for 1920 gives the Haitians killed for the ensuing years as follows:

1915	212	1918	35
1916	50	1919	1,861
1917	2	1920	90

During the same period 1 marine officer and 12 enlisted men were killed in action or died of wounds.

The tremendous rise in Haitian casualties in 1919 was due to the following conditions:

While determined opposition existed against the coming of the Americans, the Haitians are a naturally peaceful people. Almost without exception, they expected the American military occupation to be of short duration. (The categorical promises in the American proclamation confirmed that belief.) There had been little resistance. In 1917 the country was absolutely at peace. In 1918, however, the American military forces resurrected the old Haitian law of corvée. This law required Haitians to work a few days each year on the roads in their immediate community to keep the highways in repair. The occupation determined to build a military highway running from north to south through the island, and other roads, by forced labor. Even the moderate Haitian law had been in disuse for a long time. Testimony varies as to the extent of the abuses committed under the corvée, but it seems to be clearly proved that Haitians were (a) seized wherever they could be found; (b) transported to other parts of the island; (c) compelled to work under guard, often for weeks; (d) placed under guard at night to prevent their escape; (e) subjected to physical violence if they resisted; (f) shot if they attempted to escape. Navy Department testimony admits that at least a hundred were thus killed. Haitian figures are very much higher. It is also proved that the corvée continued in certain sections after it had been ordered discontinued by brigade headquarters.

In consequence of these repressive measures, a widespread revolt broke out against the American military forces. This was headed by Charlemagne Peralte, a formerly wealthy landowner of the town of Hinche and a former chef d'arrondissement. He was arrested, charged with revolutionary activities, and sentenced by court-martial to a long term of imprisonment. He was subjected to ill treatment and forced to labor on the public streets in prison garb. He escaped and became the leader of the rapidly growing revolutionary forces. For many months he defied all efforts of the American troops, until finally he was captured and killed with the aid of treacherous natives and his body exposed in the market place at Cape Hatien. His followers were then rapidly exterminated.

THE NEW CONSTITUTION.

In the spring of 1917 the draft of a new constitution was submitted to the Haitian Congress by the American officials. The chief provision of the new constitution was that it permitted foreigners to acquire land. Haitians had always considered that their greatest safety lay in their constitutional provision which had hitherto forbidden this. The new constitution centered unheard-of powers in the executive, enabling him, at his pleasure, to hold or postpone elections. Moreover, this Haitian constitution contained clauses ratifying all acts of the occupation, providing that no Haitian could be prosecuted either civilly or criminally for any act executed by order of the occupation, and that the courts-martial of the occupation were the supreme law of the land. The legislative assembly refused to ratify. It proposed instead to pass the constitution without the most objectionable provisions. On June 17 Gen. Eli K. Cole, United States Marine Corps, chief of the occupation, sent the following message to the Secretary of the Navy:

"Antagonism national assembly to foreign ownership land such that no endeavor short of dissolution will prevent passage constitution along lines reported my 13107. Have discussed matters fully with minister and General Butler. Suggest minister notify Haitian Government that, in opinion our Government, constitution prepared assembly will make impossible to bring about results contemplated articles 1 and 14 of treaty, and consequently our Government can not accept such constitution. If assembly refuses heed such warning, it will be necessary to dissolve assembly to prevent such passage. The number marines in Haiti should be increased by at least eight full companies to prevent disorders that may follow dissolution assembly."

On June 18 General Cole notified Washington "unless contrary instructions received, if necessary to prevent passage proposed constitution, I intend dissolve national assembly, through President, if possible, otherwise direct." In reply the Navy Department vested General Cole "with full discretionary power." The next day General Butler, acting under instructions from General Cole, dissolved the assembly. The Haitian newspapers were ordered by General Cole to omit all comment on this action.

So universally hostile was public sentiment to the proposed constitution that it was evident that no Haitian Legislature could be elected that would vote for it. No authority existed in consequence to pass such a constitution. But in the course of the following 12 months the occupation decided to arrange a plebiscite for that purpose. For such a plebiscite neither precedent nor authority existed in Haiti. The following is a specimen order indicating the manner in which this plebiscite was conducted:

"REPUBLIC OF HAITI,
"Port-de-Paix, June 11, 1918.

"In accordance with the decree of his Excellency the President of the Republic, published in the Monitor of May 8 last, all the citizens of this commune of Port-de-Paix are asked to be present to-morrow at the Hotel Communal to vote on the new constitution, published in the Monitor of the same date. Any abstention from such a solemn occasion will be considered an unpatriotic—that is, an anti-American occupation—act. Maintenance of order will be assured by the gendarmerie—under chief, General Williams, American marine officer—and the ballots will be distributed by a member of the administration of finances—an American marine officer—opposite the voting offices, etc."

The voting is described by a Baptist missionary, the Rev. L. Tom Evans. (Page 191 et seq., Official Record, Senate Resolution 112, Inquiry Into Occupation and Administration of Haiti and Santo Domingo.) He states that "the natives were terror stricken." Further, all the pink slips marked non (no) were tied up and only the white slips with oui (yes) were handled on the table before which the so-called voters were driven in.

The following passages are taken from the record:

"Senator POMERENE. What was the vote at St. Marc? What was the result there?

"Mr. EVANS. There was no means of knowing. The natives felt no interest whatever, as it was known from announcement by the occupation—through Dartiguenave—that whatever the American marines did no one dared to oppose or even question. All slips were taken to Port au Prince and published there. It was looked upon as a mere farce and lowered the prestige of the United States among Haitians who seriously think, and even Europeans, and, indeed, Americans, who felt that the American occupation had gone the limit and made itself a laughing stock and looked contemptible. No votes were reckoned to my knowledge at either town, but all taken in charge of American marines to Port au Prince.

"Senator POMERENE. No, no: when the votes were counted, what was the result of the election at that place?

"Mr. EVANS. All were taken to Port au Prince and published there, but whether they gave numbers supposed to be cast at each town I know not, and, like others, cared little, as I became disgusted and felt disgraced that such was possible in the name of the United States and by anyone who called himself an American.

"Senator KING. Sixty-three thousand for and two or three hundred against in all the island. (The official figures as published at the beginning of the new constitution are 98,294 yes, 769 no.)

"Mr. EVANS. You mean the Republic, Senator. They might have published the vote as 1,000,000, or as 63,000; there is no one to contradict or to explain, for the American marines managed the whole business. I do not believe that any slips were put in by Haitians, and that out of shame certain marines cast in a couple of hundreds. This is the belief in Haiti. I denounced it then and denounce it more still to-day as the greatest mockery I ever saw in my life, and never thought we had Americans and marine officers that could sink so low before these gendarmes and poor Haitians, whose respect, implicit confidence, and highest admiration should be the aim of every military officer and true American, who despises anything like hypocrisy and scorns deceit and fraud.

"Senator POMERENE. What part did these educated Haitians take in the election?

"Mr. EVANS. The great majority—apart from those who happened, as stated, to be officially and financially connected with the occupation, so-called Haitian Government, sugar and castor oil corporations, schools, courts, prisons, customs, railroads, etc.—abstained and kept clear of the voting places, though in so doing they ran the risk of being blacklisted, run into prison on slightest suspicion or provocation, etc.

"Had they gone they would have asked for the pink slip with non, which would have decided their lot with the occupation. It was a hard and trying situation, but many were heroic enough to stand the test, whatever have been the consequences since.

This testimony has remained uncontradicted, although virtually every high marine officer who served in Haiti testified subsequently, viz, General Butler, General Waller, General Cole, General Catlin, Colonel Williams—the General Williams of the Gendarmerie d'Haiti mentioned in the above plebiscite order—as well as Admiral Caperton and General Barnett, who was commandant of the Marine Corps from 1914 to 1920.

THE HAITIAN MEMORIAL.

To-day Haiti remains under martial law, but recently the situation there began to attract attention in the United States and elsewhere. In the summer of 1920, following the publication of articles in the Nation, President Harding made of the Haitian and Dominican situations a campaign issue. Secretary Daniels denied the accusation of wrong-doing by the Democratic administration, but sent a naval commission to investigate. This commission found nothing materially discreditable to report. On October 2, 1920, Major General Barnett, Commandant of the Marine Corps, expressed himself as shocked by "the indiscriminate killings in Haiti." Another naval commission was sent to investigate, and it reported approximately as had the first. Shortly afterwards a delegation of representative Haitian citizens came to the United States, representing the Haitian people, and particularly the popular organization known as the Union Patriotique d'Haiti. These delegates, refused an audience by the State Department, composed a detailed memorial—with documents—which was sent to the Secretary of State and to the chairmen of the Committees on Foreign Relations of the Senate and House. It was also read into the official record last August of the senatorial commission of inquiry, of which Senator MEDILL MCCORMICK was chairman. This memorial makes charges of administrative incompetence and malfeasance by the civilian officials. It lists 25 specimen atrocities which, it charges, were committed by the American military and were vainly called to the attention of the naval commission of inquiry headed by Admiral Mayo. The memorial makes the following conclusion (pp. 32 and 33 of the record of the senatorial commission of inquiry):

"The Haitian Republic was the second nation of the New World—second only to the United States—to conquer its national independence. We have our own history, our own traditions, customs, and national spirit; our own institutions, laws, and social and political organizations; our own culture; our own literature—French language—and our own religion. For 111 years the little Haitian Nation has managed its own affairs; for 111 years it has made the necessary effort for its material, intellectual, and moral development as well as any other nation—better than any other nation, because it has been from the start absolutely alone in its difficult task, without any aid from the outside bearing with it along the harsh road of civilization the glorious misery of its beginning. And then, one fine day, under the merest pretext, without any possible explanation or justification on the grounds of violation of any American right or interest, American forces landed on our national territory and actually abolished the sovereignty and independence of the Haitian Republic.

"We have just given an account of the chief aspects of the American military occupation in our country since July 28, 1915.

"It is the most terrible régime of military autocracy which has ever been carried on in the name of the great American democracy.

"The Haitian people, during these last five years, have passed through such sacrifices, tortures, destructions, humiliations, and misery as have never before been known in the course of their unhappy history.

"The American Government, in spite of the attitude of wisdom, moderation, and even submission, which it has always found in dealing with the Haitian Government, has never lived up to any of the agreements which it solemnly entered into with regard to the Haitian people.

"The Haitian people are entitled to reparations for the wrongs and injuries committed against them.

"The great American people can only honor themselves and rise in universal esteem by hastening the restoration of justice—of all the justice due a weak and friendly nation which the agents of its Government have systematically abused.

"Reparations are due for the human lives that have been taken and for the property that has been destroyed or abstracted. An impartial investigation will provide the necessary statements and supply the basis for the estimates to be determined.

"The present political aspirations of the Haitian nation have been formulated by the Union Patriotique, a comprehensive national association which, through its numerous branches throughout the country and in all levels of society, includes virtually all the Haitian people. The undersigned have been sent to the United States by this association to make the will of the country clearly known.

"The Haitian people are filled with peaceful sentiments, but there is no doubt that they intend to recover definitely the administration of their own affairs and to resume under their own responsibility the entire life of the country, with full sovereignty and independence. They will never rest until they have obtained them.

"The salient aspirations of the Haitian people are summarized as follows:

"1. Immediate abolition of martial law and courts-martial.

"2. Immediate reorganization of the Haitian police and military forces, and withdrawal within a short period of the United States military occupation.

"3. Abrogation of the convention of 1915.

"4. Convocation, within a short period, of a constituent assembly, with all the guaranties of electoral liberty.

"But the Haitian people desire too strongly the friendship of the great American people, and are too anxious for their own material, intellectual, and moral development not to wish and bespeak for themselves the impartial and altruistic aid of the United States Government. They have urgent needs vital to the development of the natural resources of the country and essential to the full expansion of its agricultural, industrial, and commercial activity. The satisfying of these needs is absolutely necessary for the continued progress of the Haitian community.

"Nothing would serve better to bring about the speedy reestablishment of normal relations between the two countries than the friendly aid of the United States Government in the economic prosperity and social progress of the Haitian Republic."

SITUATION IN SANTO DOMINGO.

The Dominican situation may be said to have begun on November 19, 1915. On that date, one week after the final ratification by Haiti of the treaty giving the United States military and financial control, a virtually similar draft was presented to President Jimenez, of the Dominican Republic. It was promptly and emphatically rejected. The following April, after a disagreement between President Jimenez and his minister of war, Desiderio Arias, impeachment proceedings were entered upon against the President in the Dominican Congress. On May 4, 1916, during some revolutionary disturbance, and without warning to the Dominican Government, American marines were landed near Santo Domingo. The American minister at that time gave assurance to the Dominican Government that these forces were solely for the purpose of protecting the American Legation. On May 7 these forces had increased so greatly that it appeared evident to President Jimenez that they were there for another purpose, and he resigned in protest against this violation of Dominican sovereignty.

The next day General Arias, the minister of war, was invited and escorted personally by the American minister to the American Legation, where he was induced to enter a conference with Federico Velasquez. It was proposed to Arias that, in return for certain favors and remunerations, he would use his influence and the military under his command to aid the election of Velasquez. Arias refused, declining to abet the scheme to foist illegally and by force majeure an undesired candidate on the Dominican people. On May 11 Federico Henriquez y Carvajal was nominated for president of the Republic in the chamber of deputies and confirmed by the senate on May 23. On May 13 the American minister formally notified the Dominican Government of the intention of the United States Government to land a large armed force and to occupy the capital, and the listening bombardment of the city and unrestricted firing upon the natives if in any way they interfered with the landing of the American forces. The next day, May 18, the American minister notified the Dominican Congress that Federico Henriquez y Carvajal was not acceptable to the United States as president.

On June 5 the American minister gave formal notice to the Dominican Government that the receiver general of customs would take charge of all the finances and funds of the Government. Under the treaty of 1907 with the United States, an American appointed by the United States Government was in charge of the collection of customs of the Dominican Republic. It was his duty under this treaty to turn in all but the sum of $100,000 monthly to the Dominican Government. All above this $100,000 was to go, one half to the Dominican Government for its own uses the other half to the sinking fund of the loan contracted under the treaty. The Dominican Government instantly and vigorously protested against this procedure. On June 11 Federico Henriquez y Carvajal, bowing to the expressed opposition of the United States, declined election to the presidency. His resignation was accepted by the Dominican Congress, which then decided to elect as president a man who had had no affiliations with any of the existing political parties, namely, Dr. Francisco Henriquez y Carvajal, who had been practicing medicine in Santiago de Cuba for the previous 12 years. On June 16, following orders from Washington, the receiver general of customs took charge of all revenues—internal as well as the customs revenues which alone were stipulated in the treaty of 1907—and set himself up as disbursing agent of the republic. Dominicans made vigorous protest, pointing out that this action was in violation of the treaty of 1907.

The receiver general admitted his inability to conform to the wishes of the Dominican Government, stating that his orders were received directly from the State Department of the United States, and that he had but to obey. On July 31 Doctor Henriquez was inaugurated as president. No objection was raised by the United States to his election. On August 18 notice was sent to the Dominican Government by the American authorities that no money coming into the hands of the receiver general would be paid to the Dominican Government. On August 23 the American minister presented a note demanding the acquiescence of the Dominican Government to the conditions rejected November 19 of the preceding year by President Jimenez—virtually the same treaty then in effect in Haiti. The Dominican Government refused. On October 17, following instructions from Washington, the receiver general formally refused recognition to the Dominican budget to pay the salaries of its officials and employees and the pensions of its widows and orphans. On November 29, 1916, a "proclamation of occupation" was made by the United States. It was issued over the signature of Capt. H. S. Knapp, United States Navy, who subsequently declared himself to be "supreme legislator, supreme judge, supreme executor."

HELD IN IRON BONDAGE.

For five years Americans held Santo Domingo in the iron bondage of martial law. Public meetings were forbidden, the press censored, protestors court-martialed. Every governmental function was taken over by American marines. During this period, also, the occupation built excellent highways, cleaned up towns, and greatly improved the school system, using Dominican funds for these ends. Many Dominicans were also killed in action. The occupation holds all Dominicans killed in action to be bandits; the Dominicans consider them patriots. The Dominicans have never ceased to protest before the world against the occupation of their country. The sentence of imprisonment and fine of the poet, Fabio Fiallo, because of his article of protest against the invasion of his country, attracted wide attention in Latin America.

A plan for withdrawal was proposed by the Wilson administration in December, 1920. A similar plan was proposed by the Harding administration through the proclamation issued by the military governor on June 14, 1921. The plan set a date eight months ahead for the withdrawal of the American forces and the restoration of the national Dominican Government. It constituted the military governor the provisional Dominican executive, gave him the power to promulgate an electoral law, and to convene the people to the elections. It also gave him the power to name the Dominicans who, together with representatives of the American Government, would agree (1) to ratify all acts of the military government; (2) to intrust the command and organization of the Dominican forces to American officials.

This plan aroused the unanimous resentment of the Dominican people. They protested solemnly that they desired their freedom without qualifications. They refused to ratify the acts of the military government, which included a loan that carried interest varying from 9 to 19 per cent. As the cooperation of the Dominicans was necessary, the plan went by the board.

That is the status of the Dominican Republic to date. It asks its unconditional sovereignty as an absolute right. It desires that the Americans retire and leave them in peace.

The contentions of the American Government, justifying its occupation of the Dominican Republic, are vigorously denied by the Dominicans. They assert, first, that they have not violated the treaty of 1907 by increasing the public debt, and that the indebtedness to the United States has been paid far in excess of requirements (they present the official figures to prove these assertions); second, that the revolutionary disturbances were of a purely political and minor character, which in no sense affected American lives or property, or the execution of the treaty of 1907; third, that granting a difference of interpretation of these two preceding issues, nothing in law or morality justified the aggression and conquest practiced by the United States.

SUMMARY AND INDICTMENT.

To sum up: The cases of Haiti and Santo Domingo are closely analogous. In both instances the United States clearly desired to gain control of these Republics. In both instances, when attempts to secure this by peaceable means failed, advantage was taken of internal disorder to land forces. Then, what could not be obtained by peaceable means was sought by military pressure. In Haiti the United States was able to force through a treaty, and to-day this treaty is held up as the sanction for all America's acts in that Republic since. In Santo Domingo the treaty could not be forced through, and a ruthless destruction of all forms of Dominican self-governmet followed. These acts are indisputably proved by the record. They comprise the gravest breach of fundamental American traditions in our history. They violate international law. They violate the Constitution of the United States. They violate every treaty involved. They constitute essentially the same kind of aggression as that which Germany practiced against Belgium in 1914—and without even the invalid excuse of "military necessity." While we were preparing to enter the struggle against Germany to oppose ruthless military conquest we were secretly practicing it.

The activities in Haiti and Santo Domingo were guarded by a rigid military censorship and were practically unknown in the United States until 1920. They are not widely known to-day.

The people of both these countries are clamoring for their independence. The Haitians demand the abrogation of the convention of 1915, imposed upon them by force, and the withdrawal of the occupation. In the next few weeks the Senate of the United States will have the opportunity to decide whether or not the Nation will adhere to the traditions in which it was conceived and grew to greatness. The issue is far larger than Haiti and Santo Domingo. Shall the United States follow the course of Japan in Koreo, of England in Egypt, of Germany in Belgium? Or shall it follow the path of honor, justice, fair dealing, and common decency to weak and friendly neighbor States? We are at the parting of the ways. Haiti and Santo Domingo are the acid test.

Mr. KING. I ask that the report, which has been read, be printed in 8-point type, including the names.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah?

Mr. McCORMICK. What is the request?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The request is that the article formerly read shall be printed in 8-point type.

Mr. McCORMICK. And is the request that this article be read or printed?

Mr. KING. Printed.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Utah? The Chair hears none.

Mr. KING. I ask that an editorial appearing in the New York World of Sunday, April 30, 1922, entitled "The Seizure of Haiti," may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

THE SEIZURE OF HAITI.

Twenty-four American lawyers of the highest standing in their communities have drawn up an indictment of the American Government which no one—the President, the Congress, or any citizen who cares for the good name of this country—can fail to read without seeing that he is in honor bound to act. These lawyers charge that in the seizure of Haiti the United States Government has departed from well-recognized American principles, is guilty of breaches of international law, has been faithless to our promises, has violated the Constitution of the United States, has violated "every canon of fair and equal dealing," and has consciously and intentionally participated in a wrong of aggression.

No more humiliating charge has ever in our history been made by responsible men against the American Government. It is unthinkable that such a charge should not be sifted to the very bottom. The charge must either be proved or disproved. If disproved, it must be recanted. If proved, the wrong charged must be righted.

The 24 accusing lawyers do not stand alone. Their findings are supported by a group of eminent citizens which is headed by Senator OWEN, of Oklahoma. The charges are made by men as conservative as Mr. Louis Marshall, of New York, and Mr. Moorfield Storey, of Boston; by Democratic Senators, like WILLIAM H. KING, of Utah; and Republican Senators, like WILLIAM E. BORAH. The accusers represent both parties and all shades of opinion in American life.

The salient facts, as brought forward by the 24 lawyers, are as follows:

Haiti won its independence from France in 1804. It lost its independence to America in 1915. Haiti is a primitive country with a population of about 3,000,000. Except for a small educated class in the towns, the people are largely illiterate. We may assume that Haiti has been badly governed. We must note, however, that "foreign investments have at all times been respected, the interest on Haiti's foreign debt has been scrupulously paid."

Haiti is a rich country, and her constitution rigidly excluded foreigners from the ownership of land. Haiti is in a strategic position. She "controls" one of the principal routes to the Panama Canal.

Being rich, strategically important, weak, and badly governed, Haiti is a temptation to conquest. During the early part of the European war a number of typical Central American revolutions took place, and six times in 1914 and in 1915 our Government made direct overtures for the control of the Haitian customs. They were rejected. Seven days after the last rejection we landed marines at Port au Prince, seized $500,000 in the vaults of the National Bank of Haiti, and carried the money to New York. The bank was four-fifths French and one-fifth American. In March, 1915, we sent another special mission asking for control of Haitian finance. The demand was refused. In May we again sent a mission asking for the right of military intervention and harbor privileges. There was bargaining which came to nothing.

Finally, on July 27, 1915, there was a bloody outbreak. A massacre of political prisoners took place and the President was assassinated under revolting conditions. The next day we landed marines and occupied all the principal ports and towns. Up to this point there is no charge against the American Government by the 24 lawyers.

The facts justify a temporary intervention. The charges turn on what has happened in the seven years that have elapsed since then. For since July, 1915, Haiti has been governed by the Navy Department at Washington. In those seven years the Secretary of the Navy and the admiral in Haiti have proceeded in an extraordinary fashion.

Twice Admiral Caperton "induced" the Haitian Legislature to postpone the election of a new President who could succeed the one who had been assassinated. American naval officers went to work to find a successor. Finally they picked Sudre Dartiguenave, who had promised to accede to any terms which the United States might name, including the surrender of the customs and the cession of Mole St. Nicholas. Dartiguenave was elected by a legislature guarded by American marines. Admiral Caperton's chief of staff was on the floor of the voting hall.

Two days later we presented our treaty of financial control and military intervention. It is enough to say that the treaty is a complete surrender of all Government authority to America. It is annexation in everything but the hypocritical preamble.

The Haitian Legislature objected to the treaty and the cabinet threatened to resign. So in September the Navy Department declared martial law. The purpose, as Admiral Caperton explained, was this:

"Successful negotiation of treaty is predominant part present mission. After encountering many difficulties treaty situation at present looks more favorable than usual. This has been effected by exercising military pressure at propitious moments in negotiations. Yesterday two members of cabinet who have blocked negotiations heretofore resigned. President himself believed to be anxious to conclude treaty. At present am holding up offensive operations and allowing President time to complete cabinet and try again. Am therefore not yet ready to begin offensive operations at Cape Haitien, but will hold them in abeyance as additional pressure."

All kinds of pressure, military and financial, was exercised and finally the treaty was signed. Haiti became an American possession ruled through the Navy Department.

The continuance of the occupation, the manipulation of the election, the forcing of the treaty are all in the highest degree irregular. They are an exercise of irresponsible power which may in the exact sense of the term be called imperialistic.

The world does not believe that the problem of a country like Haiti can be solved by any simple formula about the right of self-determination. There may be a case for a certain supervision of the Haitian Government. But there is no case whatever for the manner in which this affair has been conducted. To take control of a sovereign nation, however misgoverned and troublesome, is a very serious step.

It should not be undertaken on the private initiative of one Government department, acting almost entirely in the dark. The only conditions under which the control of a country like Haiti becomes even tolerable is by international mandate, after unbiased study of the evidence, and subject to inspection by other powers. In the case of Haiti the Navy Department ignored the American Congress and the American people, ignored the Haitian Congress and the Haitian people, ignored our Latin-American neighbors.

We are thus holding Haiti in a manner that displays a contempt of morals, law, and good faith. We have not shown, now that we are great and powerful, that decent respect for the opinion of mankind to which in the hour of our own birth as a Nation we solemnly appealed.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, this editorial ought to cause Senators to give consideration to the importance of the policy involved in the amendment which I have offered. Those in official positions have pursued a course with which the American people were unacquainted. We have in effect made war on Haiti, conquered her people, taken possession of her territory, placed military forces in all parts of the country, reduced her Government to a mere shadow. There has been a conquest of Haiti, our occupation was accomplished by force, and our possession of the island can not be defended in morals or upon any principle of international law.

I ask that an article appearing in the New York Globe of Monday, May 1, entitled "Haiti: A blot on the 'scutcheon," may be likewise printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

HAITI: A BLOT ON THE 'SCUTCHEON.

As far as the West Indies are concerned, Secretary Hughes seems to believe that any situation can be smoothed over by the use of language sufficiently diplomatic and also sufficiently obscure. "This Government," he told a committee which called upon him in Washington last Saturday to protest against our military despotism in Haiti, "is proceeding in this matter at this time in the desire to secure, in the first place, an effective coordination of the action which is being taken in connection with the administration, so that difficulties which have existed in the past may be removed. It is also considering all that is essential for the tranquillity and well-being of the people of Haiti, and, of course, we are desirous that the military occupation shall end just as soon as it can properly end."

This utterly meaningless statement can be paralleled almost word for word by assertions the Japanese Government once made about Korea and is now making about Shantung and eastern Siberia. As a lawyer Mr. Hughes is well aware that our marines seized and conquered Haiti by no right save that of superior power. When our troops were landed in 1915 American prerogatives were possibly jeopardized by a temporary condition of disorder in Port au Prince, but our right of permanent occupation was about the same as Germany's right in Belgium. Following the landing the marines held a drumhead election, in which a candidate first passed upon by the Navy Department was duly elected, and then, after overthrowing the Haitian constitution, obtained a treaty and a new constitution which suited the convenience of American bankers.

Our latest move is to offer a "loan," which the Haitians will be compelled to accept and which will furnish an excuse for continued occupation or for a new intervention at any time when the interest payments are delayed. To back up this complacent defense of these proceedings Mr. Hughes quotes the McCormick committee, which spent a few pleasant days interviewing such witnesses as the marines judged were respectable enough for them to meet.

The whole incident reflects discredit upon Mr. Hughes, even though he may be the victim of reactionary subordinates. The plain facts are that we have conquered Haiti and that we are controlling it in the interests of the Navy Department and of a few bankers and investors. The occupation rule can "properly end" whenever we conclude to deal as justly with little and weak nations as we are compelled to do with large and powerful ones. It ought never to have begun.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, on the 19th of January of this year I offered a resolution, which I ask may be incorporated in the RECORD without reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it will be so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 219) is as follows:

Whereas the relations between the United States and the Republic of Santo Domingo and the Republic of Haiti have assumed a condition which is unsatisfactory to the inhabitants of said countries and otherwise disadvantageous to the United States, which condition is due in large measure to the presence of the naval forces of the United States in said countries and the exercise by the United States of the control of the finances and revenues of said countries; and

Whereas the purpose of the intervention by the United States in the political affairs of said countries, the direction of their revenues and finances, and the police of the same by the United States naval forces has been accomplished, and there is no further advantage either to the United States or said countries from any continued intervention in their affairs: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate of the United States that the President should withdraw the naval forces of the United States now in Santo Domingo and Haiti and should arrange an abrogation of any treaty, protocol, or other agreement providing for the control of the revenues of Haiti or Santo Domingo by the United States, or providing for the intervention of the United States in the political affairs of either of said countries, and that it is the sense of the Senate that Santo Domingo and Haiti should be free from any external interference with their domestic policies or internal administration.

Mr. KING. This resolution in effect declared what I conceived to be the proper policy to be pursued by the United States in dealing with the Republic of Haiti and the Dominican Republic. Without calling into question the reasons which may have justified occupation, I declared in the resolution—

That it is the sense of the Senate of the United States that the President should withdraw the naval forces of the United States.

I am gratified to know that the able lawyers whose brief or report has been read have made recommendations in favor of the abrogation of the protocol and the withdrawal of the naval forces of the United States from the further occupation of these two Republics.

Mr. President, later we were advised that it was the purpose of the Government of the United States, acting through naval forces and officials, to obtain a loan or force a loan upon the Haitian people to the extent of $14,000,000. As a matter of fact, the purpose is to authorize a loan of $30,000,000. I felt that we ought not to pursue a course of that character, and on February 3 I offered a resolution relative to this matter. I ask that that resolution, without reading, may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 233) is as follows:

Whereas the United States, through its naval forces and officials acting under the direction of the State Department, is in control of Haiti and the Haitian Government; and

Whereas it is proposed that a loan of $14,000,000 be negotiated in behalf of Haiti, to be paid by the Haitian people; and

Whereas such a loan is not desired by the Haitian people and is believed by them to be unwarranted and illegal and contrary to the best interests economically and politically of Haiti and her people: Therefore be it

Resolved, That the Secretary of State be, and he is hereby, directed to inform the Senate by what authority such proposed loan is being negotiated, together with the terms and conditions thereof and the reasons therefor;

Be it further resolved, That no debt should be created by the United States or by persons representing it which would be a charge upon Haiti or the Haitian people or the Haitian Government.

Mr. KING. Then, on April 20, I offered a resolution asking that the loan should not be authorized until the committee appointed by the Senate, and which was then considering this important matter, should file their report. I ask that that resolution also may be inserted in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 288) is as follows:

Whereas the Senate on July 27, 1921, by Senate Resolution 112, authorized and directed a special committee to investigate the affairs of the Haitian Government, and all questions affecting the relations between the United States and Haiti; and

Whereas an investigation of the aforesaid matters has been made by said committee; and

Whereas the report of said committee is now in process of preparation, which report will undoubtedly make recommendations as to the future policy of the United States in the premises; and

Whereas it is inadvisable that any further commitments of a financial character be made by the Haitian Government under the direction or advice and approval of the United States, until the Senate shall receive and consider the report of said committee and shall determine, in conjunction with the House of Representatives and the President, the future policy of the United States in the premises: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that, pending the receipt and consideration of the report of said committee, no loan or issue of bonds be made by the Haitian Government under the direction and advice of representatives of the United States, and the President of the United States is hereby respectfully requested to direct the financial adviser of the Haitian Government and the receiver of customs to withhold taking any action for the consummation of a new loan to the Haitian Government or the issue of Haitian bonds until such time as the report of said committee shall have been received and considered by the Senate and the executive department of the Government.

Mr. KING. On February 3 I submitted a resolution asking that the Secretary of the Navy be directed to furnish full and complete information to the Senate of all costs to the United States resulting from the naval occupation of Haiti and the Republic of Santo Domingo. I ask that that may be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The resolution (S. Res. 234) is as follows:

Resolved, That the Secretary of the Navy be, and he is hereby, directed to furnish full and complete information to the Senate of all costs to the United States resulting from the naval occupation of Haiti and the Republic of Santo Domingo.

Mr. KING. On February 23, after we had been advised that the President of the United States had selected Brig. Gen. John H. Russell as high commissioner to Haiti, with the rank of ambassador extraordinary, without having sent the nomination of General Russell to the Senate for the advice and consent of the Senate with respect to his appointment to said office, I offered a resolution (S. Res. 249) asking that the Committee on the Judiciary be requested to investigate the question as to the power of the President, under the Constitution, to appoint an ambassador extraordinary to Haiti without the advice and consent of the Senate in that behalf, and report their findings and opinion to the Senate.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Does the Senator want that printed twice. He has read it, and now, as I understand, he asks to have it printed.

Mr. KING. No; I shall not ask that it be printed.

Mr. President, I regret that no action has been taken upon any of these resolutions, unless it be the last one. As I recall, the Secretary of State made some response to the Judiciary Committee, claiming that Brigadier General Russell was merely the personal representative of the President.

The administration seems quite unconcerned about the wrong which has been done to the people of two helpless nations. Our Republican friends criticized the former administration—but only during the campaign. They are now silent and apparently indorse the course of the last administration, and seem prepared to continue the wrongful and unlawful occupation of two Republics.

If the various committees to which the resolutions were sent had reported, or if Congress had declared any policy which it intended to pursue with respect to the Republic of Haiti and the Republic of San Domingo, I should not have offered this amendment to the pending bill; but it seemed to me that the failure of Congress and the Government to announce its policy called for some action by some legislative or executive body, and it seemed to me that this was the only way we could bring to the attention of the Government and of the country what I conceive to be an improper, high-handed, and oppressive course.

I have asked leave to put these documents and articles in the RECORD. They constitute, in my judgment, an indictment against the policy of the United States in dealing with two friendly Republics. I am sure that the Senate, understanding the amendment and the purpose of it, will support it. I can not conceive how Senators believing in the right of a people to determine their own destiny can justify the continued military occupation of these countries. We are not wanted there. Our course has prevoked hostility, resentment, and hatred. Our flag to these unhappy people does not stand for liberty and justice but for force and oppression. Let America say to all the world, it is not imperialistic; it covets no territory; it will oppress no peoples. We can secure the respect, indeed the affection, of all peoples if we will follow the teachings of the fathers and observe the principles of justice and righteousness which should govern nations as well as individuals. It is time that we sought to "exalt a nation"—our Nation—that it may lead the world in the paths of peace and fellowship.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I supposed others were going to address the Senate on this amendment. I recognize it presents a subject of very great importance. I have been privileged to serve on a good many committees since I have been in the Senate considering subjects which were of importance. The information which I have gathered through a period of several months leads me to state that never have I been interested in any investigation in which there was so much of misrepresentation, so much of distortion of the truth, and so many half truths told, as about the conditions in Haiti and the Dominican Republic. I want to say, preliminarily, that I regret that it was ever found necessary for the United States to go into those two countries, and I regret that it is necessary now, for the time being, for us to remain there.

Statements have been made repeatedly charging that it was our purpose to take over the sovereignty of these two Republics, and occasionally those who are interested in the subjects have referred to statements which may have been made by officers of the Marine Corps, and little or no attention has been given to the statements which were made by President Roosevelt when the treaty with the Dominican Republic was first made or statements which have been made since by President Taft, by President Wilson, and I think more recently by President Harding, that we have no desire to remain there.

I certainly would not consent to our taking over the sovereignty of the island without knowing that it was by the universal consent of the people of that island, and I would have to change my view before I would consent to have the United States take over either one of these Republics under any circumstances. I do not like the idea of colonial possessions. I prefer that we limit our activities to our own continental territory. I am quite sure that whatever may be said by a few people of very suspicious minds, there has been no disposition on the part of anyone who is authorized to formulate a foreign policy of the Government to take over either of these Republics.

Let me illustrate: Some time, five or six years ago, a Captain Reed, who was in the Dominican Republic with the marines, discovering that there was an incipient revolution, asked the men connected with the marines to make certain inquiries, and among other inquiries he asked them to find out what, if any, sentiment there was looking to the annexation of the island. Since that time this communication, which was a voluntary communication, sent out on his own responsibility, came to the attention of the Navy Department, and I am advised that he was reprimanded, and a reprimand spread upon the record.

One of the admirals, I believe, in Haiti, at some time in the course of the earlier history of this controversy, telegraphed or cabled to the Navy Department and made some suggestion to the effect that a proposition had been made by some one connected with the Haitian Government to give us a coaling station at Mole St. Nicholas. It is true, as was suggested by the distinguished Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], several times some years ago, there were negotiations begun looking to the ceding to the United States of a coaling station in Haiti and one in the Dominican Republic, but the brief which has been read here refers to it as "an attempt" to get this coaling station. If by "an attempt" they mean that there were some negotiations looking to the securing of the coaling station, then they are right. If they mean to suggest that it was an attempt to seize a coaling station, or get it by virtue of superior force, then it misrepresents the fact.

Mr. KING. Will it interrupt the Senator if I ask him a question?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield for a moment, but I desire to proceed as rapidly as I can.

Mr. KING. Is it not a fact, I inquire of the able Senator, that more than 40 years ago, and at repeated intervals since then, and prior to the events of which we are now speaking, the United States sent its war vessels to Port au Prince, to Cape Haitien, and to Mole St. Nicholas, and that there are numerous statements in the State Department evidencing the purpose on the part of the United States to secure, if possible, a cession of naval stations at Haiti as well as in San Domingo?

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. I deny that statement. It is true that our war vessels have gone down there in the interest of peace and good order. It is true that President Grant, when he occupied the chair as Chief Executive, was insistent upon our taking possession of the Dominican Republic; but that proposition was turned down by the United States Senate.

As I said a moment ago, and I want this borne in mind in connection with anything I have to say to-day, I would not consent under any circumstances I can now conceive of to take possession of either of these Republics for the United States, and whatever I shall suggest as to what ought to be done I do it with the sole purpose of trying to work out the good of the Haitian and Dominican people.

The Senator from Illinois desired to interrupt a moment ago.

Mr. McCORMICK. I rose to suggest that those who have made careful inquiry into the facts know that Mole St. Nicholas has no value at this time as a naval base.

Mr. POMERENE. That is quite true, because we have a naval base or coaling station at Guantanamo, Cuba, and there is no desire for one at Mole St. Nicholas, so far as I know; at least I have heard of none.

Mr. BORAH. That is true of the present; but it was not supposed to be true at the time we were making an attempt to get it.

Mr. POMERENE. I can not, of course, say what was in the minds of special officers.

I propose to discuss this question from this standpoint alone: What is our duty now? I am not approving many of the things which have been done there in the past. My belief is that the marines did the best they could under the circumstances. Some very regrettable things have occurred during our occupancy. It is true that in certain instances there were cruelties of such a character as to make an American hang his head in shame. There were cruelties on both sides. I give no approval to anything of that sort. But let me illustrate:

When these cruelties in Haiti first became known to our authorities they were traceable to a marine who was connected with the gendarmerie. After the facts became known in Haiti, immediately an investigation was begun. It was true that a certain marine committed excesses, but at the time it became known to those in charge of the marine occupancy he was then out of the service, and upon trying to locate him they found that he was confined in an asylum for the insane in the United States, a raving maniac.

Let me give another illustration so far as it applies to the Dominican Republic. There some cruelties were perpetrated. A few men were killed by a captain of the marines, and when this knowledge came to the occupying forces in the Dominican Republic investigation was begun at once. He was arrested. While he was under guard in his own tent awaiting court-martial he did the one sane act in his life. He picked up his own pistol and shot out his brains.

Mr. President, I give these instances as indicating what was done by a few marines—thank God, very few—and as indicating what we have done to control the situation. If Senators will investigate the subject of our occupancy of these two Republics, they will find that among the Haitians they will say, with reference to the alleged cruelties perpetrated by the American marines, that they were inconsequential compared with the cruelties that would have been perpetrated under the same circumstances upon the Haitians by native Haitians.

Now, naturally it suggests itself to the mind, why were not these different cruelties or acts of cruelty earlier brought to the attention of the officials in the island? Let me suggest, as bearing upon the subject, that in Haiti until we got there, there were not to exceed 200 miles of highway that could be passed over even in dry weather by any sort of vehicle; that Haiti, not with 3,000,000, but between 2,000,000 and 2,500,000, people in a territory of about 9,000 square miles, was, with the exception I have given, without any highway whatsoever, and that there were simply winding trails through the tropical virgin forests to the interior, no better defined than were the trails in this country made by the Indians before the white man set foot therein. In the earlier days there was little or no means of communication by telephone or telegraph.

Officers were sent there. They found a state of revolution. It was necessary to patrol a large part of the northern part of Haiti. That was the home of the Caco or brigand. That was the point where the revolution always broke out.

Now, what was the immediate occasion of our going there? In June, 1915, a revolution was in progress. A man by the name of Sam was president of the Haitian Republic. In Haiti revolutions are usually begun by the outs against the ins, and one faction scarcely gets control of the Government until a new revolution is begun.

The revolutionists in and about Port au Prince go up in the Caco regions, make contracts with the chiefs, and the chiefs organize their armies and march down on the capital. At this particular time President Sam had arrested some 75 or more of the leading revolutionists. They were in prison. The other revolutionists were largely on the outside, camped around the city. President Sam, for some reason best known to himself, ordered his troops to go into the prison, and they shot or bayoneted the prisoners without any trial. Only two of the inmates escaped. They were in a prison cell, and the troops could not find the key. These two were hidden behind the dead bodies of those who were nearest to the front.

A little later the revolutionists got possession of the capital and President Sam, for his own protection, entered the French

Legation. He thought he was secure under international law, and so he was, but he was not secure against the revolutionists. They entered the French Legation, took possession of Sam, shot him, dismembered his body, and his torso was dragged through the streets at the end of a rope. The revolution had spread over all the northern part of the island. Our marines were there for the purpose of preserving order. It is true that about this time or a little later we took possession of the ports, but who was there to administer them? The revolutionists? The government? Why, the government was overthrown.

Now, Mr President, we of course can have before us a theoretical case and say that certain things were done there which would be contrary to our ideals of government, but let me say to you that no one will make a more serious mistake than to believe a government can be managed there as we would manage our own home affairs here.

Later on, the revolution continuing, armed forces were organized. They were going through the island. Our marines had to patrol the entire island to get possession and to subdue the revolutionists. It is true, I have no doubt, that while this was going on there were some excesses committed. It is true that the revolutionists were burning hamlets and taking property. It is true that some of our marines burned down some of those hamlets in the midst of the Caco region. I do not like that. You do not like it. But the question was, What should be done? It is true, too, that there were a number of fatalities. A statement was made here to the effect that they amounted to 2,500. The best judgment of the committee, at least of those members of the committee who have gone into it, is that the total fatalities were probably in the neighborhood of 1,500.

Then, Mr. President, when we try to weigh what our marines should have done, bear in mind the other side of it, too. The marines suffered very many cruelties from the Haitians. Some of them were killed after being taken prisoners. One statement was made to us by one of the marines, an officer and a high-class man, that a Haitian gendarme was out on patrol duty. He was arrested by the Haitian revolutionists.

A couple of hours thereafter he was recaptured, and at the point where he was recaptured there was a cross already constructed, on which he was to be crucified. He understood the Haitian language, the creole language, if you please. This Haitian gendarme told the officers that they had planned to tie him to the cross by strips of skin taken from his own body.

I am not saying these things for the purpose of humiliating or belittling the Haitians. I have the most kindly feeling toward them, and I am satisfied that with proper treatment they will become useful citizens of Haiti. They are the most generous-hearted people in the world when they are in possession of their faculties, but when aroused and excited I think it will be understood from what I have said what thought came into the minds of the marines when they were out on patrol duty.

Mr. President, the brief which was filed here said that Haiti had been a Republic since 1804. Yes, in name, perhaps, but not since 1804. The very able lawyers who present the brief are able to write one brief when they do not know the facts, and they would write a different brief if they did know the facts. Professor Kelsey, in speaking of conditions in Haiti, says it has been a Republic except for two short periods of time. I wish to quote his language, if I can. I have it here in pamphlet form, and I find that on page 128 of the pamphlet Professor Kelsey says:

> Barring the short periods when a couple of rulers styled themselves emperors Haiti has always been a Republic.

But note the following:

> In reality, however, it has always been a military despotism, as the 39 military posts would indicate.

Then Senators talk about constitutional government in Haiti. If a number of constitutions make constitutional government, then the Haitians have had it. Professor Kelsey further says:

> It has had an ample supply of constitutions from 1805, 1806 (when it said that a new regenerative constitution was needed) through the years 1816, 1843, 1846, 1859, 1861, 1867, 1874, 1879, 1889, down to the last in 1918. The "elections" had always been a farce in that they but elected the man who had seized the power in his hands as the "savior of his people."

No, Mr. President——

Mr. McCORMICK. Will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. McCORMICK. The Senator, I am sure, intends to make it clear that prior to an election a military chieftain seized possession of the capital and gained control of the military forces, and then convoked the assembly which elected him?

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, yes; that is the situation, and that is what has been going on in Haiti all of these years.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. But the interesting feature of this question to me is this: Supposing these things to be true, is the United States going to take possession of all of the Central American countries and islands of which it is true?

Mr. POMERENE. No, sir; I do not think so; and I want to have conditions improved down there so we can get out. I should like to get out to-morrow if we could. Of course we can get out. However, I wish in this connection, preliminary to a statement that I am going to make, to say that this committee went down there and invited many people to come and testify. We wanted to hear them. Wherever charges were made of cruelty and we ourselves could not get the witnesses, we referred them to the commanding officer in charge to get his inspectors to work in order to find out what the facts were, and many of those facts were presented later. Let me say a word with regard to the character of this testimony.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the senior Senator from Ohio yield to his colleague?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. WILLIS. If it will not interrupt my colleague, I should like to ask him to pursue just a little further the suggestion which has been made by the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], in response to which my colleague said, "Yes; we could get out of there." In my colleague's judgment, what would be the effect now if we did get out of there?

Mr. POMERENE. I thank the Senator. His question merely anticipated what I was going to say.

There were many witnesses whom we should have liked to call before the committee who would not come; they were afraid to come. They were not of the politician class, but they were the solid, substantial citizens, many of them being engaged in charitable work. Some were not natives of the country, while others were. We were told by American officials and others in whom I had confidence, notwithstanding the fact that some of them were marine officers, the story about the Haitian peasants back in the interior. When talking the subject over with them, they said "No; we do not want the marines to go. Before the marines came we did not know what hour of the day or of the night either officials of the Haitian Government or representatives of the Cacos would come and seize us and try to impress us into the military service. They would come and demand contributions of food supplies or they would demand animals, or something of that kind, without making payment, but since the marines have been here we know we are safe with our families and our property. We know that when we take our little produce to market and get the little money for it which we do get, it is ours, and nobody is taking it away from us."

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to assure the Senator before I propound my interrogatory that I desire only to get the facts. I have been greatly impressed, however, with another phase of the question. If the Senator intends to discuss that phase later I will have no objection if he will defer answering my interrogatory until he reaches that point. Outside, however, of the things the Senator has been mentioning, I have been greatly impressed with the charge which has been made, and so far as I know stands undenied, that our Government was engaged from the beginning in a program of deception. Instead of taking possession of the country, for which there might be some argument advanced, to develop it for the benefit of the people who were there, it seems to me that the representatives of our Government engaged in little political tricks that would disgrace the worst political machine in America. It has been disclosed here that official telegrams from the Secretary of the Navy, advising the admiral what to do, and coercion was used to compel the people of Haiti to adopt a certain course.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I expect to go into that a little later, if the Senator will permit me.

Mr. NORRIS. I will defer, then, until the Senator reaches that point.

Mr. POMERENE. I will say to the Senator very frankly some things have been done there which I do not approve.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like particularly to call attention to one thing. A man by the name of McIlhenny was appointed by the President of the United States as financial adviser for the Republic of Haiti, at a salary of $10,000 a year, as I understand, and $500 a month traveling expenses. It is alleged he spent most of his time in America. All these expenses had to be paid by the Haitian people, who were being taxed without their consent. Are we justified even in improving a country without the consent of its people, if we make them pay for it?

Mr. POMERENE. Either I or some of my associates on the committee will go into that before we finish this discussion. I wanted to pursue a little further the query of my distinguished colleague.

The information came to us from all hands and all sides, outside of what was known as the Unione Patriotique, the Hatians did not want us to go. I had myself a two hours' conference with one of the finest types of men I ever met, a rare combination of the spiritual and the practical. I am not going to give his name, because it would jeopardize his safety if I should, but when, at the conclusion of our conference, I said to him, "Suppose the United States Government were to issue an order to have the marines vacate the island to-morrow, what would be the result?" I never saw a more pained expression on any man's face. As I interpreted it, he thought that my question indicated what our program was going to be, and, shaking his head, he said, "Senator, I have heard many Haitians say that if the marines were to leave the last would be scarcely out of sight of land until a shot would be fired and then a revolution." Later on I repeated that statement to three or four other men in whom I had equal confidence, because they made a great impression upon my mind, and they confirmed the statement which I have just made.

But it may be said conditions in Haiti are not our affair. It may be they are not. I know of a negro out in my State who was discussing the subject and insisting that we should get out of the island, and when it was suggested that if we did it would be followed by revolution, he said, "That is all right; they have got a right to kill one another if they wish." That may be the view of some, but it is not mine. My belief is that if we get out of Haiti on January 1, 1923, then we will have to go back. I do not, as I have previously said, want to stay there, but I believe it is our duty to stay there long enough to permit the Haitians to organize a government which will be truly representative of the Haitian people and of their ideals and aspirations; but there will not be such a government if we are going to depend upon some of the politicians down there or some of the politicians in America who are stirring up this agitation in the United States.

Mr. President, reference has been made to some of the cablegrams and communications which passed between the marine forces in the island and the Government at Washington. One of these admirals—I believe, Admiral Caperton—said in one of his cablegrams that he thought Haiti would cede to us the Mole St. Nicholas. Admiral Benson, I believe, who was then the Acting Secretary of the Navy, gave certain directions, but said that the matter of the mole could be taken up later. It has not been taken up later so far as I know, and I do not know of anyone connected with the Government who wants a coaling place there.

Reference is made to the election of a President. The President, Dartiguenave, was elected by the Congress of the Haitian Republic. There was another candidate, I believe, by the name of Bolo. Both of them, as I understand the situation, desired to curry favor with the United States authorities. There were some other candidates. We were there trying to restore peace and order. I have no doubt that our representative there as well as here in Washington may have had some preference for the place if they knew the character of all of the candidates, and I think they did go to the extent of saying to the members of the Congress of Haiti that they preferred Dartiguenave; but, Senators, I submit that, whether we like that action or not, you and I could better determine what we would do and what ought to have been done if we had been there on the scene of action.

Later a council of state was organized under their constitution, as I understand. It was clothed with legislative power in the event that the congress was not in session. The President, Dartiguenave, for reasons unknown to me, dissolved the congress. This council of state was clothed with the power of electing his successor. During the period of our occupation a new constitution was suggested. A constitution was prepared. There were a number of conferences. It was finally approved by an election.

Maybe we should have taken no part in that election. My belief is that we took no part, except to have meetings of citizens and the officers of the marines and others explain the constitution to the people, and we were there to keep order during the election. The election was under the control of officers of Haiti, who presided at the polling places. If anyone is interested in that, let him refer both to Professor Kelsey's pamphlet and also to the testimony of Colonel Williams, from which the distinguished Senator from Idaho read awhile ago.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nebraska?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I want to ask the Senator about that election. Was it the same election about which the Senator from Idaho quoted from some of the dispatches?

Mr. POMERENE. I think it was; yes.

Mr. NORRIS. Assuming those to be true, does the Senator think that election could be anything but a farce?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator asks a fair question, and if such an election were to be held in the United States I should say it was not fair; but I take it that if the Senator was there in a position of responsibility he would want such an election as could be had; and bear in mind that while this constitution was adopted, there is a provision in that constitution in substance, as there is in our own Constitution, that it can be amended from time to time. I read a moment ago from the article by Professor Kelsey, in which he, in substance, speaks of all of the elections as being a farce; and the elections, such as they had, were after some revolutionist had got control, and then called an election to keep him in power.

Mr. NORRIS. I can see how that would be a farce; but was not this one the same way, where our Government had control?

Mr. POMERENE. Maybe so.

Mr. NORRIS. Let me ask the Senator another question. Was not the vital thing in that constitution that we insisted should be adopted the change that enabled people who were not citizens of the Haitian Government to own real estate there?

Mr. POMERENE. I do not know about that, and I do not like that provision in the constitution at all, and it can be changed at any time they wish to change it.

Mr. NORRIS. Does the Senator think it could ever be changed while our soldiers have control of the machinery?

Mr. POMERENE. I do, sir.

Mr. NORRIS. Then, they would have to do differently from what they did at the time they adopted the constitution.

Mr. POMERENE. I can not answer for that. I do not know.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. If that can be changed, and our Government is willing to change it, that would be the first evidence of good faith, and they ought to change it. They ought to change it at once, and they ought to demand that the people who have acquired property under it should deed that property back to the people from whom they bought it.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, let me interject, to comment on the last statement——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. POMERENE. I do.

Mr. McCORMICK. Two companies, if I remember rightly, have attempted to secure title to something like 100,000 acres or more. I think I am right in saying that they have been able to obtain actual title to very much less than that. The fundamental law of Porto Rico, if I recall correctly, limits the holding of a single corporation to 10,000 acres. There is no limit under this provision. So far as our Government has influence there, it ought to be exerted to prevent the alienation of Haitian lands to foreigners on any large scale.

Mr. BORAH. I agree with the Senator from Ohio, and I agree with the Senator from Illinois, that that provision of the constitution can not be defended. Efforts ought not to be made to defend it, and I am glad that neither one of the Senators who have been there investigating it seeks to defend it.

Mr. McCORMICK. I want to make it clear to the Senator, though, that although efforts have been made to obtain title, so far as I know good title has not been obtained to these great properties.

Mr. BORAH. They have what they consider title which justifies the improvement of the real estate, and they are going ahead and improving it.

Mr. McCORMICK. I have seen the largest holding, and the improvement is not considerable—a few shacks.

Mr. BORAH. I have in my possession a letter from the manager of one of the corporations in which he states what they are doing.

Mr. McCORMICK. I spoke of the largest holding. Of course, the Haitian-American Co., as the Senator knows, has gone into bankruptcy.

Mr. BORAH. I am glad of that. That is the only consolation I get out of this situation.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, let me say a word further with regard to elections and administration in the island.

There are two distinct civilizations in Haiti. One represents the wealth and culture of the island. They are refined, courteous, educated, interested in their particular type of the Haitian. They represent about 2 per cent of the people in the island. The highest estimate I have ever heard placed upon it was 5 per cent. I think 2 per cent more nearly represents the fact; so that we have from 95 to 98 per cent of these people that can neither read nor write, some of them worshipers of voodooism. During the examination one Doctor Sylvain, president of the Union Patriotique, did not want to testify before the committee, but he wanted to make a speech, and it was such a speech as you would hear from any clever lawyer. When some reference was made to the work that we had done down there by way of sanitation, by way of prison reform, by way of the building of roads, and some reference was made to education, in reply to a question which was asked by the distinguished Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], he said:

We have had compulsory education in Haiti since 1864.

My God, what a commentary on Haitian administration!

Mr. BORAH. And exactly the same thing may be said of the education of the natives of India by Great Britain, which has been there for 200 years.

Mr. POMERENE. We will have troubles enough of our own if we take care of our own problems.

Mr. BORAH. And if we educate our own children here at home, where in one big city 90,000 remained out of school last winter because they did not have the clothes necessary to enable them to go to school.

Mr. POMERENE. Yes; that may be so. Let me go a step further. Of course, if it is the position of the Senator from Idaho that we should leave every Haitian revolutionist with his machete free to go to work against his fellow Haitian, then there is no answer to the question; we ought to get out.

Mr. BORAH. I ask this question in all sincerity. The Senator says that we can not get out of there; that we must not go out until these people are fit for self-government. May I ask the Senator, in all sincerity, was any people in the world ever fitted for self-government under a military dictatorship?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the Senator has not heard me say anything about continuing military dictatorship there. The Haitians have been accustomed to military dictatorship all their lives.

Mr. BORAH. Precisely. It is very probable that the Senator from Ohio and myself are not far apart. I have not contended that we ought to get out of Haiti to-night or to-morrow, but I do say we are under the most solemn obligation to at once change this military dictatorship to some kind of a civil form of government which will enable those people to be trained in self-government.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, that leads me to suggest that I have such confidence in the fairness of the Senator from Idaho that if he will go down there and make an independent investigation, such as Professor Kelsey made, or such as this committee tried to make, his views and ours will not be very far apart.

Mr. BORAH. If this committee is in favor of restoring civil government and giving those people civil government until we can decently get out of that island, we are not apart; but I denounce as intolerable and indefensible a military form of government such as has continued for eight years and which there is no indication whatever of our ending.

Mr. POMERENE. I am afraid the Senator has been content to get his information on one side of this problem.

Mr. BORAH. No; I have not been content with that. I have argued this entire matter from the official record, the official telegrams.

Mr. POMERENE. The official record shows only a part of the situation. It does not show the character of the people down there, or what they have to contend with in this matter. But let me go a step further with this to show what the situation is and what we can do.

I have spoken of the wealthy class, the educated class. I have also referred to the peasant class. Very few of the latter can either read or write. They are in as primitive a condition in the central part of Haiti as are the people in the jungles of Africa.

A man who was at one time a captain of marines, who is not now in the service, was in charge of road building at one time, and I have a letter from him in my files, written at my suggestion so that I might not be mistaken as to the facts. He told me while he was in charge of the road building a schooner came from the States laden with road-building machinery, and in the hold of the vessel were 60 wheelbarrows. He told the foreman in charge of the work, a Haitian, to take 60 Haitians down to the ship and get those wheelbarrows. After a while, when he had finished some little job he had to do, he went out to see what had become of the wheelbarrows, and he saw these 60 Haitians proceeding in Indian file, each carrying a wheelbarrow on his head. They had never seen a wheelbarrow, did not know how it worked, and when he told the foreman to put it down and shove it along on the wheel they chuckled as children would when they find an automatic toy and learn to operate it.

At another time he was a representative of the Haitian treasury department in connection with his duties with the marines, and it was his business to go about the island and find out how the revenues were being expended. He gives one instance like this: The Haitian Government had been paying rental for a building used as a schoolhouse. The schoolhouse had been burned down some years before, but yet they were paying rent on it. He told of his looking into the qualifications of the schoolteachers. He found that there was a teacher of music. He could neither sing nor play any instrument; he did not know whether a sheet of music was right-side up or upside down.

Mr. BORAH. Was he sent down by the United States?

Mr. POMERENE. I am not going to answer my facetious friend's question. Another was a teacher of drawing who knew nothing about the subject. This officer had his check, and said to the teacher, "If you will draw a picture of a plain bucket I will give you your check," but the teacher could not do it.

He spoke of the character of men they have on the bench. They have vice judges. I take it, from what I heard, that vice judges correspond to what is known as a deputy judge in the probate court in some of our States. He found that this vice judge could neither read nor write. In Haiti they have the Code Napoleon. For convenience it was printed and bound in four volumes—the Code Civil, the Code Criminal, the Code Communal, and the Code Rural—and when he was talking to this vice judge these four volumes were on the table before him. He shuffled them, and said to the vice judge, "If you will pick up each of these volumes and tell me what it is, I will give you your check." He could not do it.

Professor Kelsey, in his review of the situation in Haiti, says with reference to the judiciary—not quoting his exact language—that no dependence can be paid at all to the courts of first instance or the intermediate court, the name of which I have at this moment forgotten, but he speaks in the highest terms of the court of cassation, which is made up of very able, very learned, and very honorable men. Some reference has been made to the fact that they are under military control, under martial law. One of the reasons why they have had to establish something of that kind is that no dependence could be paid to the inferior courts in the country.

It may be of some interest to Senators to know what is being done in the way of policing the island now. We have our marines there. They have a gendarmery, which under the treaty is officered by American marines. The only Haitian money which is paid to any of our marines is paid by way of salary to the few American officers who are in charge of the gendarmery. They are training men, and promoting them to sergeants and lieutenants; and I think there were several advanced to the rank of captain, although I am not sure about that. My colleagues on the committee will correct me if I am mistaken about it. They are advancing and they are developing somewhat slowly, but they are nevertheless developing, and it is the belief of the best thinking men that after a time they will be developed to a point where they can take charge of the policing of the country. I certainly hope so.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, right along that line, what has been done in the way of establishing schools and promoting education?

Mr. POMERENE. They have been helping along somewhat. There has not been so much done in Haiti as in Santo Domingo, and I am sorry I have not the figures.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. McCORMICK. The Senator from Nebraska will find that the treaty has merit in principle. Its gravest defect, perhaps, is that it makes no provision for the regeneration of the school system of Haiti. A larger sum has been allotted for the support of the schools than prior to the period of intervention, but there has been no appreciable increase in the number of scholars, whereas in the Dominican Republic, where our responsibility was complete, the school population, if that be the phrase, has been four or five times greater since intervention than before.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Senator will permit, I would like to follow my question with another. If we are going to act as guardians for any people, it seems to me the educational line is the one in which we ought to make the greatest effort. What effort has been made on the part of the Government to educate those people?

Mr. POMERENE. A very extensive effort has been made in the Dominican Republic.

Mr. NORRIS. I judged so from the answer the Senator from Illinois gave, but why have we not made the same kind of an effort in Haiti?

Mr. POMERENE. Because we have no authority under our treaty.

Mr. McCORMICK. The Senator will recall that we sent an educational counselor or adviser to Haiti, but that his efforts to reform the system were resisted during his entire residence in Haiti, so that finally in despair he resigned his position.

Mr. NORRIS. If it is true that the people can not be educated, and that we can not make any headway along the line of education, it ought to appear at once, it seems to me, that our work there is going to be a failure, even if we stay there a million years.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not accept the statement that they can not be educated.

Mr. NORRIS. I have not made the statement that we can not succeed at it, but evidently nothing has been done yet, and we have been there seven years. It is more important that the people be educated than that we rule them in a military way.

Mr. POMERENE. Undoubtedly it is. We were given control of the collection of the customs and the policing of the island, but we were not given control of the courts or of the internal revenue. We were not given control of the internal administration of affairs. That remains with Haiti. We have a financial adviser down there, but he has no charge of the internal revenues at all; and that leads me to make an observation or two as to the internal administration of the finances in Haiti.

Reference has been made to Colonel McIlhenny, who is the American financial adviser. I think he has made some mistakes, but he is a very capable man. In order to improve their system and to be able to advise as to conditions, he asked for a statement of Haiti's resources, of the taxes which were collected and of the method in which they were disbursed. So he had a meeting with the cabinet officials, and he asked one of these officers, who corresponds, perhaps, to our treasurer, for a statement, and he was promised it the next day. The next day came, and he did not get it. Several days elapsed, and he went to see him again, and after repeated pressing it developed that this officer who was collecting the taxes had no record of either the collections or disbursements. If I have overstated that, I wish some of my colleagues would correct me.

Mr. McCORMICK. Not only that, but when pressed for the record he told Mr. McIlhenny that it was such a bore to keep them that he had torn them all up some months before, and had not troubled to keep any since.

Mr. NORRIS. I would like to inquire if, under Mr. McIlhenny's very efficient management, at $10,000 a year and $500 a month expenses, he has gotten any further than that with the financial affairs of Haiti?

Mr. BORAH rose.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator asked me a moment ago with regard to that. I will ask the Senator from Idaho to excuse me just a moment while I answer the question. It is true that Mr. McIlhenny went down there as financial adviser, and under the provisions of the treaty his salary was to be paid. He went down there and took a survey of the situation and went into matters very thoroughly. A part of the outstanding loan was in default, as I now recall. It was necessary to get funds. They wanted the improvements to go on. There were a number of other things involved, such as increasing the hospital facilities and improvement in their methods of sanitation. All these matters required money. He tried to negotiate a loan, and some of the dear friends of Haiti have been opposing this loan. Now, it turns out that certain of the revenues of the island, perhaps it is the customs receipts, but I am not sure about that, are obligated for the payment of old bonds and the creation of a sinking fund. They aimed at one time to negotiate a loan of $14,000,000. To say there was an attempt to increase that to $30,000,000 is not important. The fact, as I understand it, is that there was some talk about a loan of $30,000,000. Whatever it was, $30,000,000 or $40,000,000, is not important for the point I was going to make. Let us say $30,000,000.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. McCORMICK. The protocol for the loan, if the Senator will consider for a moment, authorized an aggregate issue of $40,000,000 of bonds, but at this time $16,000,000 and no more. That was for the purpose of permitting the Republic at some future time to issue additional bonds which would be on a parity with those issued to-day.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, will the Senator yield——

Mr. POMERENE. Pardon me just a moment. I will yield a little later. These matters are all very interesting.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator tell us what rate of interest those bonds were to draw and at what price they were to be sold? I have heard it stated that the bonds were to draw 7½ per cent interest and the people of America who got them paid only 92. It was in the contract that they were only to pay 92 cents on the dollar.

Mr. POMERENE. I do not have in mind now the discount, but the discount of the bonds was very materially less than on any loan ever negotiated by the Haitian Republic and the interest rate for the loan which was proposed and concluded—I remember this fact distinctly without remembering the rate—was less than the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. was paying as interest here a month or two before on a 5 or 10 year loan.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator certainly will not say that when he takes into consideration that under the agreement, if it be true as I have heard it stated, the bonds were to be taken by the bondholders at 92 cents on the dollar and drew 7½ per cent on the par value.

Mr. POMERENE. I stated to the Senator that I could not be exact about that. The record will show. I think we have that figured out, as I now recall. The Senator from Nevada [Mr. ODDIE] is here and will correct me if I am mistaken about it.

Mr. ODDIE. I do not recall the exact figures, but I would like to suggest to the Senator from Ohio that Haiti owes millions of dollars to foreign countries, and if this loan had been negotiated some time ago Haiti could have discounted, so to speak, her indebtedness, and would have been ahead at this time so that she could have paid off her indebtedness.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator is exactly right and I want to develop that thought a little more. The principal part of the old outstanding loan, if not all of it, is payable in francs. The franc is probably worth now 30 per cent of what it was as compared with the dollar.

Mr. McCORMICK. Fifty per cent.

Mr. POMERENE. Fifty per cent. I thank the Senator. The plan was to make a new loan payable in our dollars and with those dollars to buy francs and pay off the French loan. It would have cut in two the total bonded debt of Haiti, but, of course, the Haitian patriot is not interested in that.

Mr. McCORMICK. I think it but fair to comment at that point and say that between $1,000,000 and $2,000,000 gold has been lost to Haiti by reason of the delay in funding the debt. There has been more misrepresentation of the character and the purpose of the proposed loan than upon any other feature of the controversy.

Mr. POMERENE. I may say, so far as some of the people are concerned, who come up here and make statements about it—and I am not referring to Senators, but to the people who have come here and made these statements—that they have deliberately and purposely misrepresented the situation.

Mr. BORAH. I got my information in regard to this loan from the prospectus which was issued by the bankers of New York City who took it and were willing to take it. So there was no misrepresentation from Haiti upon my part.

Mr. POMERENE. I am making no statement of that kind. It is perfectly clear that if the loan had been made as originally contemplated, Haiti by this time would be a million or more dollars ahead of the game in gold.

Mr. NORRIS. I have here the statement of a committee of gentlemen who waited on our Secretary of State and who delivered an address and is, I think, entitled to a great deal of consideration, in which he stated:

> Mr. McIlhenny attempted to float a loan of $14,000,000 at 7½ per cent issued at 92 payable in 10 years.

The Senator will realize that that would make, although I have not figured it out, a rate of interest on the money that the Haitians would get, I should think, somewhere in the neighborhood of 10 per cent. With that they were to pay off a debt in France of less than $7,000,000 that drew a rate not exceeding 6 per cent.

Mr. McCORMICK. What was the value of the franc at that time?

Mr. NORRIS. I do not know the date.

Mr. McCORMICK. It was about 17.

Mr. NORRIS. I am not speaking of the value of the franc. I am speaking of the rate of interest the bankers in New York were charging these people and which in effect they were paying. The fact that even though it might be cheap money at that particular time would not be sufficient reason why we ought to saddle on some other people by force a loan of $14,000,000 to take up another loan not yet due and that only drew 6 per cent interest.

Mr. McCORMICK. The franc at that time was about 17 as compared to 10, if the Senator would be accurate in estimating that loan at 7½ per cent. Even now, in the present era of cheap money, the new loan to the Republic of Bolivia is 8½ per cent.

Mr. NORRIS. The Senator must realize it is more than 7½ per cent.

Mr. McCORMICK. I accept the Senator's estimate.

Mr. NORRIS. The contract says it shall be at 7½ per cent, but that the bondholders shall pay only 92 cents on the dollar.

Mr. POMERENE. The statement made by the Senator from Nebraska—and I think it is correct—is that the proposed loan was payable in 10 years. At 92 cents on the dollar that would be 8 per cent for the 10 years, and figuring it out just roughly, it would make the loan run about 8½ per cent during the entire period, or thereabouts. But that is only one part of the question. As the Senator from Illinois has said, at that time the franc was worth very materially less than it is now, and even under that rate at that time Haiti would have been the gainer by several million dollars even on that loan.

But to go a step further with the matter, the revenues which came into the possession of the receiver of customs were to be applied to certain purposes, as the Senator will find if he refers to the treaty. I shall not take the time to go into it. Of course, we would be limited by the treaty. They found this system in Haiti. There are a great many of the very wealthy Haitians who have large plantations and other property. We were informed there was no tax on real estate. The Haitian peasant picks his coffee berries out on the hills and mountain side, and he has to pay an export tax of 3 cents a pound on his coffee. The financial adviser, as I understand, suggested a real estate tax; hence the necessity for the survey which was referred to. Whatever is done in that behalf is not under our control, but is under the control of the Haitian Government. So that I think we are straining matters a little when we too severely criticize the suggestion of a survey and of a real estate tax. It is the peasant who ought to be relieved from burdens somewhat.

Now, let me go a step further.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Nevada.

Mr. ODDIE. The Senator understands, of course, that the export tax on coffee is a distinct burden, and a very heavy burden, on the Haitian peasant, in that it bars them from selling their coffee in competition with people from other of the West Indies islands.

Mr. POMERENE. Indeed, it is a very heavy burden upon the peasant.

Mr. NORRIS. I agree with the Senator that it is a burden, but I do not think it is right to tax them, and I do not want to impose my ideas by force upon some other Government. I would like to suggest that when Haiti comes to pay these debts which we have compelled her to contract, she will probably have to raise the tax on coffee and will have to pay a little more.

Mr. KING. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Utah.

Mr. KING. In reply to the statement made just now by the Senator from Nevada, I would like to say that many of the peasants are very bitterly opposed to the change in the export tax. They assign the reason that under the new constitution the valuable coffee lands will soon pass into the hands of the foreigners, and the foreigners are the ones who are now championing the cause of the repeal of the export tax, because they then being the exporters of coffee will be free from the tax.

Mr. McCORMICK. Let me say to the Senator that after spending a week in Haiti not one member of the committee ever heard any such thing. From whom does the Senator learn that that is the opinion of the peasants?

Mr. KING. I think that the Senator from Illinois failed to learn many things in Haiti that he might have learned.

Mr. McCORMICK. Let me say this by way of reply, that at his own request the Senator from Utah was appointed a member of that committee; but he never attended any of the hearings of the committee in Washington; and he resigned from the committee before it went to Haiti.

Mr. KING. Oh, well, Mr. President——

Mr. McCORMICK. It may be that the Senator from Illinois failed to learn all that he might have learned, but he sought, in common with the other members of the committee, to learn all that there was to learn. How can it be that Haitian peasants would object to being relieved of half of the burden of taxation upon their sole crop? Is that credible? Why are land values to be decreased if the tax which falls upon the crop of the peasants' land is to be removed?

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. ODDIE. I should like to say in answer to the statement of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] that in Haiti all over the mountains there are coffee trees growing wild, and it would be impossible to turn over all of the coffee lands to foreigners or to anybody else unless a large part of the island be turned over to them. There is very little cultivated coffee in Haiti; it grows wild there as blackberries do here, to a very large extent. The natives go up on the mountains and pick the coffee and carry it into the market.

Mr. BORAH. They will not be doing that after the foreigners get hold of the land.

Mr. ODDIE. I do not see how the foreigners can get hold of all the coffee land when there is coffee growing almost everywhere.

Mr. BORAH. What is the area of Haiti?

Mr. ODDIE. It is about 8,000 square miles.

Mr. BORAH. It will not take the foreigners very long to gather up the land of the Haitians at the rate they are now going. An area of 8,000 square miles would only make a reclamation project out in the Senator's section and mine.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, it is easier to get misinformation than it is to get information as to Haiti. When the committee went there they were presented with a petition to issue an order protecting every witness whom we might call, the petitioners stating that they were afraid they would be terrorized by the marines and threatened if they came before us, and things of that kind. We asked for the name of one witness who had been thus terrorized or intimidated, but have not yet the name of one such witness and we never shall have.

I intended to speak briefly upon the subject of roads. Let me go back. The French were overthrown by the Haitians in 1804. One French writer, so I am told, has stated that in 1804 more than one-third of the foreign trade of France was with Haiti. At that time there were magnificent sugar plantations and coffee plantations and all kinds of tropical fruits in Haiti; they had most magnificent palaces. The Haitians had a splendid road system, aggregating, I think, about 500 miles of improved roads. Some of those roads, so I am told by a Frenchman in the island, who gave as his authority the French writer to whom I have just referred, were the equal of any of the roads leading to the Versailles palace in France.

Then came the uprising in Haiti, and in the course of that uprising 8,000 Frenchmen were killed; the palaces were destroyed; and now up about Cape Haitien the only remnants of those magnificent palaces are some concrete or stone walls, which are the ruins of those palaces, silent sentinels watching over the civilization of a century ago. Those highways, magnificent as they were, soon fell into ruins. In Haiti they have torrential rains. In that wonderful climate and with that wonderful soil vegetation grows up almost during the night. When the marines went to the island there were only about 210 miles of road along the coast that could be passed over in dry weather by wheeled vehicles. Since we have been down there the United States marines have built 325 miles of new construction and have repaired 210 miles of old construction. That was the statement made to our committee before the Christmas holidays. What has been done since I do not know. One may now travel in automobiles into the interior of the island and along the coast line without difficulty. There is no doubt whatever that the United States' occupation of Haiti has been of great advantage to that island from an economic standpoint.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Will the Senator state what, if anything, has been done since the American occupation in the way of the sanitary improvement of the island of Haiti?

Mr. POMERENE. I will touch on that in just a moment.

These roads are built largely under what is called the "corvée" system. The "corvée" system in part is just what we used to have in the State of Ohio, requiring, when I was a boy, two days' labor from each man in the State. Whether that system prevails now or not I do not know, but it does prevail in many of the States. Under the old system the Haitian laws required three days' work in the vicinage. The peasants were called to perform this work, and some of the marine officers were most unjust to the peasants. In certain instances the peasants were required to do work for a good many days and often at a goodly distance from their homes. That gave rise to considerable dissatisfaction. This road building was under the charge of the gendarmerie, which was officered by marine officers, some of them high officers, including captains, majors, and perhaps colonels. They had under their charge Haitian petty officers and gendarmes, who were sent out to get labor. The Haitian petty officers and gendarmes would go out and get the men and bring them in. Often they were not given credit for the work which they had theretofore done. Our marine officers, however, were depending upon the good faith of the Haitian petty officers and men. Again, we were told that in many instances some of the Haitian peasants did this work because they were better fed, the food problem in the interior during their revolutions having been a serious one at times. I am perfectly clear in my own mind that, either directly or indirectly, this conduct on the part of some of the officers of the marines caused a great deal of the dissatisfaction. I am glad to say, however, that after the matter was called to the attention of the authorities higher up it was stopped.

Mr. OVERMAN. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. I yield.

Mr. OVERMAN. Suppose that we should do as the French did, build for them magnificent roads and palaces, establish a good government and a good constitution, improve their sanitary condition, and then turn them loose, what will become of them?

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I am afraid the Senator from North Carolina is in rather a pessimistic frame of mind. I do not want to think what his question suggests. I believe that if the peasants are rightly led and the educated people and the wealthy people down there will take some altruistic interest in them they will become good citizens. I want to believe that, and I do believe it; but one of the difficulties is that the wealthy and the educated classes have taken no interest whatever in the peasant class.

May I digress for just a moment to refer to a conversation I had with one man on the island, an American who was down there urging relief for the Haitians along the line of what the Union Patriotique wanted? After we had been there for a week and saw what the educated and wealthy classes were—and they were a delightful people—and then we saw the peasantry, I said to this man: "We have been here on the island for a week; we have heard testimony; we have seen all classes of the natives. Tell me, if you can, what single service the educated and cultured classes have rendered to the less fortunate peasant class in the island?" I am waiting for the answer yet.

The distinguished chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee asked me about sanitation. Mr. President, when the marines went down there the streets and alleys were so filthy that they were hardly passable. If Senators will examine the report made by the sanitary officer, they will find that the foulest of filth was left on the streets and in the alleys. We have cleaned it up. Now they have hospitals. Previously they had a few hospitals, but they were a disgrace to the name. Now they have peace and order. Before there was no peace and no order. It was one series of revolutions after another.

Let me, if I can place my hands upon it, call attention to a statement made as to conditions in Haiti as well as in the Dominican Republic.

Judge Otto Schoenrich, an American lawyer now living in New York, was sent to the Dominican Republic, I think, during the Roosevelt administration. He wrote a book on Santo Domingo. Concededly, I think, it is the best authority upon the subject. In one chapter he speaks of the revolutions in the Dominican Republic and in Haiti. I want to read just one sentence from that work. He said that since the Haitians got control in 1804 there have been 29 chiefs of state, and he adds:

> It is to be observed, however, that of the Haitian executives only one completed his term of office and voluntarily resigned. Of the others, 4 remained in power until their death from natural causes, 18 were deposed by revolutions, 1 of them committing suicide, another being executed on the steps of his burning palace, and still another being cut to pieces by the mob, 5 were assassinated, and 1 is chief magistrate at the present time.

That book was written probably three or four years ago. Remember that he is speaking only of the successful revolutions. There were many other unsuccessful revolutions. A part of this island was inhabited solely by the cacos, or brigands, and it was there that the revolutions originated. There are no caco leaders now, and life and property are safe in every section of the island.

Mr. President, I have devoted my discussion this afternoon largely to Haiti.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for a moment?

Mr. POMERENE. Yes.

Mr. ODDIE. My attention was diverted a moment ago. Did the Senator give the record of the Presidents of Haiti in the last 10 years of Haiti?

Mr. POMERENE. I did not.

Mr. ODDIE. It is a fact that in the last 10 years there have been eight Presidents, each elected for a term of seven years. Of those eight, three fled the country, one was blown up in his palace, one was presumably poisoned—he died in a mysterious way—and two were murdered.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, with that history before us, what is our duty? We are now near the middle of June. It is planned by this amendment to get out entirely on December 31 of the current year. I would get out to-morrow if we could, and if I felt we could do it with safety; but I am certain that under present conditions if we did get out there would be within a few days another revolution. Until they succeed in organizing some kind of a government which will give reasonable promise of security to the Haitian people, ought we to get out? And I say that looking at it from the standpoint of the Haitians themselves.

I have here another reference which will be of interest, I think, to Senators.

Professor Kelsey was called before our committee. I should say that Professor Kelsey is a member of the faculty of the University of Pennsylvania, and he was sent down there by the American Academy of Political and Social Science to make an investigation, and he made as an independent investigation the report which appears in our record. When he came before us as a witness—I read from page 1240—this is what he said, speaking of an occasion when he met a group of Haitians:

> "Gentlemen, I am an American taxpayer; it costs us a large sum of money to keep these men here. Unless they are needed and are really doing useful work, I am in favor of withdrawing them to save our country the expense. Now," I said, "I want to know your attitude." Immediately a protest from every man in the group; the men must not be withdrawn. I said, "Why must they not be withdrawn?" "Because we have no confidence in our local administrators or local government."

I asked the question:

> Now, I suppose it would shed a light on the picture if you show us something of the character of the men you are talking about.
> Professor KELSEY. Yes; here is the chief of the section, the most important local office; here is the school-teacher; here are one or two of the more prominent farmers; they are men of that type gathered from the environment.

Question, by myself:

> They were fairly representative of the intelligent types of that community?
> Professor KELSEY. Yes; I was told by the French priest that they were the leaders in that community.
>
> Senator POMERENE. Now, proceed with your story.
> Professor KELSEY. I said, "Why not replace the American officers of the gendarmerie with Haitians?" "No," they said immediately. I said, "Why not?" They said, "We have no confidence in them. We have absolute confidence in the Americans." Their unanimity on that point was very striking. I talked then about their financial problem in Haiti; I asked them about taxes; asked them what had been done in the past in the development of schools, and they answered one point after another. Finally I said to them, toward the close of the conference, "Gentlemen, I don't want you to answer this; I want you to think about it." I said, "You have practically told me that you have no confidence whatever in the ability of the Haitian Government, either to maintain law and order or to bring about an orderly development of this country; you are practically saying that in your opinion the Americans should not only remain here and keep peace but should take absolute control of the entire Government." They suddenly sat up and looked man to man. They saw the significance of it. I said, "Now, don't say a word, but that is practically what you have asked us to do in your analysis of the whole situation."

I shall not read more; but I read this to point out the fact that the Haitians themselves have no confidence that they can maintain order there now. My belief is that they will be able to do it after a time; how soon, I can not say. The sooner the better I will be suited; but, looking at this matter not only as an American but as a Senator, it seems to me that it would be little short of a crime for us to say that we were going to get out so soon as this amendment would require us to leave.

I might discuss the Dominican question, but there are other members of the committee here who are perhaps more familiar with that than I am, and for the present I will surrender the floor.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE] has made a very able presentation of this Haitian matter, and I shall refrain from going into details as I should like to. Lack of time will prevent, and I do not think it worth while, in view of what has been said.

Last summer a committee was appointed to investigate this matter, consisting of the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES], the late Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. Knox, who has since passed away, and myself. This committee has sat, I will venture to say, hundreds of hours. It has worked earnestly and hard on this very perplexing question for months and months. The committee, as you will observe, consists of two Republicans and two Democrats; but not once have we allowed political considerations to enter into this discussion and study. We have approached it from the standpoint of real Americanism, and we have not yet submitted our report. We have held hearings up to two days ago. They are now about completed, and we are about ready to submit our final report. I do not think it fair to this committee to take this matter out of its hands before it has submitted its report to the Senate, and act as this amendment presupposes.

Mr. President, the chairman of our committee, the Senator from Illinois [Mr. MCCORMICK], I know has worked consistently and hard all the way through in this matter. You know his desire for economy, his efforts at reducing expenses in the Navy and Marine Corps, wherever they can be consistently reduced. He has been in constant touch with the Navy Department on the Haiti and Santo Domingo questions. I have here a report from the Acting Secretary of the Navy to the military governor of the Dominican Republic, which I believe to have been largely inspired by the Senator from Illinois, advising that steps be taken which will result in a reduction of the force of marines in that country, and getting that country on a stable peace basis, preparatory to our leaving.

Mr. President, the people of Haiti have been discussed and described quite vividly by the Senator from Ohio. I shall not go into that question any further, but I want to say that in our hearings we traveled all over Haiti and Santo Domingo. We heard dozens and dozens of native witnesses, and the record of our hearings is very voluminous. Our conversations with native witnesses in many cases do not appear in the record. We gained our impressions from careful observations, and from what we heard, and it is not fair to our committee or to our Government to prejudge the matter in this way, by directing that the marines be taken from those countries on a certain date. I believe that matter is in the hands of our Commander in Chief, the President.

There has been damaging and dangerous propaganda going about the country. I know that the Senator from Idaho is perfectly sincere in his statements, but I wish he could have been with us on our trip of investigation and at our hearings. If he had been, I think he would agree with me that much of this propaganda has been inspired by German interests. German interests controlled the wharfing privileges at Port au Prince in Haiti. They had a lease for many years on the main and only wharf there, which gave them the right to collect a tax on the incoming and the outgoing freights. The German interests controlled the electric light and the tramway privileges and a large amount of the railroad industry in Haiti.

Much of this propaganda has been carried on in an effort to stir up race prejudice among the Haitians against the Americans, and I have the evidence to show it. Furthermore, those poor Haitians have been called on to subscribe money for this propaganda. That is not right. The American Government is too grand and big a Government to permit a people who are dependent on it to a large extent, while this occupation exists, to pay to make the American Government do its duty. I hope that we will take the big, broad view, the view to which America is entitled, and not be prejudiced by certain mistakes which may have been made by our Government, nor the mistakes which may have been made by individual members of our Navy and Marine Corps, and look on these organizations in a big, generous way, protect their good name, and help us solve a difficult problem as America should help. The question in my mind is not so much how we got into Haiti. Mistakes have been made, as I say, and we all admit it, but the question confronting us to-day is, What are we to do regarding that country? What do those people themselves want? We have talked to scores of the natives, and we are convinced from what they have told us that if we should get out to-day or in the very near future there would be another revolution immediately and those people would then lose the peace and protection they have enjoyed a large part of the time since our occupation, which they had not had for generations before. I am convinced from personal observations and interviews with them that a large part of those people do not want us to leave now.

I ask the Senate to look on this question in the big, American way, to condemn the unjust attacks on our Navy and Marine Corps, to give credit where it is due, and join with us in trying to help solve this complicated and difficult problem in an American spirit and in an American way.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, I want to say a word or two in reply. First, as to what the able Senator from Nevada refers to as propaganda.

I have no doubt there has been propaganda in regard to this matter. That can always be said in regard to any question of importance now, but I beg to say to the Senator from Nevada and to the Senator from Ohio that my views in regard to this matter have been formed almost exclusively from the official record and from the testimony which has been taken by the committee.

Very little of the material which has been furnished to me from different parties has been utilized in making up my mind in regard to this matter, other than that which comes from official sources and from the hearings, which are now available. Of course, I did not have an opportunity to see the witnesses when they testified, but I think we get a fair idea of the facts from reading the testimony, although we were not in position to see those who testified.

The Senator from Nevada has well said that the question now as to how we got into Haiti is not so important as the question of how we are going to get out. I agree with that. Nevertheless, there is some importance to be attached to the manner in which we went in, for the reason that it throws light on the question of whether we are going to get out at all. I look upon our Haitian policy, our Santo Domingo policy, and our Nicaraguan policy as being a part of an entire policy which is more or less an imperialistic policy upon the part of the Government of the United States toward these people.

There are two sides to this question. It may be that we shall have to take possession of all the territory from here to the Panama Canal. There are many people who think so. It may be that we shall have to take possession of all these islands, and if this argument of the able Senator from Ohio and the able Senator from Nevada be followed to its logical conclusion, that is what we shall do.

I am not willing to subscribe to that doctrine as yet. But if we must carry out that policy, let us make it an announced policy; give those people a civil form of government and deal with them as we would deal with our own people, and not govern them by military power and through military force—wreck their own governments and furnish them no government instead.

There has been no distortion of the facts upon the part of those who are criticizing this policy, because, as I have said, we have simply read the telegrams, the official letters, the official pronouncements, and we have now an official program of the present administration. It is the program itself, the policy itself, to which we desire to confine our attention and not the mistakes of the marines. I have not said anything about any cruelty upon the part of the marines. I think that is purely an incidental matter. If we go into Haiti with an imperialistic program, there will be cruelty, there will be arbitrary methods and arbitrary practices, and no one will be to blame for them except those who outline and originate the policy, and send the marines there. I care very little, so far as my view of the situation is concerned, about particular acts of cruelty, except as those acts of cruelty reveal the effect of an imperialistic policy of this kind. I want to deal with the policy which always leads to acts of cruelty. The policy itself is one of cruelty.

I do not think we can get out of Haiti to-night. We have wrecked their Government. To leave there to-night would leave them without any Government at all, would leave them debauched by eight years of military rule. But we can in good faith make preparation which will leave no mistake about our purpose to get out of Haiti, and the first evidence of our good faith, in my opinion, will be changing the form of government from a militaristic form of government to a civil form of government. That ought to be done without delay. These people, you say, ought to be trained in civil government if we expect them ever to become capable of governing themselves. No people were ever trained to self-government, or in capacity for government, under military rule. They are not even permitted to meet down there and discuss their public affairs. They are not permitted to have a public meeting to interchange views. A man who criticizes any act of the military form of government, criticizes any act of the administration, objects to its laws, or criticizes the conduct of the occupation forces, is immediately arrested. Can you train people to self-government under such a program as that?

The able Senator from Ohio referred to the views expressed by President Roosevelt and of President Wilson with reference to San Domingo, and also views expressed, he thought, by President Harding. President Harding did express some views in regard to this, which I will read.

Mr. POMERENE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. BORAH. Yes; I yield.

Mr. POMERENE. Of course, I understand Senator Harding had one view when he had part of the facts, but, apparently, when he got all the facts he had a different view.

Mr. BORAH. It is very unfortunate that we have not had his views expressed since he got all the facts. The only view of his we have is the view expressed when, as the Senator says, he did not have all the facts. I think he had all the facts. We would be delighted to have his view now if he has changed it, and, what would be still more interesting, why he changed.

Mr. POMERENE. Does the Senator mean President Harding's view?

Mr. BORAH. Yes.

Mr. POMERENE. I can only judge what his view is. I have not talked with him on this subject, and I do not know, but I judge what his views probably are by what has been done down there since the 4th of March, 1921.

Mr. BORAH. At a time when he was supposed to have the facts and when he was advising the American people as to what his policy was, he said:

> I will not empower an Assistant Secretary of the Navy to draft a constitution for helpless neighbors in the West Indies and jam it down their throats at the points of bayonets borne by United States marines. We have a higher service for our gallant marines than that. Nor will I misuse the power of the Executive to cover with a veil of secrecy repeated acts of unwarranted interference in domestic affairs of the little republics of the Western Hemisphere, such as in the last few years have not only made enemies of those who should be our friends but have rightfully discredited our country as their trusted neighbor.

At the time the President made that statement he had been in the Senate six years; he had been familiar with these affairs. He was here at the time we were considering the Nicaraguan treaty. He was entirely familiar with our policy in Central American countries and in the adjoining islands. He might have changed his view with reference to some of the features of the matter, but in my judgment he was entirely correct when he said that our conduct down there has forfeited the esteem of our neighbors.

If the press of the Central American countries and the South American countries, outside of these islands, is to be taken as an expression of the public sentiment of those countries, or if the semiofficial expression of opinion is to be regarded, I have no doubt but that all the Central American countries and many of the South American countries are very much in opposition to our program in Nicaragua, in Guatemala, in Haiti, and in San Domingo. I want to read here what President Wilson said in regard to a similar situation. Speaking with reference to the unsettled conditions in Mexico, the revolutions in Mexico, the peonage in Mexico, the disturbed condition of affairs in their kind of a government, he said:

> It is none of my business and it is none of your business how long they take in determining their form of government. It is none of my business and it is none of yours how they go about the business. The country is theirs. The government is theirs. The liberty, if they can get it—God speed them in getting it—is theirs, and, so far as my influence goes, when I am President nobody shall interfere with them.

There are only two courses open to the United States in regard to those Central American countries. One is to remain aloof from their territory, avoid invading their territory, and do whatever we can in the way of counsel and advice, and, as a friendly neighbor, assist them. The other is to openly declare that we believe it to be in the interest of humanity and in the interest of orderly liberty to establish for them civil forms of government and to maintain those governments there; in other words, practically to make them a part of this country. I want to avoid an invasion of their territory and the destruction of their governments. If we can serve them as a neighbor by friendly counsel and advice, or by even going further if asked by them to, do all that we should do; but I do not believe in governing them by military force and against their will.

Now, the Central American people and the South American people believe that we have entered upon the latter course, that we have invaded their country, that we are destroying their government, and that it is our ultimate purpose to make them a part of our territory and our possessions. I think, therefore, the best evidence of our good faith that we are there for a beneficent purpose, a humanitarian purpose, for the purpose of serving those people, is immediately to change our form of occupancy from that of military occupancy to that of civil authority and then get out at the earliest possible date. If we can not stay there under those conditions and serve them through civil authority and civil forms of government, then it is perfectly manifest that we can not train them to self-government even in 100 years or a thousand years.

It seemed to me, in listening to the argument of the able Senator, that the logic of his position was that we would have to stay there.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, Mr. President, I do not see how the Senator can draw any such conclusion.

Mr. BORAH. I will tell the Senator why. I am not challenging the Senator's good intentions when he said he does not desire to stay there, but let me call the Senator's attention to this fact: We are now putting upon Santo Domingo a debt of some $10,000,000 or $15,000,000. We are putting upon Haiti a debt of $25,000,000 to $30,000,000. Does anybody suppose we will ever get out of there until that debt is paid? When will it ever be paid? Under the present expensive occupancy of Santo Domingo and Haiti, when will these debts ever be wiped out? They will not be wiped out in 30 years, in 50 years, not until after we have lost the habit of coming out and until we shall have forgotten the promise to leave.

Secondly, it is now a well-established fact that Americans are making investments in those islands and when we add the fact that we are creating large obligations and have treaty terms which enable us to stay there until those debts are paid; and when we take into consideration that in the meantime American investments will go in there by the millions of dollars, I undertake to say that the policy which we are now pursuing, regardless of what the intent and motive of those who are promulgating it will be, will inevitably lead to permanent occupancy of those islands.

The influence which took us in there will not be nearly so strong as the influence will be which will hold us there. The debt, instead of decreasing, will increase from year to year. The investment, instead of decreasing, will increase from year to year. The only thing which will be left to the Haitian people will be a mere shell of a form of government, and we will be there permanently and there to stay. All the more reason, therefore, Mr. President, why we should without hesitation declare our policy and formulate for those people a civil form of government.

But that is not all. The Senator from Ohio says we should stay there until we shall train them to self-government. How long will that be? They have been in existence for 100 years. As a republic or as a government, whether we call it a despotism or a republic, they have been governing themselves during this century. At the time that Touissant L'Ouverture led the great struggle for the independence of the Haitian people they were in a much more deplorable condition, so far as education and capacity for self-government were concerned, certainly, than they are now. If we are going to stay there until revolutions cease, until disturbances cease, until turmoil is at an end, we will be there indefinitely. Does the Senator from Ohio doubt that in 20 years from now, if we should come out, there would be a revolution the next day? If we stay there for 25 or 30 years under the present form of government, the first thing that would happen after we came out would be revolution. Scarcely anything else would be possible. It might be possible, if we would give them a civil form of government and undertake to deal with them in a beneficent way, training them to self-government, that in time we could educate them up to the standard which the Senator from Ohio thinks would be sufficient to enable them to rule themselves. I think they are capable now, and so do they.

I call attention, Mr. President, to some matters in regard to the debt because I think the most unmistakable evidence of the fact that we are going to stay there is the manner in which we are imposing a debt upon those people. We certainly will not come out until the debt is paid. I call attention to an analysis of the loan which we are going to make to Haiti of $14,000,000 or $16,000,000. We will take it on the basis of $14,000,000. This has been analyzed by a gentleman and reexamined by myself. We have studied the record and studied the prospectuses of the bankers of New York, and we have arrived at certain conclusions. I do not think they are mistaken conclusions.

At the present moment, February 1, 1922, a loan to Haiti is being competed for by three Wall Street banking institutions—the National City Bank, Lee Higginson Co., and Speyer & Co.

The Haitian people do not want this loan. The newspapers have protested emphatically against it. They do not need this loan. They realize that the consummation of this loan is likely to constitute a deathblow to all their aspirations for freedom; that it will copper rivet the hold which the United States has on their country. The loan now only needs the assent of President Dartiguenave, who is the mere rubber stamp and puppet of the occupation and in no sense represents the Haitian people. In this loan, really, the United States is negotiating with itself.

The National City Bank, so far as can be gathered, proposes a loan of a face value of $14,000,000, at 7½ per cent, issued at 92, and payable in 10 years—1932.

Of the $14,000,000 face value, therefore, Haiti will actually receive but $12,880,000. Now, this loan is urged and specifically recommended by Senator McCORMICK as essential to progress in Haiti; that it is needed to put through public works, road building, etc. But from this sum the following may be immediately subtracted:

1. The debt to France of $6,668,980. This debt consists of two parts—the debt of 1895 at 6 per cent and the debt of 1910 at 5 per cent. At the present writing France has made no demand for the repayment of the capital of this debt. The interest on it was paid regularly by the Haitians until the American occupation, and, although the occupation did not at first pay the interest, it has subsequently paid the interest up to date. But the claim of Haiti's financial adviser, Mr. John McIlhenny, and the bankers is that now would be a good time to pay this debt. The fact is, however, that it is first of all obvious that French exchange will be depreciated for many years; second, that under the terms of this new loan issued at 92 and bearing interest at 1½ per cent and 2½ per cent more, respectively, than the two French loans the Haitians are obliged to pay by this agreement $9.50 per hundred more on the first loan and $10.50 per hundred more on the second loan than they would otherwise have to pay.

2. Another charge subtracted from the actual sum of $12,880,000 which Haiti would receive is the claim against the Haitian Government of the National City Bank controlled railway. The railway was begun in 1910 by a contractor named MacDonald. The president at that time and now receiver of the road is Roger L. Farnam, of the National City Bank. Under the original arrangement with the Haitian Government the latter was to pay for the completed railroad a charge of 6 per cent on a valuation of $32,000 per completed kilometer. For a number of reasons, including the fact claimed by the Haitian Government that the road did not follow the difficult mountainous route through the interior provided for and on the basis of which so high a rate of construction was charged, and for other reasons, the Haitian Government declined to pay. Matters dragged along until after the American occupation the Haitian Government and the Haitian Railway agreed to put the matter into the hands of Mr. Addison Ruan as arbitrator. Mr. Ruan was then the financial adviser of Haiti, but he was asked to serve as arbitrator, not in his official capacity but as an individual. Some months after his appointment as arbitrator he went to Panama. The papers in the case he kept with him for 18 months, repeated requests for a decision being fruitless. At the end of that time the papers were returned without any decision. Now, without any decision having been officially rendered, it is suddenly declared that the sum of $1,621,500 must go to the railway partly owned and controlled by the National City Bank.

3. There is further to be subtracted $965,000 of interest on the internal debt. What is the internal debt? For years in Haiti the Government issued bonds which are the sole local and the favorite method of investment by Haitians. There are no savings banks in Haiti and the Haitian bond occupies something of the position of the French rente. Haiti had always scrupulously paid this debt. It was defaulted for the first time under the American occupation and the interest on it has not been paid since 1916. Now, it is alleged that this new loan will be a great relief to the suffering Haitians who have for six years not received the interest on their investment. But the fact is that virtually no Haitians hold these bonds to-day. Little by little under the terrific pressure of poverty while the country was held in the military grip of the occupation the Haitians were forced to sell these bonds at lower and lower prices. Almost without exception they were purchased by the National City Bank. (Very recently a considerable lot of these bonds bearing 7 per cent interest was sold at 47 to the bank.) Under the new loan the holder of these bonds will receive, in addition to a 7 per cent bond, the accumulated interest since 1916. For example, a thousand-dollar bond sold at $470 will be worth, the minute the loan is provided, $1,000 plus six times $70 or $1,420.

4. There is, also, a great variety of claims against the Government of one kind or another, including a note to the National City Bank, amounting altogether to $2,059,720.

To recapitulate (loan of $14,000,000):

Total sum received by Haiti		$12,880,000
French debt	$6,668,980
Haitian railways	1,621,500
Internal debt	965,000
National City Bank note, etc	2,059,720
Total		11,315,200
Net amount which Haiti will receive		1,564,800

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, would it interrupt the Senator if I were to state what the three loans netted to the Government of Haiti just before the occupation by our Government? As the committee were informed, the Haitian Government had made during three years preceding our occupation internal loans at the rate of 59, 56, and 47, to a gold value of $2,868,131. I simply call attention specially to the amount that they realized on those loans.

Mr. BORAH. Very well; but the point which I am seeking to make is that all these things disclose that the idea of our getting out of Haiti is a dream under this policy. The program which we are pursuing will keep us there indefinitely. In other words, if we are going to stay there until revolutions cease, until the Haitian people are capable of self-government as their exploiters understand it, and until their debts are paid, if we are going to administer the affairs of the Government, I think the Senator from Ohio will agree that we are there for an indefinite length of time.

Now, that being true, the very least that we could possibly do for those people is, first, to change their constitution so as to enforce the principle, as it has existed for 100 years, that foreigners shall not make investments in Haiti, and to compel those who have been purchasing lands to return them to their owners or to the Government of Haiti, to be distributed as it may see fit to the people who shall occupy them and purchase them. Secondly, to change our military form of government and give them a civil form of government. That is the very least we can do for those people. I believe it may be possible in time to come out, if that be done, but certainly under the present program it means a permanent stay.

The Senator said a while ago that politicians in Haiti and politicians in the United States were stirring up the situation. I am interested in it, politician or otherwise, for the reason that in my judgment all these things indicate a policy toward those people and toward Central American countries which we have not the courage to openly announce.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, if the Senator means to suggest that I am in favor of any policy other than what I have indicated here I have to say that he is mistaken. I want to get out of the island. I would favor getting out to-morrow if I thought we could do so with safety to those people.

Mr. BORAH. I am speaking of our policy as a Government.

Mr. POMERENE. I think that the Senator is even unjust to the Government. It is true there have been people from time to time who have made suggestions which might be construed along the line indicated by the Senator from Idaho, but just as often as those statements have been made they have, one way or another, been disaffirmed. Our foreign policies are made by our Presidents and by our State Department, and I do not think the Senator from Idaho will find anything in the policy of a Democratic administration or of a Republican administration that is susceptible of the construction which the Senator has placed upon our action.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, of course, I exonerate the Senator from Ohio from entertaining any such view, because he has said that he does not; but I do say that the logic of the Senator's speech is that we should retain our forces in Haiti indefinitely. I have no hesitancy, however, in saying that the policy which this Government has adopted toward the Central American countries and certain islands is a policy which must ultimately result in our retaining permanent possession of them. It will result in that action on our part just as surely as time goes on. That is why I criticise the policy and have been opposing it for 10 years. I have seen this policy grow. I saw it begin with Nicaragua, spread to Guatemala, to Haiti, to Santo Domingo. This thing is not accident. It is a policy.

Not only that, Mr. President, but there are a great many people who are closely connected with the Government who do not hesitate to say that, in their opinion—not officially speaking—that it is the only thing we can ultimately do.

Mr. STERLING. Will the Senator yield for a moment?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. I should like to ask the Senator if since American occupation of the island the Haitian public debt has not been greatly reduced?

Mr. BORAH. No; I do not understand that it has been reduced at all.

Mr. STERLING. Has the Senator examined the statement of Mr. McIlhenny, the financial officer there?

Mr. BORAH. I have read it.

Mr. STERLING. As I read that statement, the debt on February 28, 1919, was something over $35,000,000, whereas the total debt on February 28, 1922, was but $19,085,331, less sinking fund reserves, so that deducting the sinking fund reserves there is left a net public debt of $18,470,899.83. Taking that statement upon its face, it would show—and the figures seem to be quite undisputed—that there has been a great reduction in the public debt.

Mr. BORAH. I know there has been a shifting of the evidences of debt. That is very easily done.

Mr. STERLING. Has not the reduction of the public debt come from the collection of customs by the American authorities and the application of those customs to the payment of the foreign debt?

Mr. BORAH. In my opinion, the debt will be much larger at the end of the 1st day of January, 1923, than it was when we went into Haiti.

Mr. President, General Russell, the administrator in the island, is now insisting on a loan of $30,000,000——

Mr. McCORMICK. No, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from Illinois?

Mr. BORAH. General Russell does not insist that such a loan shall be made at once, but that is to be the ultimate amount. I yield to the Senator from Illinois.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, unless the Senator from Idaho has some very recent information, I desire to say that there has been no change to date in the terms proposed for the loan prior to the appointment of General Russell as high commissioner. As I stated earlier in the debate, the last protocol for the loan, now several months old, authorized an issue of $40,000,000, but contemplated an issue of only $16,000,000, the authorization being made so that if the additional bonds were issued at any later time they would be on a parity with those issued in the first instance.

Mr. BORAH. The best evidence of what I have said is to be found in a communication made by General Russell on April 5, 1922, covering the entire subject matter, and I ask to have it printed as a part of my speech at the close of my remarks. I think all the facts I have stated will be borne out by that statement.

Mr. McCORMICK. The statement to which the Senator from Idaho refers, of course, has been read to the committee and is in the hearings of the committee.

Mr. BORAH. I am not trying to educate the committee. I am merely trying to put in the RECORD substantiation of what I have said, and I think I ought to do that.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. McNARY in the chair). Without objection, the communication referred to will be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, we have not discussed Santo Domingo to-day, and it is now too late to enter upon such a discussion; but I wish to say just a word in regard to Santo Domingo, and especially with regard to the loan which we propose to make for Santo Domingo. As I understand, we earlier made a loan of $2,500,000. That was turned over to the banks at 96½, and the banks were paid $75,000 extra for negotiating the loan. The loan draws interest, if I remember correctly, at 6½ per cent.

I have before me the prospectus as issued by Lee, Higginson & Co.; Brown Bros. & Co., who were very active in Nicaragua and, doubtless, their experience there increased their appetite for something more of the same kind; Dillon, Read & Co.; and Alex. Brown & Sons. The prospectus reads:

NEW ISSUE.

Acting under authority of the United States Government, the military government of Santo Domingo issues on behalf of the Dominican Republic $6,700,000—

Tell me under what authority the military government of Santo Domingo can issue a loan binding the people of Santo Domingo? We have no treaty with Santo Domingo authorizing us to do anything of the kind. It is an act of arbitrary and brutal authority upon the part of the military occupancy of Santo Domingo.

Twenty-year customs administration 5½ per cent sinking fund gold bonds, repayable at maturity at 101 and interest. Dated March 1, 1922. Due March 1, 1942. The issue of these bonds has received the approval of the United States Government required by the terms of the American-Dominican convention of 1907.

There is no Dominican convention of 1907 which authorizes any such thing. There is a Dominican convention, but it does not authorize any such action as this upon the part of this Government.

Interest March 1 and September 1. Coupon bonds in denominations of $1,000 and $500. Registerable as to principal only.

Security: The military government of Santo Domingo—

Mark you, Mr. President, "the military government of Santo Domingo"— guarantees the acceptance and validation of this bond issue by any Government of the Dominican Republic as a legal, binding, and irrevocable obligation of the Dominican Republic, and further agrees that during the life of this loan customs duties will be collected by an official appointed by the President of the United States and that the loan now authorized shall have a direct lien on these customs revenues. For the past 14½ years the annual average customs revenues have amounted to over twice present interest and fixed sinking fund charges.

These bonds will become a first charge upon customs revenues (subject only to the expenses of their collection) after the retirement, not later than 1929, of the loans of 1908 and 1918, of which there were outstanding January 1, 1922, $7,534,000 and $1,627,000, respectively, now a prior charge upon customs revenues.

Special provisions: The military government of Santo Domingo engages that during the term of this loan no future bonds of the Republic will be issued, secured by customs revenues, other than the total authorized amount of bonds of this issue (namely, $6,700,000 and an additional amount, not exceeding $3,300,000, which may subsequently be issued after previous agreement between the Government of the Republic and the Government of the United States).

* * * * * * *

We recommend these bonds for investment. Price, 94½ and interest, yielding about 6 per cent.

LEE, HIGGINSON & CO.
BROWN BROS. & CO.
DILLON, READ & CO.
ALEX. BROWN & SONS.

Those bonds are practically guaranteed bonds of the United States. They are sold to customers upon the theory that the military government of Santo Domingo guaranteed them, to wit, guarantees that they will become the legal obligations of any Dominican government and that the customs receipts and revenues will be maintained and kept up for the purpose of paying them. I do not see why it was necessary to sell a bond like that at 94½. That ought to be a perfectly good bond, because, if not the technical legal obligation, the moral obligation of the United States is behind the payment of those bonds.

So, Mr. President, I say that our program if unchanged in these islands means a permanent stay. We have either got to change that program or we must follow it out to its logical conclusion and remain there as permanent occupants, or, if not permanently, then for a time indefinite, a time the end of which we can not now foresee. If that be true, Mr. President, in the name of modern civilization, let us give them a civil form of government. Let us take away the military authority and the military dominancy, which strikes down any citizen of those islands who undertakes to criticize the acts of the officers, and give them a civil form of government under which they may enjoy the rights of citizens in a free country and develop the spirit and the character of self-reliant, independent citizens, who may at some time be capable of governing themselves. And then let us make haste to get out and restore them their rights, their property, their independence.

Mr. STERLING. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to interrupt him?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Idaho yield to the Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. BORAH. I yield.

Mr. STERLING. The Senator refers to our giving them a civil form of government. How will we go about doing that; how will we impose a form of civil government upon the Santo Dominicans?

Mr. BORAH. I think we can establish such a form.

Mr. STERLING. I do not know whether we can or not. We hold the Philippines under altogether different conditions. Our interest in Santo Domingo or Haiti is not the same. It is not a parallel case at all.

Mr. BORAH. In other words, Mr. President, if it be deemed impossible to establish for those people and maintain a civil form of government, either through cooperation with them or through counsel in advance, we come to the only alternative—that of ruling them indefinitely under a military form of government. Does any Senator suppose that they will ever be any more fit for self-government than they are to-day if we stay there under a military form of government even for 50 or 100 years?

Mr. STERLING. We are there for the preservation of order and for the maintenance of peace at the present time, and they will never establish an orderly government unless peace is maintained.

APPENDIX.

Secrétairerie d'Etat des Relations Extérieures—Documents Diplomatiques.

Selon la demande de l'Ambassadeur des Etats-Unis d'Amérique, en cette résidence, le Secrétaire d'Etat des Relations Extérieures lui retourne inclus la lettre du 4 Avril 1922 adressée à Son Excellence le Président de la République au sujet de la question d'Emprunt.

La dite lettre est remplacée par celle plus explicative du 15 Avril adressée au Secrétaire d'Etat des Relations Extérieures.

PORT AU PRINCE, le 15 Avril 1922.

LEGATION OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA,
No. 1. Port au Prince, Haiti, April 15, 1922.

Mr. MINISTER: I have the honor to refer to the memorandum of your excellency, dated December 30, 1921, and to your excellency's note of January 31, 1922. My Government has noted your excellency's statement that the Haitian Government believes that in point of law the protocol of October 3, 1919, has lapsed, but that the difficulty regarding the time limit mentioned in the protocol may be overcome by a clause inserted in the loan law, and your excellency's further suggestion, in paragraph 9 of your memorandum of December 30, 1921, that provisions should be inserted in the loan law regarding the conversion of the bonds of the two remaining French loans.

I am instructed to say that my Government, while still regarding the protocol as being valid, and in full force and effect, is nevertheless willing that the difficulties which have arisen should be overcome by a supplementary understanding between the two Governments. It feels, however, that the loan law should only embody the provisions necessary to confirm the authority of the Haitian executive power to contract the loan; and that the other questions affecting the validity of the protocol, the method of issuing the proposed loan, and the disposition of the proceeds thereof, should be settled by an exchange of notes between the two Governments.

To put into effect, therefore, the proposal of my Government that these matters be dealt with by an exchange of notes, I am instructed to inform the Government of your excellency in this manner that inasmuch as under the provisions of the protocol of October 3, 1919, between the United States and Haiti, and to carry out the purposes for which the protocol was made, the Republic of Haiti agreed to issue not later than two years after the date of the signature of the protocol a national loan of $40,000,000 gold, payable in 30 years, and inasmuch as the Republic of Haiti has not as yet issued any part of said loan, although said period of two years has expired, the Government of the United States will agree to an extension of the period provided in the protocol for the flotation of the loan, provided that the agreement assumed in the protocol shall be carried out within a reasonable time.

I am further instructed to state that the Government of the United States will consider that the provisions of the protocol are fulfilled if the bonds of the loan shall be issued in series, the amount of each series, the terms on which it is to be sold, the rate of interest, the terms of the sinking fund applicable thereto, and the provisions as to when and how said bonds shall be redeemed all to be fixed by the Haitian Government in accord with the financial adviser.

I am further instructed to state that it is the understanding of the Government of the United States that the proceeds of said bonds, as well as the bonds themselves, may be used for payment of obligations mentioned in articles 3 and 7 in said protocol, and that the reservation of bonds for the two-year period for conversion, referred to in said article 7, is applicable only to such of the bonds as are allocated to the purpose of conversion and does not preclude the immediate use of bonds or the proceeds of bonds not so allocated for other purposes referred to in said protocol.

Finally, I am instructed to say that my Government considers that the internal funded debt of Haiti, as represented in the bond issues of 1912, 1913, and 1914, A, B, and C, do not come within the provisions of the protocol as "pecuniary claims," but are liquidated debts, and that it would, therefore, be proper for the Haitian Government to redeem these bond issues or to maintain their service without submission to the claims commission.

As soon as the Government of your excellency will indicate to my Government that it is prepared to proceed with the obligations assumed by it under the protocol, and especially to fulfill its obligations as to a bond issue, in pursuance of the waiver by my Government contained in this note of the time limit mentioned in the protocol, which expired on October 3, 1921, for the issuance of the stipulated bonds by the Haitian Government, my Government would be gratified to receive a reply to my note stating that the Government of Haiti has noted that the Government of the United States, provided the loan is issued within a reasonable time, waives the stipulation of the protocol establishing a period of two years within which the Republic of Haiti should have performed the agreement made in article 6 of the protocol of October 3, 1919, to issue the national loan of $40,000,000; that the Government of Haiti takes this occasion to confirm its agreement to issue a loan of that amount, and to state that it is in accord with the suggestions of the Government of the United States made in the note under reply, namely, that the bonds of the loan shall be issued in series, the amount of each series, the terms on which it is to be sold, the rate of interest, the terms of the sinking fund applicable thereto, and the provisions as to when and how said bonds shall be redeemed all to be fixed by the Haitian Government, in accord with the financial adviser, and that the Government of Haiti further states that the understanding of the Government of the United States as to the use of the bonds or the proceeds thereof is also in accordance with the understanding of the Government of Haiti.

I am instructed further to state that it would appear that the secretary of state for finance of Haiti should now nominate a member of the claims commission, to be followed by nominations of two other members of the commission, one each by the Secretary of State of the United States and the financial adviser of Haiti, and the three members so nominated to be appointed by the Government of Haiti, as agreed upon in the protocol. In this relation my Government desires to be informed as to the applicable laws of Haiti upon the question of whether it is necessary for the Haitian legislature to enact legislation providing for the constitution of the commission, the payment of salaries to its members, and other pertinent matters, or whether such matters could be dealt with by the executive alone.

With regard to the outline of your excellency's memorandum of December 30, 1921, of the suggested law authorizing the loan, I am instructed by my Government to state that it is unable to agree to this outline, in so far as it departs from the provisions already agreed upon between the two Governments, as embodied in the protocol. My Government considers that, by virtue of the last sentence of Article X of the protocol, the Republic of Haiti has obligated itself to enact a law strictly following the provisions of the protocol. I am instructed to say, however, that my Government avails itself with much pleasure of the suggestion contained in your excellency's note of January 31, 1922, to make known the provisions that it considers it would be proper to carry in the law authorizing the loan. I therefore have the honor to submit the following draft of a loan law to take the place of the outlines of a law suggested in the Haitian memorandum of December 30, last:

"Whereas in order to carry out the purposes of the treaty between the United States and Haiti of September 16, 1915, as extended by the additional act between the United States and Haiti of March 28, 1917, a protocol was concluded between the two Governments on October 3, 1919; and

"Whereas certain modifications in this protocol were agreed to in an exchange of notes between the two Governments; and

"Whereas it is now necessary to authorize the executive power to contract the loan provided for in the protocol as thus modified: Be it enacted as follows:

"1. The provisions of said protocol, modified as above, are adopted as laws of the Republic.

"2. The executive power is hereby authorized to contract a loan to the amount of $40,000,000 payable in or within 30 years from the dates of issue.

"3. Said loan may be issued in series, on such terms, in such amounts, at such rates of interest, and with such provisions for sinking funds and for redemption of bonds as may be agreed upon by the minister of finance (or such other officer as should properly be named), in accord with the financial adviser.

"4. Until such loan is paid in full the payment of interest thereon and the amortization thereof shall constitute a first charge on all the internal revenue of the Republic, and a second charge on the customs revenue of the Republic next in order until the expiration of the treaty of September 16, 1915, after payment of salaries, allowances, and expenses of the general receiver and the financial adviser and their assistants appointed in accordance with said treaty.

5. The control of the collection and allocation of such hypothecated revenue, after the expiration of said treaty and until said loan is paid in full, shall continue to be vested in an officer or officers appointed by the President of Haiti on nomination by the President of the United States, as provided in the protocol above referred to.

With regard to the suggestion contained in your excellency's note of January 31, 1922, which I had the honor to transmit by telegraph to my Government, to the effect that in its note of December 30 last, the Haitian Government demonstrated that without new taxes the loan offers submitted by Messrs. Lee, Higginson & Co., if accepted, would cause the Haitian Government to be confronted by an annual deficit of $1,000,000, I am instructed by my Government to state that it continues, as at all times in the past, willing to assist the Haitian Government in the matter of drafting laws imposing new taxes and in the matter of improving the collection of taxes under existing laws. In this connection, I am instructed to suggest to your excellency the desirability of the immediate consideration and early enactment by it of the internal revenue law drafted with the assistance of American experts and submitted to your excellency's Government considerably over three years ago after full discussion between officials of the two Governments.

With reference to the request made by your excellency in your note above mentioned of January 31, 1922, that this Government lend its good offices to the Haitian Government to obtain certain improvements in the conditions of the loan, I am instructed by my Government to inform your excellency that as soon as its requests, repeatedly made in the course of the present negotiations, to transmit to the financial adviser of Haiti, temporarily in Washington, the necessary full powers from the Haitian Government has been complied with, the department will be very glad, as heretofore, to continue to give its assistance and counsel to the financial adviser in the formal negotiations he would then be enabled to undertake in behalf of your excellency's Government, and your excellency may rest assured that the financial adviser, with the full cooperation of the Department of State, will endeavor to obtain whatever improvements in terms may be possible from the bankers for whose proposals was expressed by the Haitian Government in its memorandum of December 30 last.

Be pleased to accept, Mr. Minister, the assurance of my high consideration.

JOHN H. RUSSELL,
American High Commissioner.

His Excellency Mr. J. BARAU, Minister of Foreign Affairs, Port au Prince.

Mr. McCORMICK. Mr. President, the report of the committee dealing with the occupation of Haiti has been prepared for some time, awaiting the leisure of one of the members of the committee until he might read it and join the other members in signing it. An examination of that report when it is published will disclose the achievement and the failure of the American intervention as far as the committee was able to determine each.

I do not join my friend from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] in the view that a policy which holds good for the Antilles necessarily holds good for Central America, or that a policy which holds good for Cuba has no application in Haiti. We intervened in Cuba because, in the judgment of the people and the Government of the United States, there was in the island a condition to us intolerable in a country so close to our shores. We intervened in Cuba, not once but twice, by force of arms. To-day we are intervening in Cuba as effectively, as unqualifiedly, as if the representative of the United States in Habana were supported by a brigade of Infantry. The Cuban cabinet has resigned, the Cuban budget has been revised, the Cuban civil service is being reorganized, at the instance and under the pressure of the representative of the Government of the United States, because legally we have certain rights to intervene under the Platt amendment, and because since the time of our intervention in Cuba it has been the policy of the Government of the United States to assure the solvency and stability of republican governments in the Antilles.

We intervened in another sense in the Virgin Islands. We purchased them outright. Our intervention in the Dominican Republic is an old story. Let it be noted that precisely as, after the administration of Governor Magoon—and it was, in effect, a military administration—we withdrew, so to-day the representatives of the Dominican people are in Washington negotiating for the withdrawal of the American forces after the validation by the Dominican Congress of the acts of the intervening Government.

I think that any examination of the Dominican debt will disclose that whatever may have been borrowed by the military government, the net debt of the Dominican Republic is some five millions less to-day than it was at the beginning of the intervention, and this despite the expenditure of very nearly ten millions on public works, the multiplication of school buildings, and the enrollment of five times as many school children as were enrolled before the intervention.

Even those who oppose the refunding of the Haitian debt concede, I assume, the measure in which it has been reduced under the occupation. What some of them, at least, have not seen is the true history of Haiti, which during its existence as an independent State has made no political progress, and which, relatively to its neighbors, has suffered an economic degeneration.

During the course of the debate allusion has been made to the fact that not more than 2 per cent of the population are literate. What I think the debate has not brought out is the true character of Haitian society, of the Haitian people, living in a country from which very nearly all vestiges of public improvements, roads, irrigation works, towns, and villages have disappeared, a country in which during the old days the traveler could hardly find a trail passable for pack animals. If in the capital he met men and women of charm and culture, in the interior he might meet others outside of their little huts very nearly as naked as the inhabitants of tropical Africa.

At the time of the overthrow of the French Government in 1804 there were no Haitians trained in public administration. In organizing and maintaining a government the Haitian people were confronted with an impossible task; and, as a result, through the years revolution succeeded revolution, public works decayed, the roads vanished, and agriculture disappeared. Finally, during the decade before American intervention, eight Presidents held office, although each was chosen for a term of seven years.

I think no candid student of the record, whatever his bias might be, would qualify the statement that pressure was exercised by American officers in the election of a President and in the ratification of the treaty precisely as pressure was exercised in Cuba to compel the acceptance of the Platt amendment; but it is true that since the ratification of the treaty with Haiti three-quarters or more of the country and four-fifths of the population has known peace for six years and more. The outbreak between Maissade and Hinche touched the life of not more than a fifth of the people—covered an area of not more than a quarter of the country.

Mr. KING. Will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. MCNARY in the chair). Does the Senator from Illinois yield to the Senator from Utah?

Mr. MCCORMICK. Certainly.

Mr. KING. I was interested in the statement just made by the Senator about the six years and a half of peace. I think the record will support the statement that more Haitians were killed in 1919 than there were under Haitian rule for the preceding 10 or 15 years. It has been stated in the record, and a number of persons have indicated, that the number of Haitians killed since the occupation was between 2,250 and 3,500. In 1919 the record seems to indicate that there were perhaps between 1,500 and 2,000 killed; so that if we have brought peace we have also brought war and the sword and the killing of a large number of Haitians.

Mr. MCCORMICK. Mr. President, I do not believe that anyone who has attempted to analyze the statistics of mortality, either prior to the intervention or afterwards, would venture to institute a comparison of the number killed after the intervention with those killed before the intervention. There are no reliable statistics for the period before the intervention certainly, and for the period afterwards I believe the Senator will come to the conclusion that it is difficult to say whether 1,500 or 3,000 were killed. I say that in three-fourths of the country during that period, and among four-fifths of the population, there was unbroken peace; that the cities which once were foul are now clean; that the jails and the hospitals which were once vile are now sanitary and well regulated; that a civil peace force has been organized, increasingly officered by native Haitians; that the revenues have been effectively collected at the customhouses; that arrears of amortization and of interest have been paid; that the debt held in France has been reduced by a third. Wherein we have failed is that until a short time ago we did not centralize the responsibility of the United States under the treaty, and so make ready early, as the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has pointed out, to establish a civil administration.

This report to which I have referred, and which has awaited the signature of one of the members of the committee, holds that it is not in consonance with our avowed purpose to maintain the provost courts to try Haitians under military law, even for the two offenses for which they are tried in the provost courts—attacking the armed forces in the country or inciting to insurrection through the press.

You can not undo in a day that which has been doing for years. The first step toward the establishment of that civil government for which the Senator from Idaho speaks was taken when our responsibility was vested in a single officer of the United States in Haiti. The withdrawal of the armed forces can not be immediate. The reduction, which must be gradual, has been begun. Concentration of those forces in one or two principal centers must precede the entire abrogation of the authority of the provost courts.

The administration of justice must be reformed. A state of affairs which has continued for half a dozen years can not be stopped in six months. That would be revolution in itself. Gradually, progressively, the military authority in Haiti can be limited and the number of marines reduced until at the end of 18 months or two years civil authority will be supreme, and the Haitian Government, with the assistance of half a dozen American officers, may make a fair adventure toward the independent maintenance of peace and order, unaided by the armed forces of the United States.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I believe that the question involved in this amendment presents a good many difficulties. As to what we ought to do I concede is a question of a great deal of doubt. I do not think the policy we have pursued has been fair or open-handed. While I think of it, some time ago a delegation of distinguished gentlemen delivered an address to the Secretary of State on this question, couched in very dignified and polite language, based entirely, as they claim in the address, upon official information and testimony; and I confess that at the time it was presented I was shocked at the way this delegation was treated by the Secretary of State, and by the abrupt manner in which he brushed them aside and gave practically no consideration to their arguments.

Whether they were wrong or whether they were right, I can not see how anyone can read this address without being impressed with its fairness, from the point of view of those presenting it, and the courteous way in which it was presented, and I now ask unanimous consent to print in the RECORD, as an appendix to my remarks, this address delivered to the Secretary of State on the 27th day of April, 1922, together with the names of the persons comprising the delegation at the time it was presented.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See Appendix A.)

Mr. NORRIS. I desire also to have printed as an appendix to my remarks, without reading, an article entitled "The Significance of the American Occupation of Haiti," by Judson King, executive secretary of the National Popular Government League.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

(See Appendix B.)

Mr. NORRIS. There is one aspect of this question which it seems to me has not received the consideration it ought to receive at the hands of the committee, of the Congress, or of any of the representatives of the American people. It is not alone what we are doing in Haiti or Santo Domingo or Nicaragua, but I think we ought to take a broad enough view of the field to comprehend what effect our action in these various countries will have upon the world at large. There is no doubt now but that the South American countries look upon the Government of the United States in a way which is not at all creditable to us. We are looked upon as land grabbers, and I think often without reason wrongfully judged to have aspirations and intentions which we do not possess. But the way we have been handling these things gives a very good foundation for people to hold that kind of a view.

It is not only damaging to us to appear in that light in the eyes of other Governments and foreign representatives, but it is really injurious to the progress of civilization itself. We are thought to be prejudiced, to be moved by an idea of conquest in Central American countries and in Haiti and Santo Domingo. We put our Army into Nicaragua, for instance, changed their Government officials entirely by the force of arms, established a Government contrary to the wishes of the people of that country, and then proceeded to make an agreement with ourselves by which we could say that we had the consent of that Government to continue in our occupation of the country. It seems to me we have done practically the same thing in Haiti.

If we admit, for the sake of the argument, that somebody ought to go into Haiti and that something ought to be done there, we should at least be fair with the world and make a statement of our intentions before we do anything. We should not take a step until the law-making power of the country—Congress—has, after due deliberation and consideration, passed upon the policy and authorized the Executive to carry it out.

These invasions of foreign territory have taken place without the question ever having been submitted to the American people; have taken place without the matter ever having been decided by the Congress of the United States; have taken place simply because the executive authority desired to have it done. Both political parties have been guilty of the same course, so it is not a partisan question under any circumstances. It should not be, of course, under any conditions.

This policy has brought the Government of the United States into disrepute with many of the nations of the world, and they look with suspicion upon our intentions. Why have we practiced a procedure in Haiti which would be a disgrace for Tammany or any other political organization to pursue in a county, municipal, or township election? The evidence stands undisputed that our Secretary of the Navy sent a telegram outlining a policy to be pursued in Haiti which, reduced to the real meaning, says in effect, "You must fool the people of Haiti. You must get their consent by trickery. But we are going to carry out the policy without regard to whether you are successful or not. Let them understand that this is the policy of the Government of the United States. Coerce them into submission, get them to change their constitution, get them to enter into a treaty which shall give us the authority to maintain without limit the right to rule them."

I do not believe such conduct ought to be approved or that it can be justified under any conditions. We owe it to the world, we owe it to the American people, we owe it to the Haitian people, whose Government we are taking over without their consent, to be absolutely frank and state our intentions without any possible misunderstanding. We have not done it at any step.

We say, of course, that we are only there temporarily, and yet we are doing things in the way of issuing bonds and getting up schemes of taxation which leave those people practically under the subjection of the Government of the United States without limit. Purchasers are induced to buy bonds on the theory that the Government of the United States is going to control the Government there at least during the life of the bonds which are offered for sale.

When the Secretary of the Navy, in a confidential communication to one of the admirals of the Navy, tells him that he must get the President and the Cabinet together; that he must tell them that we are going to coerce them into changing their constitution and making a treaty, not because they want the change in the constitution, not because they want to enter into that kind of a treaty, but because we have the power and are going to force them to do it; when our Government is guilty, through a Cabinet officer, of such conduct, I presume acting under authority of the President, to my mind there is absolutely no defense to it, even though we admit, for the argument's sake, that the Government of the United States ought to take over the Government of Haiti. Such a proceeding, as I said awhile ago, would be a disgrace even in a low-down local political campaign.

Why did we want them to change their constitution? It had a provision in it that no foreigner would be allowed to own real estate in Haiti. Personally I do not like that provision in their constitution. I would rather their constitution contained no such provision. But it is their constitution, not mine, it is their country, not ours, and if they want to put a provision in their constitution that shall for all time prohibit foreigners from owning their territory, they ought to be protected in that right because it is a sacred right that we have no honorable reason to interfere with or object to.

Why do we object to it? We want our financiers, our millionaires, to own land in Haiti. That is what is going on. We want to have our financiers handle their bonds and sell them to our people. Mr. President, the history of the world shows that when we get the other government indebted to us, when they owe us money and we have sold their bonds and scattered them around among our investors, we are going to insist that they shall be paid, and the American Navy and the American Army are the guaranties that the bonds shall be paid in full. We are laying a foundation for the use of our Navy and our Army. We will be able to force payment, as by the simple threat of force we have been able to compel the Haitian Government to change their fundamental law.

We had to have that constitution changed. I think it is not to the credit of the American Government. It is a disgraceful page in our history when we resort to the method that the record shows we did resort to in order to bring about that change. Do we expect to have a people grow up in honesty, capable of self-government, when, while we are acting as their teachers, we are guilty of that kind of deception? Can we expect to bring out of that an honest government? Can we expect the Haitians to grow up in a patriotic desire to be of service to their country and to be honest in business, in politics, in government, when our own Government, right at the very threshold of our interference, resorts to tricks that no man can defend on the theory of honesty or honor? What kind of precedent are we establishing for those people when we resort to this coercive method, this method in reality of force, to compel them to change their laws without their consent?

Having brought about the change, we take the next step to make our control permanent. We get our financiers interested. We get the almighty dollar involved in it, and then we know that our Army and our Navy must, if worst comes to worst, be the guaranty of the men who have loaned their money.

The record shows that the President appointed Mr. McIlhenny as the financial adviser of the Haitian Government, not because the Haitian Government wanted Mr. McIlhenny appointed financial adviser, not because Mr. McIlhenny was an experienced financial man and knew something about finances, but because he was quite a politician, because he was on the hands of the administration and they did not know what to do with him and they wanted to place him. They shoved him over on to poor, little, defenseless Haiti, who must pay and are still paying his salary of $10,000 a year and all of his expenses in traveling, most of which is spent in this country.

I have no personal grievance against Mr. McIlhenny, but if he had any qualifications for this particular place, I do not know what they were. I have never heard them stated. I do know that Mr. McIlhenny was appointed by President Wilson as president of the Civil Service Commission, and I do know that the Civil Service Commission got into an awful quarrel, and that they were having all kinds of trouble. There were two Democrats and one Republican. Mr. McIlhenny, so it was claimed by the other members of the commission, insisted on making the Civil Service Commission a political attachment of government. The other two members, one Democrat and one Republican, disagreed with him and outvoted him. They had a quarrel. It will be remembered there was a great deal of attention given to it at that time by the country. The thing was blocked. They could not get anywhere with Mr. McIlhenny, who was president of the commission and who did his best to dominate the commission.

Something had to be done. I do not know just why it was. The Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER] suggests to me that it finally got where the President had to discharge all of them. He did not have to do so, but he did. He decided that he would clean the whole house. I always thought that the President was wrong in that view, and I have no hesitancy in saying so. I think the other two commissioners, one Democrat and one Republican, did very heroic service in the defense of the civil service law and that the trouble was with Mr. McIlhenny. But Mr. McIlhenny was close to the throne and the others were not, and while he was discharged from that job, he was given a better job. That is when some of the officers were taking great enjoyment in finding good jobs for worthy Democrats. Mr. McIlhenny was given the position, which he still holds, of financial adviser to Haiti.

As I said, there were no particular qualifications, but I understand the President had this man on his hands and had to do something with him, so he gave him this place. It is too often the case, where we are holding a people in subjection without their consent, that they are made the dumping ground where politicians place those to whom they are politically bound. I have no complaint to make about the general ability of Mr. McIlhenny. He is an aristocrat, very much so, and the last man in the world to send down to Haiti to try to do business with the poor Haitians. It was about as bad as sending Elihu Root over to Russia to try to do business with the Socialists.

Mr. McIlhenny, as I said a while ago, in his place would probably have been a magnificent officer, but he was out of place when he was at the head of the Civil Service Commission. The President after a while had reluctantly to come to that conclusion. He has been out of place in Haiti. I say that in no disrespect to Mr. McIlhenny, because I have not a thing in the world against him. But, as I said, he was an aristocrat, a man who had never felt the pulse beat of the ordinary person who has to toil. When he was president of the Civil Service Commission he would not permit any of the employees of the Civil Service Commission to ride in the elevator at the time he was in it. When the poor employees of the Civil Service Commission were struggling around in crowds about 9 o'clock in order that they might not be late, afraid they would be late if they did not get up to the various floors to their desks, if the president of the commission, Mr. McIlhenny, came in, he was put in the elevator and the doors were closed, and they passed by floor after floor until the wants of the president of that great commission were satisfied. Does anyone think that kind of man is a pretty good fellow to deal with the ignorant Haitians? Is that a qualification that would fit him for the position in which he was finally placed?

But, Mr. President, the great sin of it all is that when we pile these political appointments up on these innocent people we make them pay. They must toil and work and raise the taxes and defray the expenses of our mistakes, and to pay our political debts, to take care of our dirty linen, politically speaking, of course. This is our policy in Haiti. As a citizen of the United States, I feel ashamed of it. When we stand out before the world as one of the leading nations of civilization and take advantage of a poor, weak, ignorant nation of that kind, and perform the little tricks that we have been performing there, we ought to withdraw in shame and humiliation. All these things are being charged up in history against us. All over South America they know about it, and we are gaining every day in the reputation—a reputation that, in my judgment, we have not fully merited, but this course has a tendency to give us that reputation—that we are trying to conquer the balance of this continent, and that we intend in the end to take them all without their consent under our flag and under our jurisdiction. There can be no defense, as I look at it, for that kind of conduct. It is no defense to say these people are barbarous, not fit for self-government, and therefore we must take charge of them. If for the sake of argument we admit that to be true, we at least ought to be fair enough to say to the world in truth what we are going to do instead of practicing deception at every step of the way that properly merits the criticism and the condemnation of civilization everywhere.

APPENDIX A.

ADDRESS TO THE SECRETARY OF STATE OF THE UNITED STATES AGAINST THE AMERICAN OCCUPATION OF HAITI.

[By the National Popular Government League, Washington, D. C.]

MR. SECRETARY: We desire to record our approval of the very able report on "The Seizure of Haiti by the United States" signed by 24 distinguished American attorneys, presented to you by the Foreign Policy Association. The legal argument set forth, which shows that in effect the action of our Government has violated our Constitution and reduced our treaty obligations to "a scrap of paper" is, we believe, unanswerable. In support of this report and recommendations made we desire to call your attention to some facts found chiefly in the hearings of the Senate Select Committee of Investigation, and, as a body of American citizens present our emphatic protest against the abandonment, temporarily let us hope, of our time-honored doctrines of respect for the liberty and sovereignty of other nations. We submit that our seizing of Haiti is a gross violation of international political ethics, and that we have no more moral right to violate the sovereignty of that Republic and to permit our nationals to rob them of their lands and resources, than a private citizen has to rob another man of his possessions because he disapproves of the manner in which that man is spending his money or treats his family.

With this administration rests the decision as to whether a policy of arbitrary interference with the affairs of the Caribbean region, deriving its sanction from superior strength and backed up by force of arms, shall be molded into a precedent and set up as a definite policy governing our future relations with the Caribbean and perhaps all Latin America.

AMERICAN PEOPLE WILL NOT APPROVE.

Whatever may be the failures and shortcomings of the governments of these peoples, we believe that the American people will never subscribe to the doctrine that it is the business of the United States to meddle in their affairs and embroil itself in constant attempts to force upon them our ideas and methods. We have enough of racial troubles at home without seeking to infinitely multiply them by gratuitously assuming the task of regulating the affairs of the 30,000,000 colored and mixed peoples of the Caribbean region and Mexico. Political corruption and incompetency may be, and no doubt are, rife there, but we already have our hands full in choking political corruption and incompetency in these United States.

Furthermore, we do not believe that the people of the United States, now groaning under an enormous burden of taxation, and with our farmers, home builders, and business men severely hampered by lack of proper credit facilities, will, when they understand the situation, approve of the expenditure of millions of dollars upon enterprises of interference and conquest in Latin America.

Senator WILLIAM H. KING informs us he has tried in vain to secure from the Navy Department an estimate of the cost of our occupation. But he and others equally well informed judge that in the past six years not less than $50,000,000 of the money of the American people has been spent upon the seizure of Haiti and Santo Domingo in the prosecution of a purpose described by Admiral Caperton to the natives as "benevolent, unselfish, and helpful," the chief visible results of which are the hatred of the Haitian people for our Government and the enhanced opportunities of American capitalists to loot the resources of the island—of which they are promptly availing themselves under the protection of American guns and diplomacy.

The American people are not imperialists; yet the action of our Government in the Haitian matter is the essence of imperialism, both political and economic, as is clearly proven by the lawyers' report and the facts set forth herewith.

PLAIN FACTS DENY PRETENSIONS.

Official apologists for the seizure of Haiti set up that we have no designs against its sovereignty; that we are intervening for the good of the people, to gently lead them in the ways of peace and righteousness and develop their capacity for self-government. The facts of record brought forth in the Senate committee of investigation give plain denial to these pretentions. They are the same sort of pretentions set up by imperialists in every age. They are the excuses by which King Leopold, of Belgium, sought to cloak his atrocities and plunder of the Congo; by which England explains her rape of Egypt and India; of France in Morocco; of Germany in west Africa; Japan of Korea, and so on, and it is a sad day when the Government of the United States resorts to that kind of hypocrisy.

THE CONCOMITANTS OF MILITARY CONQUEST ARE PRESENT.

Whenever a great nation attempts the subjugation of a weaker people atrocities follow as a matter of course. This is the world's history. It is proving true of America as of other nations. The official record of the hearings of the special committee to investigate the occupation and administration of Haiti and Santo Domingo discloses that there have been committed not only the ordinary crimes of political despotism, such as the control of executive officials, lawmaking bodies and courts, denial of free speech, free press, and free assembly, the seizure of funds and control of customs collections, but, sadly enough, those historic barbarities which in this age are a disgrace to any civilized nation, Christian or otherwise.

These hearings are filled with sworn testimony showing summary execution of natives without trial; robbery and burning of houses of Haitian people; murders of old men, women, and children; administration of the "water cure," which disgraced our early occupation of the Philippines; bodily tortures inflicted by live electric wires and red-hot irons as incidental to wholesale arrests and imprisonment. In Haitian prisons the death rate has doubled during the occupation.

TORTURE OF POLIDOR ST. PIERRE.

We respectfully direct your particular attention, among others, to the case of Polidor St. Pierre, of St. Marc, Haiti, whose sworn statements appear at pages 858, et seq., of the hearings, and show that in the presence of 20 witnesses this man, at the hands of Capt. Fitzgerald Brown, of the American-controlled gendarmerie at St. Marc, was strung up for five days to the rafters of the prison, without water, his teeth broken, and hot water poured into his mouth through a funnel; after this he was burned with a hot iron. He exhibited to the committee the scars of the handcuffs upon his wrists and ankles and of the terrible scars on the rear of his legs and buttocks caused by the application of a hot iron. He was in hospital for months, and a medical description of his injuries is on file with the select committee, together, amazingly enough, with the record that he was found not guilty of theft as charged, and was freed by Captain Brown.

TESTIMONY OF VOLNY PAULTRE, OF ST. MARC.

Another kind of torture is disclosed in the testimony of Mr. Volny Paultre, a merchant of St. Marc, who witnessed in the prison there the torture of three men—Salnave Fabre, Yoyo, and Nicholas—charged with the murder of a watchman on the property of his [Paultre's] mother. They had denied their guilt.

Paultre says (p. 876): "He [Captain Brown] took a telephone box, fastened one of the wires to their teeth and the other he wound around the top, and Duvall gave the current. * * * I saw Duvall turn the crank and apply the current to these three men, one after the other. * * * They admitted they were the authors of the crime charged to them."

Answering Senator JONES'S question as to whether he thought they should have been executed, Paultre replied:

"They should have been tried by a criminal court. That is the custom of Haiti and it is the law."

CASE OF MADAM ONEXILE.

Madam Onexile, of Section La Guajon, Haiti, testified (at pp. 891, et seq.) that:

"Captain Kelly, after stealing a mule from her home, returned and hung her husband to the rafters, robbed and set fire to her home, in which her husband was burned to death, and then imprisoned herself and her brother."

At page 893 Previor Solond testified that the marines invaded his home at Section Juaniria and killed his wife and child. The record of the hearings held on Haitian soil gives many such cases out of the thousands alleged to have occurred.

THE TORTURE OF CAYO BAEZ.

A similar record of cruelty and brutal atrocities distinguishes the American occupation of Santo Domingo. One notorious case, which has attracted the attention not only of the island but of the whole Caribbean and South America, is that of the horrible torture of Cayo Baez, a simple countryman living near the town of Salcedo. A reproduction of a photograph of Baez, taken weeks after his torture, has been furnished us by Hon. Horace G. Knowles, of New York, former American minister to Santo Domingo, and is attached hereto. Mr. Knowles has personally examined the body of Baez, is acquainted with the whole history of his case, and vouches for the authenticity of the photograph and of the facts presented. These facts were briefly set out in connection with this photograph of Baez, published in the magazine Letras of the issue of November 7, 1920, at Santo Domingo. The legend, translated by Mr. Knowles from the Spanish, follows:

"The history of Cayo Baez is brief. Living in the town of Salcedo, he was known for his honesty, modesty, and laboriousness. He enjoyed, because of his hard work, the pleasant life of a countryman, who, as they say there, "owns his cacao plants." American officers and soldiers of the guardia tortured him in various ways in order to make him give them information in regard to the imaginary arsenal of ammunition, which Cayo Baez had never seen, even in dreams. Among the tortures which they applied in order to make him give up this supposed information was the following: In an improvised stove they heated machetes (large knives of the sort that are used as scythes in the country), and when the machetes were red-hot they applied them to the flesh of the unfortunate victim. The photograph was taken of Cayo Baez many weeks after the torture. This is only the history of one of many Dominican country people."

For publishing this statement, the editor and owner of the magazine, Horacio Blanco Fombono, a man of fine education, was imprisoned, fined $300, his magazine suspended, and he himself expelled from the country on orders approved by Thomas Snowden, military governor of Santo Domingo. Fombono later wrote a pamphlet, "In the clutch of the eagle's claws," which recounted his own experience and told the complete story of Cayo Baez. From Mr. Knowles's translation we find that after the torture he was left for dead, but was later found by a native woman, who nursed him back to life; but Baez, filled with terror of further torture if he revealed anything, kept silent.

It appears "this deed was done by a Dominican bandit, Ramon Ulises Escoboza, by order and in the presence of the American, Captain Buckalew." Later we read:

"Escoboza and two other Dominican bandits, Telesforo Cabral and Ramon Antonio Modesto, utilized and aided by three American captains who operated in that region, Buckalew, Knotchel, and Wright, appeared after a space of time before a Dominican court accused of the crimes of collusion, of bribery, and deceit. Cayo Baez was called as a witness in this case, and as he then felt he would have the protection of the judges and justice, and of people of importance, such as he was accustomed to see act with certitude, dared to accuse the accomplices of the American captains, it was because such a procedure would not be dangerous, he gave a true account of that which had happened to him and lifted his shirt and showed the judges and the people the marks of the hot irons on his body. Dr. Juan B. Perez, chief justice of the court, a distinguished lawyer, respected for his high character, rose to his feet indignantly and exclaimed: 'It is an injustice to condemn anyone when the most culpable are beyond my jurisdiction,' and threw on the table the Christ which is used in Dominican courts for taking oath. One of the pieces of the statue broke against the table and flew up into the face of Captain Buckalew, who was present. At that trial the guilt of Captains Buckalew, Wright, and Knotchel was proved. The three Dominicans were convicted, but the jurisdiction of the Dominican courts does not reach the troops of occupation."

BETRAYAL OF EVANGELISTA.

Space does not permit more than mention of the case of one Evangelista, whom the Dominicans regarded as a patriot leader, defending his country, and the occupation terms a bandit, but who, with 50 of his picked men, was lured within the American lines under a flag of truce and fair promises by Captain West. These men were imprisoned, and Evangelista, manacled, paraded through the streets. In prison, after midnight, an American soldier came to Evangelista, professed friendliness, and told him to make his escape. He attempted it and was shot dead after going a few paces. The story in great detail was related by ex-Minister Knowles, as above, to a Washington audience at the Ebbitt Hotel on February 16, 1922.

FORCED LABOR.

The emancipation proclamation of Abraham Lincoln and the thirteenth amendment to the Federal Constitution, it has been supposed, prohibited slavery forever "within the United States, or any place subject to their jurisdiction." Yet this institution, outlawed among civilized nations, was revived by Americans in Haiti in a form worse than obtained in the Southern States before the Civil War. The southern people fed, clothed, and housed their slaves. Haitians were not so fortunate. In many places they were neither fed, nor housed, nor paid, although a few were paid 20 cents a week.

The roads built and reconstructed by the occupation have been pointed out as one result of our civilizing influence. They were largely built by forced labor, and had the men responsible attempted any such thing in the United States they would have been subject to a penitentiary sentence.

The committee hearings are replete with information as to what happened. The testimony of Rev. L. Ton Evans, a Baptist missionary and eye-witness, found at page 164 of the hearings, gives a vivid picture of the inhumanities practiced, and nothing is more damning to the honor of the United States than the extended descriptions by this missionary, who saw his efforts to elevate the moral and spiritual life of the natives brought to nothing by the atrocities of the American marines under orders from their officers. He says:

"There was a captain or lieutenant at every town or village throughout Haiti in official charge of those gendarmes—negro soldiers—armed and chosen by these white marines of the American occupation. Many of these marines and probably most of the gendarmes were fond of drink. The latter, under the official orders of the marines, would catch, arrest, and rope the natives and drive them to prison and from prison to work on the roads, and under such conditions often cruelly dealt with them. * * * I have repeatedly seen ill-treatment both in and outside of St. Marc; I have seen in the gangs at work men—for merely turning the head and without the slightest provocation, as far as I could see—struck until actually stunned. * * * I have seen on week days and on Sunday gendarmes unmercifully striking the poor natives, and I have walked on and interfered at times on my way to church with my family. * * * I saw these men working under the corvée lined up in front of my cell, driven out about 6 in the morning, often with nothing but a little coffee, marched under armed guards to work miles away, and brought back to prison, carefully searched, and compelled to wait from 4 until nearly 6 until being fed; a few times when the captain was said to have gone drinking with keys, if not money, there was not a scrap for any. * * * There has been a sad neglect, even recklessness, in the choice of these gendarmes by marine officers in view of the great authority of power of life and death given them in the various sections of Haiti. * * * "

At page 114 of the hearings Mr. Roger L. Farnham, vice president of the National City Bank, of New York, testifies in answer to Senator POMERENE'S inquiry, "the labor was paid nothing." The legal fiction set up to justify this slavery—for it is nothing else—was an old Haitian law, similar to road regulations in the United States, providing that all men can be required to work upon the roads for three days at a time.

No wonder there was resistance, which in one section led to the Caco revolution, men trying to escape and the testimony showing many were shot. (Hearings, p. 508, testimony of Maj. Thomas Turner.)

Significantly enough these roads were built for military purposes, and not from the viewpoint of the economic and commercial development of Haiti. Mr. Roger L. Farnham, of the National City Bank, complains of this at page 752 of the hearings:

"The most expensive, you might say the spectacular, part of that road is purely a military road, because it leads over the mountains where there are no agricultural developments whatever, and probably never could be."

In the report of the Secretary for the Navy for 1920 it appears (at page 293) that soon after the American occupation of Haiti "military necessity" was the determining cause of the building of these roads.

FORCED ADOPTION OF THE NEW CONSTITUTION.

From the viewpoint of international law nothing is more discreditable to the Government of the United States than the manner in which the new constitution was imposed upon Haiti subsequent to the enforced adoption of the treaty. The method of submission was utterly illegal and the plebiscite a tragic farce. Not only did the new constitution vest dictatorial powers in the executive, enabling him to control elections; not only did it ratify all the acts of the occupation; but it revoked, and this is admittedly the chief reason for its existence, that clause in the old Haitian constitution prohibiting foreigners from owning land in Haiti, the historic reason for which is evident and eminently wise from the Haitian viewpoint.

The old Haitian constitution can be changed legally only by the Haitian Congress. No referendum is provided for. When in the spring of 1917 American officials proposed the draft of the new constitution the Haitian Congress promptly refused to ratify it, but proposed to pass a new constitution of their own "containing provisions inimical to the policies and intentions of the United States in Haiti." The country was in a turmoil of rebellion. On June 18 Gen. Eli K. Cole, chief of the occupation, wired the Secretary of the Navy:

"Unless contrary instructions received, if necessary to prevent proposed constitution, I intend dissolve national assembly through President, if possible, otherwise direct."

In reply the Navy Department gave General Cole "full discretionary power," and the next day the Haitian Parliament was dissolved through the use of military force under General Butler, and the newspapers ordered to omit all comment on the action (see hearings, page 701).

Some months later the occupation forced the dummy President, Dartiguenave, to order a popular vote on a proposed constitution, which Franklin D. Roosevelt, the then Assistant Secretary of the Navy, claimed in a public address to have written.

The election was held on May 8, 1918, and was officially reported adopted by a vote of 98,294 yes to 769 no. To what extent this vote represents the free will of the Haitian people may be gathered from the testimony of Col. Alexander S. Williams, chief of the gendarmerie, which had charge of the election, given at page 566 sq. of the hearings. It is illuminating to note the colonel's statement that Haitian funds were used to "indoctrinate" the natives as to the virtues of the new constitution.

At page 187 Rev. L. Ton Evans gives a vivid picture of the voting. He describes how the polls were—

"watched with an eagle eye and guarded by the (negro police) especially officered by the American generals, colonels, majors, captains, and lieutenants * * * for the sake of perfecting the farce. There were Haitian dummies sitting handing out the slips in the box and a dummy Haiti commissarie sat alongside of the American marine officer.

"The bundle of pink slips (no) significantly showing the fraudulent nature of this whole scandalous business, remained on the other side of the table tied together. The poor native in charge, as well as the so-called voters, knew these packets were meant for mere show, for even if cut loose their terror-stricken Haitian brothers dared not refuse the 'oui' (yes) but asked for the 'non' at the risk of being imprisoned and shot as an enemy of the occupation and foe of the United States Government."

If a constitution was ever illegally proposed and adopted, this is one. The importance of that fact, Mr. President, can not be overestimated, because whatever has been done or is proceeding at the present moment in Haiti under the direction of the occupation officials, such as the election by the Council of State of another dummy president, is being done on the basis of this so-called Roosevelt constitution and can have no standing in law, unless it is admitted that Haitian sovereignty is ended and the United States has assumed de facto government of that nation.

FREE SPEECH.

We submit a copy of the martial law affecting freedom of expression as issued on May 26, 1921.

"While the freedom of the press and of speech are practically unrestricted, articles or speeches that are of an incendiary nature or reflect adversely upon the United States forces in Haiti or tend to stir up agitation against United States officials who are aiding and supporting the constitutional government of Haiti, or speeches or articles attacking the President of Haiti or the Haitian Government are prohibited, and offenders against this order will be brought to trial before a military tribunal."

Hon. Georges Sylvain, former Haitian Minister to France, officer of the Legion of Honor, and officer of public instruction in France, and one of the most distinguished men in Haiti, and M. Henriques, president of the Haitian Federation of Labor, were arrested as provocative agents for participating in a mass meeting on Sunday, April 2, 1922, to protest against the election of a new president of Haiti by the Council of State under direction of the American occupation. The home of M. Jolibis, editor of the Haitian Courier, was invaded and searched for the same reason.

Most astounding is a cablegram received at Washington on April 8, 1922, signed by the League of Young Haitians, to the effect that the American administration had prohibited the priests from officiating at a "misericordia" mass in the cathedral at Port au Prince attended by 5,000 people. This is a special mass asked for by the people and held under the Catholic Church rules only at times of great stress and trial. So it would appear that the occupation uses martial law to prevent the people from publicly praying to God according to their religious customs for deliverance.

DRUNKENNESS AND THE USE OF LIQUOR BY THE MARINES.

Despite the Navy regulations forbidding the use of liquor in the naval and marine service, the hearings are replete with evidence that liquor drinking and drunkenness are rife among the officers and privates of the forces of the occupation. It is especially set forth by Rev. L. Ton Evans, the Baptist missionary above quoted, who indicated his intention to file a mass of documents on this particular point. At page 171 of the hearings he says:

"This drinking habit among marines and gendarmes is well known in Haiti, and so increased as to jeopardize, in fact, the work of the occupation, and became such a menace * * * that Colonel Russell * * * issued a proclamation forbidding the sale of intoxicants to all men in uniform."

"I have repeatedly seen (p. 181) marines and officers drinking and drunk at Port au Prince, Cape, and St. Marc; have heard them boastfully speak of their killing, or, as they termed it 'bagging,' Cacos on shooting expenditions to the north; have seen in prison—day I left—a Haitian carried and laid on his stomach with his back one mass of jelly, attended by a native doctor's assistant and another, who informed me it was done by the United States marine captain in another drunken craze of his. I have heard two marine officers of the United States Government, apparently intoxicated, and in the presence of Christian natives and others, in a mad rage cursing religion, preachers, and missionaries, and damning myself for my efforts in giving the Gospel, seeking to educate and morally and industrially uplift 'damned niggers of Haiti,' with their fists clenched, and again aiming to take their revolvers and shoot me, stating they opened and intercepted my letters, and taking an oath they would crush me, and then hurried me off to prison."

Mr. Jacob P. Dunn, a pronounced interventionist, recently returned from a visit to Haiti, in a speech at All Souls Unitarian Church at

Indianapolis, Ind., on March 26 last, as reported in the Indianapolis Star of the 27th, said:

"Much of the trouble with the marines in Haiti which has led to unfavorable reports has been due to a lack of prohibition in the country. There is no prohibition. You can buy enough rum there for 1 cent to set you crazy."

Dr. Carl Kelsey, also a defender of the occupation, in his report of the American intervention, published in the Annals of the American Academy of Political and Social Science, says (p. 142):

"Unfortunately drunkenness was not unknown on the part of high officials (of the Marine Corps) and their wives, while local standards were shocked by the sight of women in automobiles smoking in public."

VIOLATIONS OF WOMEN.

We forbear to go into the shocking accounts of violations of women and young girls, although there is at our command evidences of many cases of rape and violation; nor do we care here to emphasize the prevalence of and danger from venereal disease, and the fact that many return infected with tropical fevers and other tropical diseases.

WHY THESE ATROCITIES ARE NOTED HERE.

The foregoing atrocities, which could be multiplied many times, are set forth here to emphasize the fact that the United States is not immune from the results universally incidental to the larger crime of deliberate military conquest. They are the natural concomitants of such action as our Government has taken in the Haitian Republic, and the responsibility for them, shocking as they may be to our sense of humanity and public decency, must be laid at the door of those primarily responsible for the violation of the Republic of Haiti. It is idle to protest that they were done against orders and by irresponsible individuals. The evil results remain to stain the honor of America and to arouse suspicion against us throughout all Latin America.

NOT AN ATTACK UPON NAVY OR MARINES.

This is not to be considered or interpreted as an attack upon the American Navy or Marines. Military officers serve under orders from the civil government; and when any government orders the subjugation of a liberty-loving and patriotic people, as it must be admitted the Haitians are, resistance is bound to follow, and the officers forced to adopt means to end. Without doubt the majority of our officers and men are of too high character to violate their own honor and the humanitarianism of this age by such deeds as above related. War, however, releases the instincts of cruelty inherent in some men and gives them opportunity for exaggerated expression. Some of the officers and men have expressed their detestation of what they were ordered to do; many believe we have no business in Haiti or Santo Domingo, and others say that they do not know why we are in Haiti at all.

We must not forget the sad result to many of our soldiers and marines which must follow such interventions. Just recently there arrived from Nicaragua 24 marines—young men sentenced to the penitentiary in terms of from 8 to 40 years for various offenses. Undoubtedly they were guilty, but the larger question arises, Why were they in Nicaragua? Was it in pursuance of an imperialistic policy?

BRIEF FOR THE PEOPLE OF THE UNITED STATES NOT FOR HAITIANS.

This is a brief for the people of the United States and not for the people of Haiti. That the great majority of Haitians are a backward and primitive people, as judged by our standards of civilization, and that they have had frequent revolutions—in common with all Latin-American countries—was a matter of common knowledge long ago. These facts give no valid grounds for our unwarranted action.

THEY OWE US NOTHING.

It should be noted, however, that an appreciable percentage of the population are men and women of fine culture and education. It must not be forgotten that they were solvent and had scrupulously paid the interest on the public debt, and that in all of the much-complained-of revolutions not a single American citizen had lost his life or had his property molested.

INSPIRED REVOLUTIONS.

And in speaking of revolutions it is pertinent to take note of the testimony of Rev. L. Ton Evans that revolutions in Haiti were frequently fomented by foreigners. It would appear that not all of them had been due to the "savagery and brutality" of the Haitians, but to the plots of exploiters from civilized white nations, including our own. At page 156 of the hearings occurs the following:

"The CHAIRMAN. Mr. Evans, are these foreigners who foment revolutions accustomed to make monetary advances to revolutionary generals at usurious rates?

"Mr. EVANS. Yes, sir; most decidedly.

"The CHAIRMAN. Selling arms?

"Mr. EVANS. That is so.

"The CHAIRMAN. In short, they have a direct profit in inciting revolutions?

"Mr. EVANS. Absolutely so, and in constantly fomenting political disturbances. For instance, in August of 1911, when returning from the World's Baptist Alliance, which I attended as Haiti's representative at Philadelphia, a German banker from Haiti sat next me at the table on the boat. In conversing about the recent revolutions of 1910 and 1911 he said * * * that he actually knew more about them than I did. Boastingly he added: 'I financed them from Berlin, as well as the previous revolutions, and furnished ammunition, and have been staying in Germany several years arranging these matters.'"

In Admiral Caperton's testimony, at page 378, is the record of negotiations whereby the Caco chiefs were to withdraw their opposition to the election of Admiral Caperton's choice for President and disband their troops, at the rate of 50,000 gourdes to every 1,000 Caco soldiers. The Government, the admiral testified, "agreed to deposit to my credit the sum of 100,000 gourdes, and more if necessary for this purpose." The project failed, and is brought to attention here because it was evidently recognized by the Navy Department that revolutions were fomented, bought, and sold.

RESULTS OF THE SEIZURE—HATRED AND SUSPICION IN ALL LATIN AMERICA.

The first result, perhaps, of the seizure and six years' occupation of the Republics of Haiti and Santo Domingo, accentuated by the fact that the United States has given no definite date or promise of withdrawal, has been the creation of widespread hatred, suspicion, and fear, always the forerunners of revolution, war, and international misunderstanding.

The people of Haiti and Santo Domingo, with the exception of a few whom the great mass consider traitors to their country, now hate and despise everything connected with the American Government, and only an immediate return to the principles of law and justice, accompanied by the most emphatic and concrete acts of friendship and of reparation on the part of this Government, can restore the regard in which we were once held. Representatives of the workers have always made it clear that they think as soon as the American people understand they will repudiate their Government's action and demand that the good name of the United States be cleared.

Not only in Haiti, but throughout the Caribbean and South America, we have become known as "The American Colossus," and suspicion of us has now become magnified by our actions in Haiti and Santo Domingo, as well as in Nicaragua, Cuba, and elsewhere.

RACE PROBLEM IN THE UNITED STATES.

The race question is sufficiently acute in the United States as to cause our Government to hesitate at any act which will accentuate it. Yet it is undeniable that the colored people throughout the United States are fully aware of what has happened in Haiti and resent it because they are of the opinion, as shown by their newspapers and speakers, that our Government would not, in this day of civilization, practice such tyranny, oppression, and physical atrocities upon a white population. Official protests by the National Association of Colored People, made to you in 1920 by this organization after an investigation of the occupation, clearly reflect this rapidly mounting sentiment.

BAD FOR LEGITIMATE COMMERCE.

In recent years our Government has made heroic efforts and spent much money to increase our legitimate commerce with the South American countries, which is now at a very low ebb. Friendly sentiment between peoples is a powerful factor in successful commercial relations. To allay fear and build friendship was the declared purpose of the South American tour of Secretary of State Root in 1906 and of Secretary Colby since the war. From this point of view our invasion of Haiti and Santo Domingo is one of inconceivable stupidity and well-nigh irreparable loss. Hon. Horace G. Knowles, who has also been United States Minister to Bolivia as well as to Santo Domingo and is thoroughly conversant with the situation, in discussing the effect of the circulation of Fombona's pamphlet, "In the Clutch of the Eagle's Claws," and similar documents, says in a letter:

"Before the war our commercial competitors were able to create in the minds of Latin Americans merely a bugaboo, but which was sufficient to cause these peoples to form a prejudice against the United States and buy only those things from us they could not obtain elsewhere. There was not then, as now, a desperate effort to gain and hold their trade (by Europe).

"Fombona's pamphlet could not but produce then an unfavorable impression and opinion against our country and establish in the minds of Latin Americans fear and distrust of the United States. Because of that they will probably organize themselves to follow a clearly defined policy to do nothing commercially or politically that will tend to strengthen the United States."

The Haitian people are now organizing a boycott against all American-made goods—a voluntary boycott against which our officials will be powerless—and are taking steps to get their imports from non-American sources. The arrival recently of a European merchant ship at Port au Prince was made a gala occasion. It was met by an official committee of welcome, headed by a high official of Haiti.

Abundant testimony can be produced to verify these statements. The result is that honest, legitimate commerce with the whole of South America, pursued according to the lawful rights of free peoples, is being jeopardized, greatly hampered by the hatreds and fears growing out of our imperialistic policy. This policy reacts, as we shall see later, only to the benefit of a small number of "development" and "exploiting" interests, bent on "quick returns," and who, if their "interests are properly safeguarded" by our Government, expect profits "far in excess of 10 per cent" on their capital. (Hearings, p. 757; testimony of Mr. Forrest.)

OUR INTERNATIONAL INFLUENCE COMPROMISED.

Another result of this action is to compromise us as an influence in maintaining just international relations that remove the causes of war, and particularly in protecting the rights of small nations. In what position have been or are American statesmen and diplomats to mention "Korea," "Shantung," or "Siberia" to Japan, when she can reply "Haiti and Santo Domingo." England's black and tans in Ireland or her forces in India and Egypt, or the troops of France and Spain in North Africa, have committed no greater atrocities than our own in Haiti. State Department officials advise press correspondents to the effect that they are satisfied political sovereignty will not be restored to Haiti for years to come. In the meantime monarchical Britain has granted the Irish free state and partial self-government to Egypt.

WHO WANTS IT?

Why, then, are we in Haiti? Increasing thousands of American citizens are asking this question. The official answer that it was necessary to seize the Haitian ports at the time of the war to prevent their occupation by German or French forces and to quell "disorder" does not explain our continued domination of the island, nor the relentless severity by which our armed forces have put down the resistance of the people to the destruction of their liberties. The possible occupation of Haitian ports by France, England, or Germany was not threatened because of disorders in Haiti, but was an incident of the European war because of the desirability of the island as a naval and propaganda base. It is evident that there is a powerful driving force behind this occupation as yet not understood. A careful reading of the hearings sheds abundant light upon this question. It discloses banking interests of New York and Boston desirous of forcing highly profitable loans upon the Governments of Haiti and Santo Domingo. It shows these banking interests and investment companies seizing the lands of Haitian and Santo Domingo people—lands extremely fertile for sugar, cotton, and castor-bean seed, and tobacco. It shows contractors bent upon fat returns. In brief, it exhibits Haiti as a promised land of loot for those who can smash down the protection given to these people by their ancient constitution and independence. And all this is being done under the protection of and in cooperation with the United States Government.

LAND GRABBING.

The testimony of Mr. Roger L. Farnham, of the National City Bank of New York, indicates the interests he represents have in view the seizing of lands that native Haitians held for over a century under squatter rights without, therefore, the rights of legal title deeds, but immune, under the old constitution, to foreign ownership. These interests urged a modern survey of the island by the occupation in order to establish definite title deeds, and it appears that far over 200,000 acres of valuable lands have already been grabbed. The inhabitants are at the mercy of devotees of commercial penetration, who are counting on the absence of title deeds to warrant the wholesale sequestration of Haitian lands.

"ASSURANCE IN WASHINGTON."

The Haitian-American Corporation of New York is one of the companies formed to "organize extensive plantations" in Haiti, build sugar mills, etc. Mr. H. M. Pilkington, technical expert, vice president and manager of the Americal Development Co., and formerly technical expert to the Haitian-American Corporation, in his testimony, at page 790 of the hearings, says:

"The original financing of the Haitian-American Corporation was brought about and put to the public directly and definitely upon assurance in Washington by competent people and competent officials that the treaty between the United States and Haiti was in fact to be a living thing. The large feature in the floating of the securities of this company, all of which floating came under my personal observation at the time, was predicated, one might say, wholly as to security upon the implied bona fides of the United States in carrying out this treaty, the basing of which was security for foreign capital."

This is an amazing statement. The question arises: By what authority does any official of this Government, outside of Congress itself, undertake to pledge the United States in such a matter?

Connections of a sinister character between persons connected with the Government of the United States and an American corporation, which we respectfully suggest to be worth of immediate investigation, are stated in the testimony of the Rev D. Tor Evans at page 188 of the hearings. In recounting a conversation between himself and H. P. Davis, general manager of the United West Indies Corporation, "who had written articles in the National Geographic Magazine and other journals, months before, declaring that Haiti's constitution must be rewritten, especially the clause regarding lands." He says:

"In a conversation I had with him at the Cape in April, 1918, when he seemed to unfold his plans, adding that his corporation had unlimited capital * * * with stockholders, if not directors, from within the United States Government, therefore the occupation was practically at his and his corporation's command, and that they had the right of way in Haiti. * * * This was said in the presence of an educated native missionary."

Whether Mr. Davis and his associates have special influence in Washington with the State Department or not, the fact remains that what they have advocated has been done. Their motives are clear. The Pan-American Magazine of March 19, 1917, carries an article by Mr. Davis, from which we quote:

"Haiti has the tremendous advantage of still being a virgin country * * * fertile soil * * * mineral deposits, unworked and still open to exploitation * * * the marvelous wealth of valuable timber is practically untouched. Labor is and for many years will continue to be exceedingcly cheap and abundant * * * etc., etc."

"Uncle Sam has undertaken to furnish this 'firm yet gentle and beneficent guidance' * * * and an opportunity * * * is open to any American with sufficient energy and capital to take advantage of THE RADICAL CHANGE RESULTING FROM INTERVENTION." (Emphasis ours.)

FORCED LOANS FROM PRIVATE BANKERS.

For months the American financial adviser to Haiti (which office was provided for in the forced treaty), Mr. John A. McIlhenny, has been urging a loan of some $14,000,000, to which the Haitian Government and people most strenuously object. Incidentally, Mr. McIlhenny, who it might seem should be in Haiti attending to budgets, etc., has for the past two years spent three-fourths of his time in Washington, drawing from the Haitian treasury $500 per month gold extra for traveling expenses in addition to his salary of $10,000 per annum.

The New York City Bank offered last year, and Mr McIlhenny favored, a loan of $14,000,000 at 7½ per cent, issued at 92, payable in 10 years. It entailed immediate discharge of the French debt of $6,668,980, contracted at the lower rate of 5 and 6 per cent, not due and payment not demanded by the French; payment of $1,621,500 on a defaulted railroad contract, controlled by the National City Bank, and protested because the specifications were not followed; and other features, with the net result that Haiti would have left for her needs $1,564,800 as a matter of net receipts.

Mr. McIlhenny testified before the Senate investigating committee that he has no power or authority from the Haitian Government to place a loan, since it had been refused him, and that he had personally urged Brigadier General Russell, recently appointed ambassador plenipotentiary to Haiti, with full power over all civil and military authorities of the occupation, to secure for him (McIlhenny) authority to contract a loan for Haiti on such conditions and terms as he could secure.

The basic consideration here is that the Haitian people are having these loans forced upon them by our Government against their will. Obviously this is a repetition of the old, old imperialistic trick of accomplishing what diplomatists call a fait accompli, to be followed by the claim that we can not relinquish our control because our national interests are at stake.

LABOR AT 20 CENTS A DAY.

Another action of our Government which has favored the investment interests and worked havoc with the people of Haiti—as described by Prof. Pierre Hudicourt, testifying in behalf of the Haitian de jure government—was the executive fiat by which Admiral Caperton, acting under orders from Washington, set the exchange value of the Haitian gourdes, nominally approximating the American dollar, at five to one. The Haitian monetary unit is depressed four-fifths and labor is paid in cheapened gourdes at the rate of about 20 cents a day. This wage rate of 20 cents per day has actually been set out in advertisements as an inducement to the public to buy stocks and securities of the newly organized Haitian investment companies, and the wage rate of $1.75 per day in Cuba is given in contrast. Such Haitian laborers as can are leaving the island for fairer fields, unmindful of the proclamation (given on page 392 of the hearings) of the "benevolent unselfish, and helpful purposes" of the United States Government and the promise that if Haitians would cooperate "there will be plenty of work with good wages for the country's peasantry and employment for the abilities and intelligence of the upper classes." The implications of this statement are unmistakable.

Here, then, is disclosed the only class of American citizens who have promoted and defended our seizure of the island. Its real effect, if not indeed its purpose, is to pave the way for economic exploitation, illegally imposed by the force of American arms. In view of these facts, our profession of desire to improve the status of the natives and fit them for self-government is not convincing. Mr. Davis, before quoted, is refreshingly frank. He said recently to Dr. Ernest Gruening, managing editor of The Nation (issue of February 8):

"There has been a lot of bunk about helping the Haitians. I am not here to help the Haitians. I am here to make money out of Haiti for myself and my friends. I am an expert in discovering new territories for development for banks. It is true * * * I have helped some Haitians, but I have helped them incidentally and for purely selfish reasons."

Mr. Davis is "generally referred to as spokesman of the occupation," and openly aspires to be named as American financial adviser to Haiti to succeed Mr. McIlhenny.

Can any intelligent American citizen doubt that our treaties with Haiti and Santo Domingo would have remained inviolate and the occupation never would have occurred had not certain powerful New York and New England banking interests believed, as Mr. Davis says in his Pan American article:

"I believe that never in the history of the Americans has there existed an equally favorable opportunity for profitable investment by properly equipped American organizations as that afforded by Haiti and Santo Domingo."

OUR FUTURE POLICY.

The decision of our Government to be taken in the near future will affect the welfare and destiny of the people of the United States quite as much as those of the people of Haiti. It will decide whether we remain a democratic republic or pass to a financial and militaristic imperialism similar to those of Europe. It is hoped the administration will not concur with the preliminary report or any final report, of the Senate committee of investigation recommending the maintenance of our military forces in the island. No amount of benevolent paternalism can compensate a people for the loss of liberty. If we are to keep faith with the democratic spirit of the American people, we will not dally, but at once set about to withdraw our military forces from Haiti and Santo Domingo.

We emphatically concur in the conclusions set forth in the report of the 24 lawyers, issued by the Foreign Policy Association. They say in part:

"8. We declare, without qualification, that the honor and good name of the United States, the preservation of the sovereignty and the cherished liberty of Haiti and her right to fair dealing on the part of the United States, as well as the possibility of assuring the continuance in the future of honorable and amicable relations between our country and Latin America based on trust and confidence, all require

"(a) The immediate abrogation by the United States of the treaty of 1915, unconditionally and without qualification.

"(b) The holding of elections of representatives to the legislative bodies of Haiti and of a president by the free will of the people at an early day

"(c) The negotiation of a new treaty with a new Haitian administration for friendly cooperation between the United States and Haiti upon such terms as shall be mutually satisfactory to both countries and by the methods that obtain between free and independent sovereign states."

The machinery for the accomplishment of these ends is set up in Senate Resolution No. 265, introduced by Senator WILLIAM H. KING on March 10 last. It reads:

"Whereas United States military forces have been in occupation of the territory of the Republic of Haiti since 1915, and the Haitian people now desire the withdrawal of those forces and the abrogation of the treaty of 1915 between the United States and the Republic of Haiti; and

"Whereas the term of the present President of Haiti, elected in 1915, expires on May 15, 1922, and no elections for deputies and senators have been held in Haiti since the dissolution of the chamber of deputies and the senate in 1917 Now, therefore, be it

"Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the United States should forthwith terminate the aforesaid military occupation of Haiti, abrogate the treaty of 1915 between the United States and Haiti, under which the said occupation is maintained, and restore democratic constitutional government in Haiti.

"Resolved further, That in order to carry out the aforesaid purposes the President of the United States is respectfully requested:

"1. To denounce the treaty of 1915 and the protocol of March 28, 1917, extending said treaty, same to take effect on or before the expiration of the six months' period provided for in paragraph 3 hereof.

"2. To take all necessary and appropriate action to restore full democratic, constitutional government in Haiti, and in particular to direct the brigade commander of the United States marines in Haiti to act as follows:

"Temporarily to assume on the 16th day of May, 1922, such powers and functions of government in the territory of the Republic of Haiti as are necessary to provide forthwith for the holding of free popular elections in Haiti not later than July 1, 1922, for a constituent national assembly, to be composed of one member for each existing commune, to convene said assembly in meeting not later than August 1, 1922; and to vest the said assembly with the functions and powers of framing and adopting a new constitution for Haiti and of choosing and installing in office a President and Government of Haiti.

"3. Within a period of six months after the date when the President of Haiti, chosen by said constituent assembly shall have notified the Government of the United States of the adoption of a constitution and of the assumption of office by the said President, to withdraw all military and naval forces of the United States from the territory of the Republic of Haiti and to cause to be restored to such reconstituted Haitian Government all functions and powers of government now or hereafter exercised in Haiti by all civil or military representatives of the United States."

PAN AMERICAN ACTION URGED FOR FUTURE.

Finally we urge the necessity of taking immediate steps to establish a Pan American Congress of at least the leading North and South American powers for the settlement of any differences or difficulties that may arise in the future If it became necessary to maintain order in some of the weaker and more restless Republics and especially if military intervention became necessary, let it be done, not by ourselves alone, a course which carries an assumption of our own impeccable superiority, but by joint action with our neighboring Republics. In this way, and perhaps in this way only, can we demonstrate the sincerity of our pretentions of amity, justice, and good will. Let this be the Monroe doctrine of our time.

We bring this subject to your attention, Mr. Secretary, with all the greater confidence since the opinion of the President upon it has been unreservedly expressed. Referring, in one of his speeches at Marion in the fall of 1920, to the use of our military forces to impose an American-made constitution upon the helpless Haitians, he said:

"If I should be, as I fully expect to be, elected President of this just and honorable Republic, I will not empower an Assistant Secretary of the Navy to draft a constitution for helpless neighbors in the West Indies and jam it down their throats at the point of bayonets borne by United States marines. We have a higher service for our gallant marines than that. Nor will I misuse the power of the Executive to cover with a veil of secrecy repeated acts of unwarranted interference in the domestic affairs of the little Republics of the Western Hemisphere, such as in the last few years have not only made enemies of those who should be our friends but have rightfully discredited our country as their trusted neighbor."

We recall the satisfaction this expression of opinion gave to so many of the American people at the time. They were only beginning to apprehend the ruthlessness and significance of our Haitian conquest when Mr. Harding denounced it in unmistakable terms.

With that declaration fresh in our memories we can not allow ourselves to question the probability of a prompt decision to reverse our imperialistic policies in the West Indies, which in the speech we quote were so justly condemned. With the sentiment of that speech and the principles vitalizing it, every true American must sympathize; and so in behalf of the American people we confidently solicit the restoration by the President to the little Republics of Haiti and Santo Domingo the sovereignty over their domestic affairs which our Government has not only violated but is continuing to violate.

Respectfully submitted.

APPENDIX B.

NATIONAL POPULAR GOVERNMENT LEAGUE,
637 Munsey Building, Washington, D. C.

[Bulletin No. 72, February 9, 1922. By Judson King, Executive Secretary.]

THE SIGNIFICANCE OF THE AMERICAN OCCUPATION OF HAITI.

The ninth session of the League Forum was addressed by Dr. Pierre Hudicourt, of Port au Prince, Haiti, upon the subject "A Haitian Statesman's View of the American Occupation of Haiti."

Doctor Hudicourt is a lawyer of international reputation and high standing, a member of the permanent court of appeals at The Hague, professor of international law in the Haitian National Law School, member of the American Institute of International Law, and has actively participated in the diplomatic relations between the United States and Haiti. He is a man of fine presence, speaks good English, and made a profound impression upon the forum by his simple dignity, his firm grasp of the legal, economic, and humanitarian principles involved.

His address was a revelation to the Americans present, because the facts produced from the official record prove beyond cavil or inspired propaganda that the Government of the United States for the past six years has been doing exactly the same things in Haiti and Santo Domingo that Japan, France, and England have been doing in Africa and Asia, and for the same reasons.

The American people have been kept in profound ingorance of what the American Government, under the direction of the President, was doing in Haiti. No mention of Haitian activities was made by the Secretary of the Navy in his annual reports from 1915 to 1920.

DOCTOR HUDICOURT'S ADDRESS.

Doctor Hudicourt, who has been invited to appear before the Senate committee investigating the situation in Haiti, showed that the United States is carrying on a policy of economic imperialism in Haiti similar to that of the great powers of Europe in Africa and Asia. The policy applies, in fact, to the ring of the Caribbean, and it was roughly indicated that American troops now dominate Haiti, Santo Domingo, Cuba, Honduras, and are stationed at other strategic points.

The audience was shocked by the facts brought out in the discussion that the American Government has expended probably $50,000,000 in an atrocious and utterly illegal subjugation of Haiti, for no other purpose as yet adduced than to permit the looting of that Republic by the National City Bank of New York and the cotton and sugar magnates, who desire to get hold of the lands of the Haitian people and exploit Haitian labor at 20 cents a day.

After a brief historical introduction of Haiti's case by Dr. Ernest Gruenin, managing editor of The Nation, of New York, Doctor Hudicourt set forth its legal aspects. Incidentally he lodged the following charge against John A. McIlhenny, financial adviser to the Republic of Haiti, whose duty it is to prepare its national budget:

"Mr. McIlhenny is here in Washington helping to force a $14,000,000 loan on the Haitian people, which they don't want, but which the National City Bank of New York, the Haitian-American Sugar Corporation, and R. E. Forrest, exploiter of cotton lands, president of the West Indies Trading Co., and personal friend of Senator MCCORMICK, do want.

"For this McIlhenny is drawing his salary of $10,000 a year from the Haitian people, plus $500 in gold per month for 'traveling expenses' while working for these interests. Haiti is not receiving his services. No national budget for Haiti has been prepared since McIlhenny was appointed two years ago, nor has he made any accounting to the Haitian people as to what he is doing with their money.

NATIONAL CITY BANK LOAN.

"The proposition is made to the Haitian Government that the National City Bank shall loan it $14,000,000, of which the Haitians would actually get $12,880,000; for it is to be sold at 92, and they must pay 7½ per cent interest on the $14,000,000.

"Out of the $12,880,000 the railway interests represented by Vice President Farnham, of the National City Bank of New York, are to get $1,621,500 immediately in payment for a railway which the Haitians never bargained for.

"These interests did not live up to the terms of the bargain they did make; they never followed the line laid down, but built three sections in areas which they intended to exploit.

"The Americans who have invaded Haiti propose to pay off the French debt of $6,668,000, the $1,621,500 claimed by the railway interests, and the $965,000 of Haitian internal debt. That leaves $1,564,800. This sum, if the plans of the schemers go through, is to be devoted to irrigation projects and roads, not for Haitians but for the immediate benefit of the American land-grabbers.

FORCED TREATY.

"By the most brutal and arbitrary methods these interests, working through the United States Government, have forced a new treaty providing complete control of my country's finances, control of the customs collections, a receiver general—who is a carpethagger from Louisiana—Financial Adviser McIlhenny, and all. The country is now in complete vassalage.

"The National City Bank, which has gotten the banking monopoly of Haiti, is empowered by this pernicious treaty to issue and fix the value of the people's money. The Haitian gourde, which was worth $1 in American money, Admiral Caperton has arbitrarily fixed at 20 cents. It means that the sugar and cotton and other interests there may pay for their labor, which was $1.75 a day, but little more than 20 cents a day. That is the wage of labor there now.

"Our constitution provided against foreign exploitation by forbidding foreigners to own land in Haiti. Under the new treaty the way is perfectly open for the sugar, the cotton, the mining, and other American interests to go in and acquire Haitian territory. The grants of 1804 apportioned the land among the patriots who achieved independence. The sugar people have decided to get this land surveyed, requiring the production of title deeds. Most of it was acquired under squatter's rights, fully sanctioned by the laws of Haiti, and the titles are not recorded. The American Legation at Port au Prince are aiding and abetting the sugar interests in their purpose of ousting the Haitian people from their freeholds. Mr. Forrest said, in his recent testimony, 'Our object is to get big returns, and we can not do this unless things are done to make it possible.'

"Neither Haiti nor Santo Domingo has yet had its day in court at Washington and before American public opinion. Their side has not been heard. I am here to present to the Senate committee, headed by Senator MCCORMICK, the friend of McIlhenny and Forrest, and if possible to the administration and the American people.

"It is important to remember that up to the time of American intervention the Haitians scrupulously paid the interest on their external and internal debt; that is more than several of your own Southern States did. So long as they did so the Monroe doctrine could not be invoked.

FORCED NEW CONSTITUTION.

"An election of a President under the constitution which was written for us, according to his own boast, by Assistant Secretary Franklin Roosevelt, has been due, but by orders of the Marine Corps no such election has been held. The United States during its occupation of six and a half years has abolished every real form of self-government in Haiti. We are at the mercy of the arbitrary acts of every marine private, of every small civil official. Now, it is planned that the Haitian finances shall be subject to American control for 30 years.

"The senatorial commission, consisting of Senators MCCORMICK, of Illinois, chairman; POMERENE, of Ohio; JONES, of New Mexico; and ODDIE, of Nevada, has spent weeks in the United States listening to testimony of marine officers and bankers interested in Haiti. When it came to hear the Haitian side, to hear the story of six years of tyranny, it spent actually only five days on the island, of which but one and a half was devoted to taking testimony. The rest of that time was largely spent in the company of the Marine Corps and of American investors.

"Immediately on its return, although the commission had announced in Haiti that the case was by no means closed, and that hearings would continue, it rendered a decision in a preliminary report. This report recommended that the marines stay in Haiti; that there be no abrogation of the treaty; and that a high commissioner, who would be a virtual dictator, should coordinate the various civil and military functions, and that the loan must be put through at once.

"If the United States desires to annex Haiti, to make it an American colony, of which America's every single act affords convincing evidence, why not say so? Why continue the sham and the hypocrisy of pretending, against the will of the entire Haitian people, that you are there for philanthropic reasons?"

SOME TELEGRAMS.

In his historical survey of the occupation, which the press has never presented to the American public, Doctor Gruening quoted the message sent by Admiral Caperton to Captain Durell, following Secretary Daniels's orders to seize the customhouses, withhold the salaries of the cabinet officers, and establish martial law. The message reads in part: "Successful negotiation of treaty is predominant part present mission. After encountering many difficulties treaty situation at present looks more favorable than usual. This has been effected by exercising military pressure at propitious moments in negotiations."

Moreover, Secretary Daniels cabled to Admiral Caperton, November 12, 1915, "I am confident if the treaty fails of ratification that my Government has the intention to retain control in Haiti until the desired end is accomplished. * * * It is expected that you will be able to make this sufficiently clear to remove all opposition and to secure immediate ratification."

Concerning the corvée, or enforced labor imposed by the marines, Doctor Gruening said: "It is significant that the figures of Haitians killed in the years following the corvée were very much greater than they were before the invasion, casualties in the next year being 1,732, whereas less than 100 had been killed in each of the first two years of the occupation." He said further:

"There has been no Haitian legislature since 1917. The present President's term expires in May, and the Haitians are demanding the right to hold a free election, the abrogation of the treaty, and adherence to the Monroe doctrine as heretofore interpreted."

An important series of articles on the Haitian situation by Doctor Gruening is now running in the Nation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair). The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] to the amendment of the committee.

Mr. POINDEXTER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it shall take a recess until 11 o'clock to-morrow morning.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Washington asks unanimous consent that when the Senate concludes its business to-day it shall take a recess until to-morrow morning at 11 o'clock. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. ODDIE. Mr. President, the question has been pretty thoroughly discussed, but I want to say again that a serious condition faces us to-day, and an obligation rests heavily on our shoulders to protect the Haitian people. I will say again, no matter how the condition arose, it faces us to-day and the obligation rests on us to take care of them. If we ignore them, if we get out or say we will get out in a very short time, we will be doing a very barbarous and inhuman thing. We will be blamed and condemned by all the world, as well as by South America.

The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] have high altruistic motives. They have been discussing this question from a part of the record that they have read, but, aside from what has come to their knowledge, I want to refer again to some of this miserable propaganda which is being spread over the country, which is not only damaging to the Haitians, but casts an ugly and unjust slur upon our Navy and our Marine Corps.

Mr. President, those organizations have been acting under instructions from Washington, and I think it is entirely wrong to cast slurs on them, as has been done.

I will say again that we owe a responsibility to the Haitian people; we desire to be their real friends; and the propaganda which is being carried on is damaging to them. If Senators will carefully read the report of our committee when it is submitted, I think they will be convinced that we intend showing nothing but kindliness and friendship to the Haitians, and that if the recommendations of this report are followed the Haitians will be better off for such action.

Mr. KING. Mr. President, I am willing to take a vote upon this amendment now, asking leave to add to it the words necessary to include Nicaragua.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment of the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], as modified, to the amendment of the committee, which will be stated by the Secretary.

The READING CLERK. On page 64, at the end of line 9, it is proposed to insert the following proviso:

Provided, That no part of said sum shall be used for the purpose of maintaining or employing marines, either officers or enlisted men, in the Republic of Haiti, or the Dominican Republic, or Nicaragua, after December 31, 1922, except in the event of an uprising in either Republic menacing the lives of citizens of the United States or the lives of subjects of a foreign power or powers friendly to the United States, and then only for the purpose of affording protection to said citizens or subjects.

Mr. KING. Upon that amendment I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BROUSSARD (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. MOSES], which I transfer to my colleague [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "nay."

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "nay."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], which I transfer to the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] and vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] and vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and vote "nay."

Mr. WATSON of Indiana (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. CROW] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM] with the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON];

The junior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. ERNST] with the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY];

The Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] with the Senator from New Mexico [Mr. JONES];

The Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR]; and

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS].

Mr. CALDER. I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] to the junior Senator from Maryland [Mr. WELLER] and vote "nay."

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] on account of sickness. His pair with the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] has been announced.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. JONES of Washington in the chair, after having voted in the affirmative). The senior Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON] is necessarily absent, and as I have a pair with that Senator I withdraw my vote.

The result was announced—yeas 9, nays 43, as follows:

YEAS—9.

Borah	Ladd	Norris	Walsh, Mass.
Johnson	La Follette	Overman	Walsh, Mont.
King

NAYS—43.

Brandegee	Frelinghuysen	Nelson	Smoot

So Mr. KING's amendment to the committee amendment was rejected.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, on Saturday an amendment was adopted to the bill under consideration, as found on page 8916 of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, reading as follows:

Provided further, That officers of the Supply Corps, United States Navy, who have served in the temporary rank of commander for a period of more than four years shall be regarded as having been promoted to the permanent rank of commander in the Supply Corps, United States Navy, with rank as such immediately after the officer whose date of entry into the Supply Corps, United States Navy, was June 9, 1899.

A point of order was made against that amendment by the junior Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], which was subsequently withdrawn. Rule XX provides that a question of order may be raised at any stage of the proceedings. I inquire if a point of order against this amendment would now be in order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of the opinion that a point of order can be made when the bill gets into the Senate, but he is inclined to think it could not be made at this time.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That matter, the Chair will remember, has been determined both ways. My view about it is that, in view of this particular rule, the better practice is to make the point of order in the Senate. As that is the ruling of the Chair, I shall not move to reconsider the vote by which this amendment was adopted; but it should not have been adopted, in my judgment, and certainly should not have been adopted without more consideration than appears to have been given it in the closing hours of the session on Saturday. If the Chair advises me that a point of order may be made against the amendment in the Senate, I shall not ask for a reconsideration of the vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is of that opinion.

Mr. LODGE. I desire to offer the amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will state the amendment.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. It is proposed to add to the bill:

That the President be, and he is hereby, authorized to nominate and, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, to appoint Capt. William R. Rush a rear admiral on the retired list of the United States Navy, to take rank immediately after Rear Admiral Albert Gleaves: Provided, That the said William R. Rush shall be carried as additional to the number of rear admirals now authorized by law.

Mr. KING. I raise a point of order against the amendment that it is general legislation upon an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

Mr. KING. On page 57, line 18, I move to strike out the numerals "$10,817,398" and to insert in lieu thereof "$8,270,950."

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary advises the Chair that that amendment has already been agreed to. So the Senator's amendment to the committee amendment will not be in order except in the Senate or on a reconsideration of the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. KING. The understanding was that I should have permission to offer this amendment. I ask unanimous consent that the vote by which the committee amendment was agreed to may be reconsidered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the vote will be reconsidered.

Mr. KING. The purpose of my amendment is to reduce the number of marines. I have accurate figures, furnished me by the clerk of the committee, as to the number of enlisted men and officers in the Marine Corps at various times, which show that the strength of the Marine Corps has been as follows:

On June 30, 1899, there were 6,062 men authorized, and 3,614 actually in the service; there were 211 officers authorized, and 142 actually in the service.

On June 30, 1908, the authorization was for 9,521, but there were 8,822 in the service. The authorized strength of the officers was 333. The number actually in the service was 262.

On June 30, 1910, the authorized strength was 9,521. There were actually in the service 9,121.

On June 30, 1916, the authorized strength was 9,947. The actual strength was 10,056. They seem to have had more in the service than were authorized.

On June 30, 1917, there were 30,000 authorized; 24,172 actually in the service.

On June 30, 1918, the authorized strength was 30,000, but there were actually 45,384 in the service.

On June 30, 1919, there were 75,500 authorized, but 45,343 in the service.

On August 31, 1919, there were 27,400 authorized, and 27,514 in the service.

On June 30, 1920, there were 27,400 authorized, and 16,000 in the service.

On June 30, 1921, there were 27,400 authorized, and 21,003 in the service. Now it is proposed to authorize a strength of 21,000 men and 1,096 officers. I am advised, and as a member of the Naval Affairs Committee it was my understanding, that for a number of years there has been a sort of an understanding or gentlemen's agreement that there should be a ratio between the marines and the number of enlisted personnel in the Navy of 5 to 1, which would call at this time for 17,500 marines.

In my opinion, we ought to reduce the number of marines to 10,000, but in deference to this understanding of the past, and knowing that I could not get votes enough to carry such an amendment, I have been constrained to offer the amendment which I have just submitted. It seems to me there ought to be no objection to it. It will save a few million dollars. There must be a reduction in the marines. It looks as though there is a determination to make the Marine Corps more important than the Army. They have been strongly organized, they have had many friends everywhere, and they have been able to secure usually what they wanted.

I submit, without taking the time to discuss the matter as it ought to be discussed, that there ought not to be any objection to the acceptance of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Utah to the amendment of the committee, which the Secretary will report.

The READING CLERK. On page 57, in line 19, strike out "$11,866,372" and insert "$8,270,950."

The amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was reported to the Senate as amended.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on concurring in the amendments made as in Committee of the Whole, with the exception of the amendment on page 66, reserved by the Senator from Montana [Mr. WALSH].

The amendments were concurred in.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I offer the amendment which I send to the desk and ask that the Secretary may read it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be reported.

The READING CLERK. On page 35, after line 25, insert the following additional proviso:

Provided further, That the Secretary of the Navy is authorized, in his discretion, to restore to their reserve status as of May 16, 1921, and employ on active duty for the fiscal year 1923 only, the 40 men, formerly of class 5, United States Naval Reserve Force, who were commissioned in the regular line of the Navy at reduced grades as a result of the examination held on May 16, 1921: Provided further, That such officers may, prior to July 1, 1923, after successfully passing such examinations to determine their qualifications for their reserve grade as may be prescribed by the Secretary of the Navy, be transferred to and appointed in the Regular Navy in accordance with the provisions of the act of June 4, 1920.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair desires to state to the Senator from Massachusetts that this is an amendment to a committee amendment, and that the committee amendment has been concurred in.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I move it as an independent amendment to be added at the end of the paragraph, omitting the words "Provided further."

Mr. POINDEXTER. I make the point of order against the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I asked that the amendment on page 66 might be reserved in order that I might make a point of order against it.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. To the amendment on page 66, at the end of line 14, the Senator from Montana makes the point of order that it is legislation on an appropriation bill. Is that the point of order?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. That it is general legislation on an appropriation bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair sustains the point of order.

The amendments were ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time and passed.

Mr. POINDEXTER. I move that the Senate insist on its amendments, ask a conference with the House, and that the Chair appoint the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The motion was agreed to; and the Presiding Officer appointed Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. HALE, Mr. NEWBERRY, Mr. SWANSON, and Mr. GLASS conferees on the part of the Senate.

DUTY ON MACHINE TOOLS.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a brief statement from the National Machine Tool Builders' Association relative to a duty on machine tools.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type.

[National Machine Tool Builders' Association, office of general manager, 817–818 Provident Bank Building. August H. Tuechter, president, Cincinnati, Ohio; E. J. Kearney, first vice president, Milwaukee, Wis.; C. Wood Walter, second vice president, Cincinnati, Ohio; Winslow Blanchard, treasurer, Cambridge, "A" Mass.; Howard W. Dunbar, secretary, Worcester, Mass.; Ernest F. DuBrul, general manager, Cincinnati, Ohio.]

CINCINNATI, OHIO, June 17, 1922.

Subject: Tariff on machine tools.

Hon. FRANK B. WILLIS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SENATOR WILLIS: On June 8, when the machine-tool paragraph of the tariff bill was under discussion in the Senate, unfounded slurs by misinformed Senators influenced enough Republican Senators to reduce the machine-tool rate from 35 per cent to 15 per cent, the rate made by the Underwood tariff.

Senator SIMMONS charged the manufacturers of this industry with sustaining exorbitant prices and profits, "particularly on automobiles, guns, and machines"; that they were selling in South America in successful competition with the Germans; that they had great organizations that did practically what they pleased; and so on.

Some manufacturers of automobiles and firearms may be getting exorbitant profits, but the buyers of the automobiles pay the prices that produce the profits. Some of them may successfully compete with the Germans in South America. Some no doubt have great organizations. Some may do just as they please. But why should the machine-tool industry be joined in a scathing denunciation of such people?

If Senator SIMMONS had grounds for these statements, in so far as some automobile and firearms producers were concerned, the statements were all erroneous as applied to the machine-tool industry, which was lumped with these others in the discussion.

Machine tools are not small tools, as some Senators have believed, and as some may still believe. The term "machine tools" would be clearer to the nontechnical if they knew that it applied to the great mass of metal working machinery used in the forming or working into finished shape of all metal parts. This class of machinery is the most important of all the industrial machinery group, using the term "industrial" as distinguished from "agricultural" and "transportation." The output of machine tools is about 25 per cent of the output of all industrial machinery. On the high quality and productivity of the machine tool depends the quality and amount of production per man of all the industries making metal goods and machinery of every other class. On this industry the other metal industries must depend for low costs with high American wages. It is the genius of the machine-tool builder that makes possible cheap automobiles, sewing machines, washing machines, phonographs, and radiophones. The accurate instruments, close-shooting weapons, huge quantities of war material so necessary in the late war, all depended on the genius of the American machine-tool builder for their production.

Therefore this industry deserves something better than a mere fling of vituperation at the hands of the misinformed. If this industry is throttled, all others must suffer.

In refutation of Senator SIMMONS's statement as to exorbitant profits, the experience of this industry was that the 1914 prices were so low that the manufacturers faced ruin. Testimony had been submitted to the Underwood committee showing that the machine-tool industry had earned only 8.95 per cent on its invested capital for the 10 years prior to 1913. Prices in 1914 were extremely low because of prospective German competition that was just coming in under the Underwood Tariff, that had made the rate 15 per cent.

If the industry before the war could not earn over 8.95 per cent with the lower wages paid at that time, it will be strange if it earns anything with wages and material and all other costs more than double the 1914 rate and machine-tool prices only 40 per cent more than 1914.

The export market formerly enjoyed by the machine-tool industry has now been almost annihilated. The large German steel combinations, engineered by the German trust organizers—Krupp, Hugo Stinness, and others—control large machine-tool works and are now taking steps to enter the American market. They certainly can and will do so if the rate of 15 per cent is maintained, since German copies of American machines now sell for only one-third of the present prices of American originals.

Senator KING on the same day said that the prices were more than 100 per cent over the 1914 price, that the manufacturers were taking advantage of a monopoly, and that they charged practically what they desired. The following figures, taken from the 1919 census, are sufficient proof that Senator KING's remarks could not apply to the machine-tool industry. According to the census figures of 1919 the machine-tool industry's invested capital was $213,000,000. The total value of its product in that year was $212,000,000. We are told that the sales of repair parts of the lowest-priced automobile, built by a prominent Democrat, amount to more than that in one year for that one concern. So when it comes to volume this industry can not be so damnable a monopoly as Senator KING intimated.

The machine-tool industry in 1919 had 403 establishments, employing 53,111 wage earners. The average of wage earners per shop was therefore 132. Where is that monopoly that Senator KING says was taken advantage of by the manufacturers to charge the public what they desired? The actual facts are just the opposite. This industry of scattered, small establishments is to-day struggling for existence, and has been doing so for over 18 months, as a reaction from the war conditions.

This industry was absolutely essential to the successful conduct of the war. Without metal-working machines, machine tools, as technically known, war munitions could not have been made. The enormous demands of the war for such machines were patriotically supplied by the expansion of the machine-tool industry with its own capital or borrowed money—not with Government money. It is estimated that the industry was expanded to three times its former size. To-day, in its readjustment, the industry faces a corresponding contraction to the peace basis. Besides, its foreign market is gone, and that market was absorbing probably between 20 and 30 per cent of the total production before the war. This expanded capacity is now a liability, not an asset, and is far in excess of reasonable expectation of use.

Certainly the best justification for a protective tariff is the justification of national defense. The machine-tool industry is a key industry in national defense. If it is ruined by competition with foreign enemies this country would be in a terrible state when it came to defense in any future war.

Far from being a monopoly that charges what it pleases, at this time these manufacturers are fighting tooth and nail for every little order. A large excess of war-made machines is on the secondhand market; all costs are still exceedingly high and demand is very small. All these circumstances make it impossible for this industry to get any profit at all, and there have been numerous failures.

The German machine-tool industry was also expanded to take care of the war needs of the Central Powers, and it is in the hands of strong concerns. A 15 per cent rate on foreign valuation will help the Germans to kill off their American rivals; and this by the action of a Republican Senate establishing a Democratic rate at the instigation of Democratic Senators from Arkansas and North Carolina—States that have no metal-working industries of any consequence.

Your own State of Ohio is the largest producer of machine tools in all the United States, and we appeal to you as representing this State to call the attention of the Senate to the injustice that has been done to this industry, not only in the ill-considered reduction, without any reflection or information as to the rate, but in unjust, unfair slurs directed against an industry that lives by the sweat of its brow.

This industry has to bid for its material and labor against all other mechanical industries. Being put in a lower rate class at 15 per cent, when all of its customers and competing industries are given a higher rate, was an injustice of the Underwood law that the House bill sought to correct with a rate of 35 per cent. To continue to work such an injustice on an important industry, with 53,000 wage earners, an industry so essential to the national defense and progress, is beyond reason.

It is hoped that the Senate will rescind the action in making this amendment, and will, at least, restore the machine-tool item to a rate covered by the so-called "basket clause," where it was some years ago, with all other mechanical industries with whom it competes for labor and material, and who in turn must depend on the machine-tool industry for their vital improvements in methods of production.

Very truly yours,

E. F. DUBRUL, General Manager.

RECESS.

Mr. CURTIS. I move that the Senate take a recess, the recess being under the unanimous-consent agreement, until 11 o'clock to-morrow.

The motion was agreed to, and (at 6 o'clock and 7 minutes p. m.) the Senate, under the order previously entered, took a recess until to-morrow, Tuesday, June 20, 1922, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

MONDAY, June 19, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon, and was called to order by the Speaker.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Heavenly Father, again our eyes are open to the wide reaches of the impartial love of a divine Providence. We rejoice in the glad outlook of the day and week. May we bring buoyant hearts and minds to our duties. Impress us that it is always best to believe the best and do the best. Faithfulness to principle is essential to Thy favor and to the esteem of our fellows. Direct us by Thy wisdom, give courage to conquer every temptation, and strength to arise from every failure. Thus enable us to strive for the victories that count and tell for God and man. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of Saturday, June 17, 1922, was read and approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Craven, its Chief Clerk, announced that the Senate had agreed to the amendments of the House of Representatives to bills of the following titles:

S. 1784. An act for the relief of John B. Elliott;

S. 154. An act to extend the benefits of the employers' liability act of September 7, 1916, to Arthur E. Rump; and

S. 1087. An act for the relief of H. L. McFarlin.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed joint resolution (S. J. Res. 185) authorizing the Secretary of War to grant permits for removal of rock and gravel from the Fort Wingate Military Reservation, in which the concurrence of the House of Representatives was requested.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION REFERRED.

Under clause 2, Rule XXIV, Senate joint resolution of the following title was taken from the Speaker's table and referred to its appropriate committee, as indicated below:

S. J. Res. 185. Joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to grant permits for removal of rock and gravel from the Fort Wingate Military Reservation; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

UNANIMOUS CONSENT CALENDAR.

The SPEAKER. To-day business on the Unanimous Consent Calendar is in order. The Clerk will call the first bill on the calendar.

IMPRISONMENT OF FEMALE OFFENDERS IN STATE REFORMATORIES.

The first business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 1010) to amend sections 5549 and 5550 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

MAILS FOR THE BLIND.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10496) to provide for the free transmission through the mails of certain publications for the blind.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WALSH. I make the same request with reference to this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts makes the same request with reference to this bill, that it be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

LAC DU FLAMBEAU BAND, LAKE SUPERIOR CHIPPEWAS, WISCONSIN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6428) for the enrollment and allotment of members of the Lac du Flambeau Band of Lake Superior Chippewas, in the State of Wisconsin, and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, when this measure was up before I made some inquiry with reference to it, and asked that it be passed over. I do not see the gentleman present here this morning who was to communicate with the Indian Office. I dislike to object, but——

Mr. MANN. I want to make some inquiries about it. I ask unanimous consent that it be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

ACCOUNTS OF CERTAIN DIPLOMATIC AND CONSULAR OFFICERS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 7764) authorizing the accounting officers of the Treasury to adjust certain accounts of certain diplomatic and consular officers.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was up for consideration on the call two weeks ago the gentleman who reported it asked that it be passed over without prejudice for the purpose of obtaining additional information which at that time he did not have. I do not see the gentleman now in the Chamber. I ask unanimous consent to have it passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that this bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

LEASE OF SURPLUS ELECTRIC POWER.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10248) to amend the act of April 16, 1906, and the act of February 24, 1911, relative to the lease of surplus electric power on Federal irrigation projects.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, since this bill was passed over two weeks ago at my request the gentleman from Arizona [Mr. HAYDEN], the author of the bill, has furnished me with additional information. But I wish to make a certain inquiry as to the last proviso, vesting discretion in the Secretary of the Interior to adjust these rates within 5, 10, or 20 year periods of time after the entry into contracts of lease.

My impression as to the readjustments of the rental for this hydroelectric power that is sought to be granted to the Water Users' Association, under certain terms that will be satisfactory to the Secretary of the Interior, is that they should be mandatorily changed at least every 10 years. I think the period of time is too long to make it 20 years when the prices of power may change perhaps by reason of the price of coal. We all know that the price of hydroelectric power is largely dependent and conditioned upon the price of coal, the price at which it is sold at the place where the power is developed. Now, in the granting of leases for power at a certain rate and having the time extended to 20 years you are doing so at the expense of the other users of power.

Mr. HAYDEN. The gentleman from Wisconsin will observe that this bill provides for frequent readjustments of water-power rates. Section 7 of the Federal water power act provides:

That when licenses are issued involving the use of Government dams or other structures owned by the United States or tribal lands embraced within Indian reservations the commission shall fix a reasonable annual charge for the use thereof, and such charges may be readjusted at the end of 20 years after the beginning of operations, and at periods of not less than 10 years thereafter, in a manner to be described in each license.

The gentleman will notice that the language of this bill follows very closely after that of the water power act. The officials of the Salt River Valley Water Users' Association advised me that they had contracts with certain users of power which they would like to readjust every five years.

So it is here provided that five-year readjustments may be made, while under the Federal water power act no readjustment of rates need be made until 20 years, and then every 10 years after that.

Mr. STAFFORD. I beg pardon. Let me get a clear idea of what the Federal water power act provides. I gleaned from reading it that it provides that rates must be readjusted at the end of 10-year periods.

Mr. HAYDEN. No; that act reads—

May be readjusted at the end of 20 years after the beginning of operations, and at periods of not less than 10 years thereafter.

As to the second part of the gentleman's observation, with respect to the competition from power produced by coal, I can state to him that in my opinion the only competition that is to be feared by those interested in this power which is to be produced on Salt River will be an enormous hydroelectric development, which we all hope will take place on the Colorado River. When the Colorado is harnessed, in a few years to come, there will undoubtedly be a vast quantity of cheap power available for distribution in Arizona. Therefore, if any rate readjustment is made, it will probably be downward, in competition with this very large hydroelectric development, rather than upward, in competition with coal, which must be shipped by rail from New Mexico or Colorado.

Mr. STAFFORD. I wish to call the gentleman's attention to the fact that under the language of the bill there is no obligation upon the department to readjust the rate at any period of the 50-year lease.

Mr. HAYDEN. Neither is there any such obligation under the water power act.

Mr. STAFFORD. It says the charges shall be readjusted at the end of 20 years.

Mr. HAYDEN. No; I copied the wording of this bill exactly from that act, which is permissive but not mandatory. It says that such charges may be readjusted.

Mr. STAFFORD. Read just below, where it is mandatory.

Mr. HAYDEN. There is nothing mandatory. The water power act provides—

> The commission shall fix a reasonable annual charge for the use thereof, and such charges may be readjusted at the end of 20 years thereafter and at periods of not less than 10 years thereafter.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman has called attention to the provision of the water power act that applies to Government projects on Indian reservations.

Mr. HAYDEN. Government dams or Indian reservations. This bill relates to the sale of surplus power from a Government dam, because the title to the property will remain in the United States.

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes.

Mr. HAYDEN. And the language of the bill precisely follows the Federal water power act, except that I have provided that there may be five-year rate readjustments.

Mr. STAFFORD. My idea is that for the protection of the users of power there should be a requirement that the rates be readjusted at certain fixed times. It is not fair to the future users of power to have some large user of this stored-up power get a preferential rate under a long-time lease, which may be away below the prevailing cost 20 or 25 years hence. Neither is it fair perhaps to the user of power to charge him an excessive rate when the rate may be much lower 20 or 25 years hence.

Mr. HAYDEN. Under the terms of this bill, when a contract for the sale of surplus power is made it may provide for a readjustment of rates at fixed periods. If a consumer of power believes that in the future electric power will be cheaper—and that is my opinion so far as Arizona is concerned, on account of future hydroelectric development on the Colorado River—he will naturally insist that the readjustment come as soon as possible. If the Salt River Valley Water Users' Association is wise in making its power contracts, it will try to obligate the consumers at a high rate for as long a time as it can. But, in any event, a readjustment of rates can be agreed upon in advance and so specified at the time the contract is made.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Will the gentleman state what power project along the Colorado River he has in mind?

Mr. HAYDEN. I have in mind a very large reservoir which must be constructed in order to protect the Yuma Valley and the Imperial Valley from the flood waters of the Colorado River. When that great reservoir is provided at least 600,000 horsepower of electric energy will be produced as the stored water is gradually released.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Has the gentleman in mind the project that may possibly be developed by Girand and others?

Mr. HAYDEN. That particular project is for power only. It provides practically no storage, but would create about 100,000 horsepower for use in Arizona. If the proposed Girand power plant at Diamond Creek in the Colorado River were in existence to-day, I doubt very much whether it would be possible to finance the Salt River power development, in aid of which I am seeking to have this bill passed.

Mr. CLARKE of New York. Would this project interfere in any way with the Girand project?

Mr. HAYDEN. No; because this project is comparatively small. The Girand project is large enough to supply power to a great many copper mines in Arizona. This Salt River project may care for the power needs of two or three of them. There is no real conflict between the two. This project will not require so much money for its development and the mines will have power immediately. I now yield to the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL].

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I am inclined to think that the plan proposed is a safe and sound one, and, as a matter of fact, is perhaps essential for the best utilization of the power on the Salt River reclamation project. In order that the matter may be very clear, I want to ask the gentleman from Arizona as to this phase of the situation: The bill provides that whenever a development of power is necessary for the irrigation of lands on the Salt River reclamation project, or an opportunity is afforded for the development of power under such project, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to make the contracts proposed in the bill. The Salt River project is a completed project, now being operated under an organization of the landowners. I should say that nothing in this bill would by any possibility authorize the use of the reclamation fund for the further extension of the power project.

Mr. HAYDEN. Absolutely not, and nothing of the kind is intended.

Mr. MONDELL. That is my interpretation of the bill, but I thought it was well to have it made certain.

Mr. HAYDEN. The bill will have this effect; whatever power is developed, whatever dams are built, whatever improvements are made, the title to the same will be in the United States as additional security for the sums due on the construction charge as heretofore fixed for the Salt River project.

Mr. MONDELL. This bill authorizes the Secretary of the Interior on behalf of the people interested and on behalf of the actual owners of the project to make a contract for a period of 50 years with an opportunity for readjustment in 5 years, 10 years, or 20 years.

Mr. HAYDEN. That is the only purpose of the bill.

Mr. MONDELL. And leaves the matter wholly in the hands of the people vitally interested, and the longer period would make it possible to make a better contract than could be made otherwise.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. There are a good many provisions in the general water power act which, of course, are not carried in this very brief bill. Are there any essential provisions in the general water power act in reference to the power of making contracts?

Mr. HAYDEN. No. If the gentleman from Illinois will look at the bill as originally introduced——

Mr. MANN. I have read it.

Mr. HAYDEN. And at the report in which I printed the letter of the secretary of the Federal Water Power Commission, he will note that the secretary says that inasmuch as this bill deals solely with the sale of surplus power, there is no interference in any possible way with the Federal water power act.

Mr. MANN. We gave very careful consideration to the terms of the Federal water power act, and there are many provisions in that act with reference to contracts, but this bill leaves it absolutely with the Secretary of the Interior and to the water users as to the terms of the contract.

Mr. HAYDEN. All that this bill deals with is the sale of surplus power; it has nothing to do with the power site, the title to which remains in the Federal Government.

Mr. MANN. That is all you get anywhere, is the surplus power.

Mr. HAYDEN. Under the Federal water power act a water-power site may be leased for a term of 50 years. The lessee then places buildings and other structures necessary to develop power on the site, but the United States reserves the right to recapture the property at the expiration of the lease. In this case the Salt River Valley Water Users' Association now has the right to develop power for its own purposes, and is only asking for the privilege of selling the surplus.

Mr. MANN. It comes from the fact that the General Government has control over the power site. Let me ask the gentleman this question: Under the general water power act a portion of the profits received by the Government is paid to the State?

Mr. HAYDEN. That is true, and a part of the receipts are also paid into the reclamation fund.

Mr. MANN. Why should a portion of the proceeds from the Government site be paid into the State fund in one case and not in another?

Mr. HAYDEN. The power sites affected by this bill were reserved and set aside for the use of the Salt River reclamation project long before the Federal water power act was passed by Congress.

Mr. MANN. That is the case on a great many sites that were set aside; very few have been set aside since the water power act passed. They were set aside before, and while I am not specially anxious to have the money paid into the State, still I notice that when the question comes up of paying money into the Treasury then all the gentlemen representing these States want to get as little into the General Treasury as possible and as much into the local treasury as possible. What is the difference in principle between paying money into the State treasury out of contracts under the general water power act and under the Reclamation Service?

Mr. HAYDEN. Under the Federal water power act power is developed by private enterprise on Government land. Under the reclamation act the power site is developed directly by the United States for the benefit of the water users of the reclamation project.

Mr. MANN. It is just the same in both cases, it is owned by the Government.

Mr. HAYDEN. A water-power company leases the site, builds the power plant, and controls the entire property, which can not be taxed because the power site belongs to the United States.

Mr. MANN. They do in this case.

Mr. HAYDEN. The Federal water power act therefore provides that 37½ per cent of rental received by the United States shall be paid to the State in which the power site is located in lieu of taxes.

Mr. MANN. Under the general water power act all private property is taxable. In this case, if it is not taxable, then there is much more reason for paying it into the State.

Mr. HAYDEN. The water-power development which will take place if this bill becomes a law means that additional areas of taxable lands will be brought under cultivation, and for that reason I do not anticipate that the State of Arizona will insist upon receiving a share of the power receipts in lieu of taxes.

Mr. MANN. If this was in some other State and the Government owned the whole property, it might be in favor of paying the money into the State rather than to the General Government.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Other States will have this bill as a model.

Mr. MANN. In this case they go on the theory that all of it goes into the State in some way and there is no difference in principle. I expect that there are many other matters of that kind, and I tell the gentleman frankly that I am really afraid of a short bill not very carefully drawn.

Mr. HAYDEN. The bill was very carefully prepared.

Mr. CHALMERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. I yield to my friend from Ohio.

Mr. CHALMERS. What is the object, why can not you do this under the general water power act; is it simply an extension of time?

Mr. HAYDEN. If additional power for the Salt River reclamation project could be obtained under the terms of the Federal water power act it would not be necessary to pass this bill; but there is a special statute, passed in 1906, which deals with power developed on United States reclamation projects which limits contracts for the sale of surplus power to 10 years. All that I am trying to do is to amend that special statute, which applies to reclamation projects only, which was passed long before the Federal water power act became a law and which the water power act did not repeal. I am trying to amend it to conform to the Federal water power act with respect to the term of 50 years.

Mr. CHALMERS. I have the same fear that the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] has, that it may be regarded as a dangerous precedent.

Mr. HAYDEN. The precedent, if that is important, is already established and fixed in the law. The Federal Water Power Commission may now make 50-year leases. Instead of establishing a precedent, I am following one already approved by Congress when it passed the water power act. I can not see how there can be any danger in doing that.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Gladly.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. Is there anything in this bill or in this proposition which might in any way affect the national parks?

Mr. HAYDEN. Absolutely not. It merely means the use for power purposes of some water that flows down the Salt River from a reservoir heretofore constructed by the Reclamation Service. There is no national park within 200 miles of the power site which is to be utilized if this bill passes.

Mr. CHINDBLOM. The gentleman does not know of any objection?

Mr. HAYDEN. None that can not be satisfactorily answered.

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] It is clear that there is no quorum present.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were closed, and the Sergeant at Arms was notified to bring in absentees.

The Clerk called the roll, and the following Members failed to answer to their names.

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and forty-eight Members have answered to their names, a quorum.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move to dispense with further proceedings under the call.

The motion was agreed to.

The doors were opened.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the title of the bill under consideration.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 10248) to amend the act of April 16, 1906, and the act of February 24, 1911, relative to the lease of surplus electric power on Federal irrigation projects.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, following out the suggestion made by the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] and others, I wish to know whether it would not be advisable to have some provision in the bill so as to have this power subject to the other provisions of the general water act, so far as applicable. The gentleman originally introduced this bill with the idea of amending section 5 of the reclamation act, I believe.

Mr. HAYDEN. I introduced this bill with the idea of amending section 5 of the special act that was passed in 1906, which simply authorized power leases on reclamation projects for 10 years. That act was amended in 1911 in order that leases might be made on the Rio Grande reclamation project for 50 years. I introduced this bill to place the Salt River project on a parity with the Rio Grande project. Then the question was raised that the passage of such legislation might be in conflict with the Federal water power act. At the suggestion of the Committee on Irrigation of Arid Lands, the bill was referred to the Federal Power Commission. That commission reported back that there would be a conflict if the bill contained the term "power privileges." Therefore the term "power privileges" was omitted from this bill, which deals with nothing but the sale of surplus power. If it is provided that all the terms of the Federal water power act shall apply to this bill, nothing will be accomplished. The water power act refers to power sites owned by the Government, and in consideration of their use a license fee is charged. This bill merely provides that if in connection with the Salt River reclamation project they have surplus power to sell, then they can contract to sell it for 50 years instead of 10 years. Surplus power is all that this bill affects.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none, and the Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 5 of the act of April 16, 1906 (34 Stat., p. 116), as amended by the act of February 24, 1911 (36 Stat., p. 930), be amended so as to read as follows:

"SEC. 5. That whenever a development of power is necessary for the irrigation of lands, under any project undertaken under the said reclamation act, or an opportunity is afforded for the development of power under such project, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized to lease for a period not exceeding 10 years, giving preference to municipal purposes, any surplus power or power privileges, and the money derived from such leases shall be covered into the reclamation fund and be placed to the credit of the project from which such power is derived: Provided, That no lease shall be made of such surplus power or power privileges as will impair the efficiency of the irrigation project: Provided further, That the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, in his discretion, to make such a lease in connection with Rio Grande project in Texas and New Mexico and the Salt River project in Arizona for a longer period, not exceeding 50 years, with the approval of the water users' association or associations under any such project, organized in conformity with the rules and regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the Interior in pursuance of section 6 of the reclamation act approved June 17, 1902."

With the following committee amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That whenever a development of power is necessary for the irrigation of lands under the Salt River reclamation project, Arizona, or an opportunity is afforded for the development of power under said project, the Secretary of the Interior is authorized, giving preference to municipal purposes, to enter into contracts for a period not exceeding 50 years for the sale of any surplus power so developed, and the money derived from such sales shall be placed to the credit of said project for disposal as provided in the contract between the United States of America and the Salt River Valley Water Users' Association, approved September 6, 1917: Provided, That no lease shall be made of such surplus power as will impair the efficiency of said project: Provided, however, That no such contract shall be made without the approval of the legally organized water users' association or irrigation district which has contracted with the United States to repay the cost of said project: Provided further, That the charge for power may be readjusted at the end of 5, 10, or 20 year periods after the beginning of any contract for the sale of power in a manner to be described in the contract.

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. Hayden to the committee amendment: On page 3, line 5, strike out the word "lease" and in lieu thereof insert the word "contract," and after the word "made" insert the words "for the sale."

Mr. HAYDEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer this amendment at the suggestion of the Department of the Interior. An identical bill was introduced in the Senate, and in reporting on that bill the department recommended this amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HAYDEN. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Does not the gentleman think that the word "as," in line 5, page 3, should be stricken out, and the word "which" substituted?

Mr. HAYDEN. It is a matter of grammatical construction. I copied the old law. The present law relating to the other projects reads "as."

Mr. WALSH. The phraseology now looks as though that referred to the power.

Mr. HAYDEN. I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. WALSH. When these others are disposed of we can take care of it.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Arizona.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment. Page 3, line 5, strike out the word "as" and insert the word "which."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment to the committee amendment: Page 3, line 5, strike out the word "as" and insert in lieu thereof the word "which."

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The committee amendment as amended was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended so as to read: "A bill authorizing the sale of surplus power developed under the Salt River reclamation project, Arizona."

On motion of Mr. HAYDEN, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TRANSFER OF DETENTION HOSPITAL BUILDING, NOME, ALASKA.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9528) providing for the retention by the Government of the property in Nome, Alaska, known as the detention hospital building, and its use by the Bureau of Education, Department of the Interior.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire of the author of the bill why this privilege should not be left to the Department of the Interior rather than to one certain bureau of the department, and further whether the privilege of the utilization should not be left to the President to determine as from time to time the President may determine is necessary?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I will say to the gentleman that the bill was drafted by the Department of the Interior. I did not pay much attention to the phraseology of it. Two weeks ago today under unanimous consent the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CRAMTON] reserved the right to object, and inquired as to the probable expense involved. I obtained all the information and he is perfectly satisfied with it. He happens to be out of the Chamber at this time.

Mr. STAFFORD. It occurs to me if we have a Government building up in Alaska for which there is no further need and the Bureau of Education or some bureau of the Department of the Interior needs it, the President ought to have authority at least to say what Government agency should utilize the building.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The gentleman means general authority as to buildings?

Mr. STAFFORD. No; just this one building.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. That did not occur to me. A great many bills have been introduced in the past giving special power to some department.

Mr. STAFFORD. Here the Government has a building at Nome, Alaska, which is no longer needed for the purpose of its original construction. The Bureau of Education thinks it should have it for the use of the teachers as a dormitory.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the gentleman will let me interrupt him, the Bureau of Education now occupies an old ramshackle building that is a mere makeshift.

Mr. STAFFORD. But if there is other need for this building, or if the building could be utilized for additional activities of the Government, or if it happens that the Department of the Interior should have no further need for the building why should not the President have authority to designate the use to which it may be put?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the gentleman suggest an amendment?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I think the suggestion of the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] is a good one, inasmuch as it is not likely that there will be other Government buildings in Nome in many years to come. But the control of the Federal building there must be placed somewhere, and probably the best place is the Bureau of Education. How would an amendment like this do? In line 11, page 2, add the words "and for such other uses of the Government as the President may direct." That would leave the building under the control of this particular bureau, which is well represented in Alaska, and yet leave the building for such other uses as the President may direct.

Mr. STAFFORD. I have these amendments to propose, but perhaps the gentleman's amendment will accomplish the purpose:

For the use of the Department of the Interior or such other departments of the Government as the President may from time to time determine.

The Attorney General is authorized to transfer the custody of said building to the Secretary of the Interior or to the head of any such other department as the President may from time to time determine shall have the use thereof.

What is the gentleman's proposal?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It is a little simpler, I think. It leaves the control of the building under the Bureau of Education, which is a strong bureau in Alaska, and adds, after line 11, these words, "and for such other uses of the Government as the President may direct." That is to say, the Bureau of Education in the Department of the Interior would manage and control and take care of the building, which will be used mainly as a school; but in case of an emergency, or anything of that kind, the President could direct the use of it for any necessary governmental purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman is quite certain the Bureau of Education will be in Alaska for some time to come?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes. It is one of the most active bureaus there. It has its teachers, superintendents, and agents there. Why should we not provide that in case of emergency the Government may make other use of its public buildings?

Mr. STAFFORD. That is why I wish to have authority vested in some one to utilize it to its full capacity. I withdraw the reservation.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to make an inquiry as to whether anybody can tell me what is the provision in the act of July 1, 1916, which would authorize the sale of this building?

Mr. STAFFORD. I will say, supplementing the inquiry of the gentleman from Illinois, that I casually but rather thoroughly examined that act and could not find the authority in the act authorizing the sale.

Mr. MANN. I read the act, and I could not find anything in it authorizing the sale. But I assumed I might have been mistaken, and then, thinking of the history of this legislation, I assumed further that when a bill like this came before the House some one would have accurate information. Here is a case where the Department of Justice recommended to Congress that it make an appropriation for the construction of a hospital for the insane in Alaska. We made the appropritaion. They constructed the hospital. They told us when we made the original recommendation that it was absolutely essential, and, in the interest of humane treatment of the insane, that this hospital be authorized and erected. After it was erected it never housed a single insane person, unless it was the Government inspector who made the original request.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The Department of Justice had no reason to suspect that the population of Nome, Alaska, would dwindle between 1913 and 1922, or rather between 1913 and 1916, fully one-half—perhaps even three-fourths.

Mr. STAFFORD. Notwithstanding the building of a Government railroad up there.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The railroad does not run within a thousand miles of Nome.

Mr. MANN. We have not any reason for expecting now that the Bureau of Education will need this building. But here was a case where, after we had authorized a hospital and constructed it, they would not go to the expense of operating it; said it was ridiculous to have a hospital there.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is the Government way of doing everything in Alaska.

Mr. MANN. That is what I say, and when I ask for information about this particular bill, nobody knows.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. That is because it is Alaska.

Mr. MANN. It is not because it is Alaska. This was reported by a committee of the House, not composed of Members from Alaska, although I have no desire to criticize the committee. Of course, the bill was drawn by the department. We have gotten in the habit—and maybe it is a good one—of passing upon the recommendations of the departments and allowing them, and then they change their mind and do not give us very good reasons for the change.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. We have the habit, all right, but we have not nerve to enact a law giving the Governor of Alaska the power to act in just such matters as this, which we should do.

Mr. MANN. I do not know why we should let the Governor of Alaska have control over our property up there.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It is 5,000 miles away, and Congress is not familiar with the conditions there.

Mr. MANN. I do not know whether we have a good governor up there or not, but there have been some governors up there since I have been here that I would not trust with such things.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 9528) providing for the retention by the Government of the property in Nome, Alaska, known as the Detention Hospital Building, and its use by the Bureau of Education, Department of the Interior.

Be it enacted, etc., That the property commonly known as the Detention Hospital Building, being situated on plot consisting of lot 66, in block 30, in the town of Nome, Territory of Alaska, according to the official plat thereof, and the easterly 65 feet of Second Avenue west, in said town of Nome, Territory of Alaska, vacated by said town of Nome and donated by said town of Nome to the Department of Justice on the 25th day of August, 1913, by ordinance No. 232, and a portion and part of lot 67, in block 30, in the town of Nome, Territory of Alaska, according to the official plat thereof, approximately 8 feet in width and extending the full length of said lot 67 alongside of and contiguous to said lot 66, shall not be sold under the provisions of the act of July 1, 1916, entitled "An act making appropriations for sundry civil expenses of the Government for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1917, and for other purposes," or other like acts, but shall be retained by the United States for use by the employees of the United States Bureau of Education, Department of the Interior.

The Attorney General is authorized to transfer the custody of said building to the Secretary of the Interior for use as set forth above.

All laws or parts of laws to the extent they are in conflict with the provisions of this act are repealed.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Washington offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. JOHNSON of Washington: Page 2, line 11, after the word "Interior," strike out the period, insert a comma, and add "and for such other uses of the Government as the President may direct."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, when this bill was last called to the attention of the House I objected to its consideration owing to a lack of information as to how much it would cost to put the building in condition for use, having some fear as to what the effect might have been upon a building in Alaska that has been left unoccupied for 12 or 13 years. Since that time information has come from the Alaska division of the Bureau of Education, through Dr. W. T. Lopp, its chief, giving that information. And I will ask to have it read by the Clerk. By reason of that information I withdraw any objection I had to the bill.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the Clerk will read the letter.

The Clerk read as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR,
BUREAU OF EDUCATION, ALASKA DIVISION,
Seattle, Wash., June 7, 1922.

Mr. L. A. KALBACH,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. KALBACH: Replying to your telegram regarding cost of refitting Nome Detention Hospital building and the inadequacy of the present quarters, I beg to submit the following:

The hospital is said to be one of the best constructed buildings in Nome. It is one of the few buildings which does not heave and settle during the winter and spring months. It has not been used since it was built. It was equipped with hot-water heat. The flooding of the cellar during the spring thaws has rusted the furnace in the small basement. If a new furnace is purchased for the basement, or one or two Arcola water heaters for the first floor, I estimate the cost at $600. The other expenses for alterations and repairs should not exceed $400, making a total of $1,000. If flues are built and stoves used for heating purposes, I estimate the entire cost, including alterations, would be approximately $500.

Our old quarters are in the old courthouse building, which was erected about 1900, during the boom days of Nome, when buildings were put up without any adequate foundations. It was poorly constructed, and has heaved and settled so many times that there is not a level floor in the building. Because of its faulty construction and its shapeless condition it is difficult to heat. Superintendent Dupertuis has recommended that if we can not secure the detention hospital, the old building be torn down and rebuilt. He estimates that it will cost approximately $3,000. He is of the opinion that it is not practicable to attempt to repair the old building for living quarters for the superintendent and teachers.

Very sincerely yours,

W. T. LOPP,
Chief of Alaska Division.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I would only like to add that upon inquiry I have made to-day of the Bureau of Education I am advised that it is not expected that funds will be expended for this purpose other than as stated, for the repair of buildings. They do not expect to spend funds for furniture, but will use the furniture that is already there.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend, on page 2, after the word "sold," in line 5, by striking out all down to and including the word "acts" in line 9.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MANN: Page 2, line 5, after the word "sold," strike out all down to and including the word "acts" in line 9.

Mr. MANN. Leaving it so that the building shall not be sold but retained by the Government. The language of the bill refers to a certain act, and contains the words "or other like acts." This means nothing to us. We have not been able to find any provision in the act referred to. This does not change the effect of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WALSH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

DECLARING TCHULA LAKE, MISS., NONNAVIGABLE.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11362) declaring Tchula Lake, Holmes County, Miss., to be a nonnavigable stream.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I wish to inquire, as the report is very wanting in facts, as to whether this lake is in any wise connected with any navigable stream over which the Government has extended any development?

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, in the absence of Mr. JOHNSON, of the committee in whose hands this bill was left for presentation, I take the liberty of referring to the gentleman from Mississippi [Mr. HUMPHREYS], the author of the bill.

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Mr. Speaker, Tchula Lake is about 50 miles long. It is connected at both ends of the lake with the Yazoo River. In years gone by there was very considerable commerce carried on the lake, but in the past 10 years, perhaps, it has been unused, and there has been no money spent on it in those years. It is filled up with logs and other material, so that now, as a matter of fact, it is nonnavigable.

Under the river and harbor act of 1899 we provided that in the case of navigable streams lying wholly within one State the legislature of a State might authorize the construction of dams, bridges, and so forth, across the streams, provided that the plans, and so forth, were approved by the engineer officers of the Army and the Secretary of War. This last spring the Legislature of Mississippi passed an act authorizing the construction of a bridge without any removable span across this lake, at about its central portion. That was referred to the War Department and approved by the War Department, and the bridge was constructed, so that now it would be impossible to navigate the stream because the bridge is right across the center of it.

Mr. STAFFORD. What is the character of the country about this lake? Was it formerly timbered country or agricultural?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. It is agricultural. The only purpose of this bill is to enable the supervisors of that county to put other bridges across it without having to go to the War Department and have the plans approved.

Mr. MILLER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. Yes.

Mr. MILLER. Is there any navigation?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. None whatever.

Mr. MILLER. What is the depth of water?

Mr. HUMPHREYS. May be a foot or so. It is filled up with logs, and it is nonnavigable even without this bridge. Now, there are three or four other bridges across it, and the county has been for a number of years put to the expense of hiring a man to stay by that bridge to open the span of the bridge when boats come up. That span has not been opened for 8 or 10 years.

Mr. STAFFORD. There would be no danger as long as the gentleman represents the district in which this lake is situated that the demand will be made, as has sometimes been done in other districts, for the improvement of this 1-foot stream for the purposes of navigation, and it may be hoped that for a long time that will not occur, but there may be an effort on the part of another Representative who may succeed the gentleman at some time to obtain an appropriation for a 1-foot stream of this kind. But I withdraw my objection, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The objection is withdrawn. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That Tchula Lake, in Holmes County, in the State of Mississippi, be, and the same is hereby, declared to be a nonnavigable stream within the meaning of the Constitution and laws of the United States, and jurisdiction over said lake is hereby declared to be vested in the State of Mississippi.

SEC. 2. That the right of Congress to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With a committee amendment, as follows:

Page 1, line 6, after the word "States," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WINSLOW, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

CONSOLIDATION OF FOREST LANDS IN ELDORADO NATIONAL FOREST, CALIF.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 8263) to provide for the consolidation of forest lands in the Eldorado National Forest, Calif., and for other purposes.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not know whether I would have objection to the substitute amendment to section 1, even though it does not carry out the recommendation of the department, but I have serious objection to constituting a new forest reserve outside the present existing boundaries. As I read the report, in that exterior tract of land there are 130,517 acres included, all except 13,200 of which are embraced in full or imperfect entry. What is the need of our adopting a policy, as is proposed in this bill and the three succeeding bills, introduced by the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER], of enlarging these forest reserves by adding privately owned land to the extent of hundreds of thousands of acres and having the Government buy those lands from the proceeds of the sale of the timber on existing forest reserves or by the exchange of other lands on this forest reserve?

Mr. RAKER. In the act of March 20, 1922, there was included section 1 of this bill, and if we are permitted to consider it I will ask to have section 1 eliminated. Section 2 is intended to cover the provisions of the act of June 25, 1910, and of August 24, 1912, which contain this provision:

And provided further, That hereafter no forest reserve shall be created, nor shall any additions be made to the ones heretofore created, within the limits of the States of California, Montana, Colorado, or Wyoming, except by act of Congress.

That brings up the question of adding land to the national forests. If consideration is given, I shall ask to amend the bill by striking out, on page 3, line 20, the words "this act" and inserting in lieu thereof "the act entitled 'An act to consolidate forest lands,' approved March 20, 1922," and also inserting the words "with the approval of the Secretary of the Interior." Then this land is included within the national forest named if it protects the stream flow and conserves the forests in that country.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman will permit, the gentleman has far better acquaintance with the creation of national forest reserves under prior administrations to conserve the forests of the country than I have, by reason of his coming from a western timbered State; but I question whether at any time when the Executive has brought into the boundaries of forest reserves large areas of land that there was ever included such a large proportion of privately owned lands as is the proportion in these various tracts. I will state that in the bill under consideration and likewise in the three succeeding bills one-tenth only of the land that is sought to be included in a forest reserve is Government land and nine-tenths is in private ownership. The land has been stripped of timber and now it is proposed to have the National Government purchase the land that has been stripped of timber and make it an embryo forest reserve.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman allow me to explain?

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly.

Mr. RAKER. When practically all of these national forests were created the attempt was made to eliminate, as far as possible, privately owned land and the boundaries were made irregular and zigzag for that purpose, because at the time of the creation of the national forests the act of 1901 was in effect, which allowed the exchange of the land, not for the value of the timber on it, but allowed a man who had a piece of worthless land at any place within a forest reserve to go and take a piece of virgin timberland. The purpose of making the boundaries zigzag was to eliminate as much of the privately owned land as possible. Now, this land has been cared for, so far as fire protection is concerned—not only the land of private individuals but Government land also. It adjoins the land within the national forests. It protects the stream flow. It can be reforested, and private individuals can not hold it. So therefore it can be obtained now very cheaply and can be exchanged to the Government for other land or timber, particularly ripe timber, and thereby a large supply of timber be provided for the future instead of letting it be destroyed.

Mr. SINNOTT. Will the gentleman allow me to make a suggestion?

Mr. RAKER. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SINNOTT. The Forest Service in making these exchanges has not placed a valuation of more than $2 on any of this cut-over land. I have the figures over in my office.

Mr. RAKER. It is one of the best buys to be had anywhere in the world.

Mr. SINNOTT. The Forest Service has placed a very small valuation on the cut-over land, which is potential forest land and may be reforested, and which is all contiguous to a national forest. They give an equivalent value in timber.

Mr. STAFFORD. Oh, the Government purchases the land which has no salable value now.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, yes, it has.

Mr. STAFFORD. The Government is purchasing large tracts of land outside of forest reserves held in private ownership.

Mr. RAKER. They do not have to take them.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman says the Government does not have to take the land. At one time gentlemen complain that there is too much land in forest reserves, and the next time, when it is of no value at all to the Government, they are asking the Government to take it all in.

Mr. SINNOTT. Although the exchange act was passed several years ago, there is one forest reserve in my State where there has not been an acre of land exchanged, because the landowners think that the Forest Service is exacting too high a price in the equivalent.

Mr. STAFFORD. When the landowner thinks he has a good proposition he will hold on to it, but when he has not a good proposition he will sell the land to the Government because he can not find any other purchaser.

Mr. SINNOTT. The officials of the Forest Service have the upper hand in these matters. They are absolutely independent. The private landowner is compelled to pay taxes on his land from year to year, and the Forest Service has the advantage in the trade.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the Government purchases the land and gives them timber in lieu thereof, the land taken into the national forest does not pay any taxes.

Mr. SINNOTT. The Forest Service takes all that into consideration.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

PLUMAS NATIONAL FOREST, CALIF.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 5003) to provide for the consolidation of forest lands in the Plumas National Forest, Calif., and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, for the same reason I object to this bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

SHASTA NATIONAL FOREST, CALIF.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 5004) to provide for the consolidation of forest lands in the Shasta National Forest, Calif., and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman from Wisconsin allow me just a moment?

Mr. STAFFORD. I reserve the right to object.

Mr. RAKER. Within the past two months we have passed not less than six bills just like this, providing for the taking in of lands within 6 miles of the exterior boundaries of national forests, and there was no objection.

Mr. STAFFORD. I do not think any of those bills provided for the taking in of so little Government land and so much privately owned land as these bills under consideration to-day. For instance, section 2 of the pending bill provides for taking in 515,830 acres, and of that amount only 13,710 acres are to-day owned by the Government. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

TAHOE NATIONAL FOREST, CALIF.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 6651) to provide for the consolidation of forest lands in the Tahoe National Forest, Calif., and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is made. The Clerk will report the next bill.

SECTIONS 5549 AND 5550, REVISED STATUTES.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 2381) to amend sections 5549 and 5550 of the Revised Statutes of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. This bill is practically identical with the first bill on the calendar. I think it ought to go off the calendar. I object.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts objects.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the four national forest bills just objected to remain on the calendar and go to the foot thereof until the next time.

Mr. STAFFORD. These bills were given consideration on a former occasion, and I do not think they ought to be continued on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects. The Clerk will report the next bill.

RELIGIOUS CORPORATIONS IN THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2682) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901," and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I would like to know what this bill is about.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. This simply adds the word "directors" after the word "trustees," in a large number of sections of the District Code, having reference to the incorporation of religious societies. In some instances the religious societies have directors instead of trustees, and to make it possible under the statute they ask that the word "directors" may be added after the word "trustees" in those statutes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901, and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto, constituting the Code of Law for the District of Columbia, be, and the same are hereby, amended as follows: By inserting the words "or directors" after the word "trustees" wherever the word "trustees" occurs in sections 589, 590, 591, 592, 593, 594, 595, and 596.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

AMENDING SECTION 24, JUDICIAL CODE.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11516) to amend section 24 of the Judicial Code.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, this is rather an important measure, and I doubt if we would have time to intelligently consider it at this time. I ask unanimous consent that it may be passed without prejudice.

Mr. STAFFORD. I object; I think it is too important a bill to be considered on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects to the consideration.

TO AMEND SECTION 100 OF THE JUDICIAL CODE OF THE UNITED STATES.

The next bill on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10817) to amend section 100 of the Judicial Code of the United States.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, in reading the report I notice that the favorable recommendation of the bill is contingent on an additional judge being granted to the northern district of Ohio. The judgeship bill is sleeping somewhere, I do not know whether in the morgue or the catacombs of the two Houses in conference. No additional judge has so far been provided. I think the bill ought to go over until the additional judge is provided, as a favorable recommendation is contingent on that fact.

Mr. CABLE. I understand the bill is not sleeping, but is wide-awake and liable to be agreed to any time.

Mr. STAFFORD. How long since it got out of the comatose condition? It has been in conference a month or more.

Mr. CABLE. I can not tell the exact time, of course; but my impression is that it is wide-awake. I wish the gentleman would not object, because there will be no chance to bring it up again until December.

Mr. MANN. The committee does not ask to have the bill passed now. It says, "We recommend the bill as amended do pass, provided the present bill before Congress authorizing an additional judge for the northern district of Ohio becomes a law."

Mr. CABLE. I took it up with the chairman of the subcommittee that has charge of the bill and he has no objection to its being considered now.

Mr. MANN. But the recommendation is that the bill be passed in case another bill is passed. That other bill has not been passed.

Mr. CABLE. If the House should pass the bill now I would not crowd it in the Senate.

Mr. MANN. But the gentleman has nothing to do with it in the Senate, unfortunately for the Senate.

Mr. MONDELL. Let me say that there will be another opportunity for considering the Unanimous Consent Calendar before December.

Mr. CABLE. The next unanimous-consent day is July 3, and then we will not have another one until after the middle of July.

Mr. MONDELL. I have no doubt but what the Unanimous Consent Calendar will be considered again before December.

Mr. CABLE. I hope it will.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

SUIT BY PERSONS WITHOUT MEANS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 426) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 1, chapter 209, of the United States Statutes at Large, volume 27, entitled 'An act providing when plaintiff may sue as a poor person and when counsel shall be assigned by the court,' and to provide for the prosecution of writs of error and appeals in forma pauperis, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stat., p. 866).

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I think we ought to have some explanation from the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota. The bill makes provision for pauper litigants.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. If the gentleman will read the last proviso in the bill, he will see what the new legislation is. It is as follows:

Provided, That in any criminal case the court may, upon the filing in said court of the affidavit hereinbefore mentioned, direct that the expense of printing the record on appeal or writ of error be paid by the United States, and the same shall be paid when authorized by the Attorney General.

We have had a statute of this kind for a number of years but there has been no provision for printing.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is it the understanding that the record on appeal in a criminal case can not be printed until the Attorney General passes on that individual application?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. It is intended to be a safeguard so that appeals can not be taken merely for delay.

Mr. STAFFORD. I understand the purpose, but I am asking the gentleman's contention as to the effect of the suggested amendment. The gentleman says in any criminal case the court may, upon the filing in said court of the affidavit hereinbefore mentioned, direct that the expense of printing, and so forth, be paid by the United States, and the same shall be paid when authorized by the Attorney General. Is every individual case to be submitted to the Attorney General before the record can be printed?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I presume the order will be made by the court, but until it has received the approval of the Attorney General no payment can be made. It is intended to serve as an additional check.

Mr. STAFFORD. Is the remainder of the bill a reenactment in the phraseology of the existing statute?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think it is, and that it is correct.

Mr. STAFFORD. I want to inquire whether there would not be need of the following amendment:

On page 2, line 21, after the word "action" to insert the word "defense."

Let me read from the bill as it is:

* * * upon filing in said court a statement under oath, in writing, that because of his poverty he is unable to pay the costs of said suit or action or of such writ of error or appeal, or to give security for the same, and that he believes that he is entitled to the redress he seeks in such suit or action or writ of error or appeal, and setting forth briefly the nature of his alleged cause of action or appeal.

Why should it not also apply to the purpose of defense?

The object of the bill is to extend these privileges to defendants, not alone to plaintiffs. The real purpose is to extend its protection to defendants in criminal cases, and in the phraseology to which I have referred you are including only the plaintiffs.

Mr. MANN. That is existing law, and it is universally applied to defendants.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am asking for information, whether it is or not. The phraseology is limited in its application, stating briefly the nature of his alleged cause of action or appeal.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. Does not the cause of action include everything?

Mr. STAFFORD. I question whether it does. It does not include a defense. A cause of action is not a defense.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think this would be construed to include whatever causes existed against a person. It is the cause of action pending that is referred to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Of course, appeal would extend to both the defendant and the plaintiff. I can not see where it would do any harm to include the word "defense."

Mr. MANN. Is it advisable to change the law where it is well considered and construed?

Mr. STAFFORD. As I read the report, I do not understand that the prior portion of the bill is reenacting existing law. The report does not in any way show what the existing law is. I did not have time to examine Thirty-sixth Statutes, because the report refers to several acts, not only to one.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. I think if the gentleman will read the letter attached to the report he will see that it is there.

Mr. STAFFORD. What harm could be done by adding the word "defense" after the word "action"?

Mr. MANN. If it has all been passed upon and considered it is not advisable to add anything that is not necessary.

Mr. STAFFORD. I want to be sure that it is existing law.

Mr. VOLSTEAD. There is no doubt about that.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The existing law seems to be set forth in the report, taken from the report submitted in the Senate.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman point out where the existing law is in the report?

Mr. VOLSTEAD. In the first letter addressed to Senator NELSON. The gentleman will see there what the Attorney General asked to have done.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman from Virginia directs attention to the statement in the report at the bottom of page 2, in which reference is made to Twenty-seventh Statutes, page 252, passed July 20, 1892. That law has been amended, as I understand. I think it was amended by the act of February 13, 1911—yes; Thirty-sixth Statutes, page 901. It contains different phraseology from that referred to.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Additional phraseology.

Mr. STAFFORD. I read the bill rather carefully, and I came to the conclusion that the word "defense" should be added. If the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. VOLSTEAD] and the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] do not think it should be added I shall not insist, but I was under the impression that it was not reenacting existing law, but rather a complete change of existing law, and to carry out the purposes intended the word "defense" should be added.

Mr. MANN. I am willing to admit that this is one of the cases where I did not compare the bill with the existing law. I took the statement in the report, which is never a very safe thing to do.

Mr. STAFFORD. I shall accept the statement of the gentleman from Minnesota that it is existing law. He is the distinguished chairman of that committee.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The Attorney General says in his letter appended to the report that the only change made is the proviso.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. CRAMTON). Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the act entitled "An act to amend section 1, chapter 209, of the United States Statutes at Large, volume 27, entitled 'An act providing when plaintiff may sue as a poor person and when counsel shall be assigned by the court,' and to provide for the prosecution of writs of error and appeals in forma pauperis, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stats., p. 866), be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to read as follows:

"That any citizen of the United States entitled to commence any suit or action, civil or criminal, in any court of the United States, may, upon the order of the court, commence and prosecute or defend to conclusion any suit or action, or a writ of error or an appeal to the circuit court of appeals, or to the Supreme Court in such suit or action, including all appellate proceedings, unless the trial court shall certify in writing that in the opinion of the court such appeal or writ of error is not taken in good faith, without being required to prepay fees or costs or for the printing of the record in the appellate court or give security therefor, before or after bringing suit or action, or upon suing out a writ of error or appealing, upon filing in said court a statement under oath in writing, that because of his poverty he is unable to pay the costs of said suit or action or of such writ of error or appeal, or to give security for the same, and that he believes that he is entitled to the redress he seeks in such suit or action or writ of error or appeal, and setting forth briefly the nature of his alleged cause of action, or appeal: Provided, That in any criminal case the court may, upon the filing in said court of the affidavit hereinbefore mentioned, direct that the expense of printing the record on appeal or writ or error be paid by the United States, and the same shall be paid when authorized by the Attorney General."

The SPEAKER pro tempore. On page 2, line 25, the second word "or" should obviously be "of," and without objection it will be so amended.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

AMERICAN MATHEMATICAL SOCIETY.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 9218) to incorporate the American Mathematical Society

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I have read the bill rather carefully and have considered it for some time. If we are going to undertake the policy of incorporating every scientific society, voluntary or otherwise, that exists in this country, I think it would be better to have some national statute passed than to present from time to time special bills authorizing the incorporation of certain designated persons. We have here a bill to authorize the incorporation of the American Mathematical Society. Then there is the American Automotive Society, and, I suppose, the American Chemical Society. We have in a few instances authorized certain men to incorporate themselves under a national charter. Some of those bills have been severely contested. I remember particularly the bill for the incorporation of the National Academy of Arts and Letters, a bill that was pending here for years.

Why should these gentlemen, who, I believe, are operating under some State statute, come here and preempt the name and have Congress, not only for this year but for the next hundred years and many thereafter, give them the exclusive privilege of this name, which I suppose has some value, of the American Mathematical Society?

Mr. CURRY. Shall I answer?

Mr. STAFFORD. I addressed my inquiry to the author of the bill.

Mr. CURRY. The American Mathematical Society is a voluntary organization of the greatest mathematicians in the world. American mathematicians lead the world. The organization is not incorporated in any State; it is a volunteer association. The members are confined mostly to the professors of mathematics in universities and to scientists outside of universities. Mathematics is the basis of all exact sciences. These gentlemen have done great good for the country. During the war they volunteered their services to the Army and Navy without pay.

Mr. MONDELL. All of them?

Mr. CURRY. Every one of them. They number at the present time about 1,100. They have a meeting once or twice or three times a year in certain parts of the country; one or two in San Francisco, two or three in the South and Middle West, two or three in New York, and one in Chicago. At the last local meetings this incorporation was requested by these scientists. They have an annual meeting in New York——

Mr. STAFFORD. For what purpose, will the gentleman state?

Mr. CURRY. Where the recommendations were favorably acted upon. The council of the society at its last meeting in New York selected the names of the scientists named in the bill as incorporators of this society and requested through Doctor Bliss, of the University of Chicago, and Doctor Hodgkins, president of George Washington University, that this incorporation be requested, and at their request I introduced this bill. Mathematics does not mean the auditing of books or bookkeeping——

Mr. STAFFORD. I think there are very few Members in the House who would apply that idea to the term.

Mr. CURRY. The gentleman from Wisconsin made reference to a certain clerks' organization that possibly might lead some one who does not know what this bill is to think it was simply a bookkeepers' organization.

Mr. STAFFORD. If the gentleman understood me that way he misunderstood me. I referred to the fact that if we incorporated these men as the American Mathematical Society there may be other scientists, like American automotive engineers and——

Mr. CURRY. Automotive engineers is a business proposition pure and simple. This is a scientific proposition entirely separate from automobile engineers. If an automobile engineer was a great scientist and mathematician he could probably become a member of this organization. This is an entirely different proposition. This is a scientific organization in the abstract, and this is the only country in the world that does not encourage with direct appropriations such organizations. This organization is asking no money of the Congress. They are simply proposing that Congress incorporate them so that they can have a status under such incorporation. They could incorporate in New York and file a certified copy of articles of incorporation in the 47 other States of the Union, and Alaska and Hawaii and Porto Rico, and then they would have to make 49 annual reports on different kinds of blanks to those States. If it is organized this way they can file with Congress a certified copy of the articles of incorporation. There is no money in it. It is purely a scientific organization, and I hope the gentleman will not object. I am as much opposed as he is to the incorporation of societies by the Congress that have a money basis or to protect a clerk or an auditor, but this is entirely different. It is a scientific organization——

Mr. STAFFORD. It has been suggested by another Member that there ought to be some qualifying language so as to prohibit this report from being printed at the Government's expense and that it should not be entitled to the franking privilege. I suppose the gentleman has no desire to have this report circulated under the franking privilege, or that it shall be printed at the Government's expense?

Mr. CURRY. The Government ought not to be called upon to pay in any way for the printing of the report and the organization ought not to have the franking privilege.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I have no objection to the consideration of the bill and I favor it, but I suggest I do not know just how the organization would make a report to Congress by filing it with the librarian?

Mr. CURRY. If the gentleman has any amendment to offer I would be glad to accept it.

Mr. MANN. I was going to suggest with humility that you strike out the word "Congress" and provide that they shall make an annual report to be filed with the Librarian of Congress.

Mr. CURRY. I will accept that.

Mr. MANN. That would not be printed as a public document unless we ordered it printed.

Mr. STAFFORD. The gentleman proposes to have the report filed with the librarian and not with the Congress?

Mr. MANN. Yes, provided they make an annual report, to be filed with the Librarian of Congress.

Mr. CURRY. That would not be a public document and would not be entitled to the franking privilege and would not be printed as an expense to the Government. I will accept that.

Mr. STAFFORD. Although I am not in sympathy with the policy of having national incorporations to certain designated persons handed out from time to time, I will not press the objection.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, for the same reasons assigned by the gentleman from Wisconsin I am opposed to all this character of bills, and I should express my opposition by voting against it——

Mr. CURRY. I hope the gentleman will not object.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. But the gentleman gives me no way of voting against this bill except by objection, so I am compelled to vote against it and all this kind of legislation.

Mr. MANN. There is quite a distinction here and in the past between a bill incorporating a national incorporation, to which I have been generally opposed, and a bill incorporating a corporation as a District of Columbia incorporation. These people, if they were residents of the District of Columbia, could incorporate in the District of Columbia as a District of Columbia corporation without any act. But the incorporation law here requires the majority of the incorporators shall be residents of the District of Columbia or they can not incorporate as a District of Columbia corporation. Now, practically all this does is to waive the requirement that the majority of the incorporators shall be residents of the District of Columbia, and this bill provides that it shall be declared to be a body corporate of the District of Columbia.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I am opposed to incorporations by act of Congress. I think such legislation is bad in principle, and I have never voted for such a bill since I have been here. I do not think these men ought to seek to have the prestige of the Government behind their enterprises. I would object to incorporating any kind of a society over which the Federal Government did not retain complete control and in which the incorporators were named as persons.

I have not examined this particular bill. I do not feel any particular interest in it. We have had a number of these bills, and always the effort is by men, not always with world reputations, to embalm themselves in acts of Congress. I do not intend to vote for any such legislation. If the advocates of the bill would put it forward in the regular way in the House, giving Members a chance to vote on it, I would content myself with voting against it.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman can do that now.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. However, I could not escape my responsibility in that way. The gentleman is too experienced a legislator to urge that. I am compelled to object.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed on the calendar without prejudice.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. I object, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard, and the bill is stricken from the calendar.

MARKET REPORTS BY RADIOPHONE.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was House Resolution No. 357, directing the United States Department of Agriculture and the Post Office Department to investigate the feasibility of furnishing market prices of cotton, corn, wheat, live stock, and dairy products by radiophone to the farmers.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, where does what the Clerk has been reading come from?

The SPEAKER pro tempore. From the calendar.

Mr. WALSH. This resolution is apparently laying a foundation for giving free service to the farmers with reference to crop reports. I notice that the House resolution has been amended to strike out "farmers" and substitute "growers and producers." The poor consumers, that will have to pay for all this, have got to get their prices from the producers when they are tendered the goods.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. McLAUGHLIN of Michigan. I see the chairman of the Committee on Agriculture here. He can explain the resolution.

Mr. WALSH. Why are you picking out the growers and producers for having this information? If we are going to use the overhead service in the country, I suppose it will be attuned so that only the growers and producers can catch the news as it goes floating through the ether.

Mr. HAUGEN. I think the report will be for general information, and, if the gentleman desires, the committee would have no objection to including consumers. I take it that whatever information is given out should be for the purpose of everybody.

Mr. WALSH. If we develop this science for these two departments——

Mr. HAUGEN. I might say it is now being done by the Post Office Department. It has been suggested that certain investigations be made without expense.

Mr. WALSH. What authority is there for expenditure of money for this?

Mr. HAUGEN. The bill carries no appropriation.

Mr. WALSH. For the work that is already being done, under what authority of law is the Post Office Department doing it?

Mr. HAUGEN. I would have to examine the Post Office bill in order to answer that. Possibly the chairman of the Committee on the Post Office and Post Roads can explain it.

Mr. BRAND. Will the gentleman yield to me a minute?

Mr. WALSH. Yes.

Mr. MANN. May I make this inquiry? What authority has the House—that is, merely the House—to authorize expenditure of money for the Post Office Department or to require the Post Office Department or the Agricultural Department to do things by a mere resolution of the House?

Mr. BRAND. This resolution does not call for the expenditure of a single cent on the part of the Government. It only requires the Department of Agriculture and the Post Office Department to investigate the feasibility of furnishing these radio reports to farmers and requiring them to state what it will cost the farmers to take advantage of these reports. There is not a dollar of expense involved to the Government. This was passed unanimously by the Committee on Agriculture. I first introduced the bill and confined it to cotton only, because I heard that the North and West had already made arrangements in the various respective States of those sections to get their reports. After suggestion by some members of the committee, I had corn, wheat, live stock, and dairy products inserted, the resolution originally relating to cotton only. The only change in the resolution made by the committee was to strike out the word "farmers" and insert the words "growers and producers." I have had the resolution informally considered by the Agricultural Department and the Post Office Department and they say they are ready at any time to furnish this information.

Mr. WALSH. Why do they not have an investigation and find out?

Mr. BRAND. That is what I want them to do. Here is the situation, if the gentleman from Massachusetts will allow me to quote from this letter from Mr. Wheeler, of the United States Department of Agriculture.

Mr. MANN. Oh, well, of course, he is in favor of it.

Mr. BRAND. I do not know whether he will be in favor of it, but I want to show you the situation, if you will be kind enough to allow me to do so. He says:

> The news item referred to mentioned the proposed news service from the two high-powered Navy radio stations at Arlington and the Great Lakes. I am inclosing herewith tentative schedules that have been proposed for these two stations. You will note that these cover most of the agricultural commodities, except cotton; we expect to furnish cotton-market information to the Navy station at New Orleans, which can broadcast it by radio telegraph over the entire South, covering practically all of the cotton-producing region. Any receiving station within approximately a thousand-mile range of any of these three high-powered stations can, with suitable equipment, intercept these reports and make them available for local use.

Now, that is what we want to do. We want to know what it will cost us to establish this equipment and catch these reports. It says further:

> The State of Alabama is proposing to do this at Auburn, and it would be equally practicable for the agricultural college of Georgia, at Athens, to handle the information.
> With reference to House Resolution 357, introduced by you, I would say that as to the feasibility of supplying farmers with radio phone reports on the market prices and conditions for agricultural commodities this information can be furnished you at any time. You are, perhaps, aware that a radio conference was called by Secretary Hoover, at the request of the President, to consider all matters pertaining to radio telephone. From that general conference there has developed an interdepartmental committee which is considering all matters pertaining to radio for Government uses.

Athens is the seat of learning in the State, where not only the University of Georgia is located but also the State Agricultural College, for which reason I want to get the State of Georgia to locate the radio station for the State in Athens, if possible.

Mr. MANN. How is the Post Office Department able to give these people information without going to some trouble to find out?

Mr. HAUGEN. May I read from a letter of Postmaster General Work one paragraph, as follows:

> I desire to call your attention to the fact that the Post Office Department has been handling all agricultural market, crop, and weather reports for the Department of Agriculture since April 15, 1921, and is broadcasting these reports from eight of the various postal radio stations covering an area of more than half of the United States.

So the work is going on.

Mr. MANN. The work is going on without any authority of law, but here is the proposition: You want to get the Agricultural Department and the Post Office Department to report what it will cost somebody else to do something. The Post Office Department does not know anything about it.

Mr. BRAND. They are already handling it. Doctor Work says——

Mr. MANN. If they already know what it will cost the State of Alabama to put up a receiving station, let them tell the State. But they do not know; I assume that they do not know.

Mr. BRAND. Does the gentleman object to the farmers at their own expense giving this information to the people?

Mr. MANN. Nobody objected to that. Nobody would think I would be so unreasonable as to do that.

Mr. BRAND. Your attitude would mean that.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman stated that the Agricultural Department or the Post Office Department could furnish this information without expense. If they have the information, why do they not furnish it? But you could not authorize any expense by a simple resolution of the House anyway.

Mr. BRAND. There would be no expense to it.

Mr. WALSH. Well, Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER. Objection is heard. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS POKEGAMA LAKE, MINN.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 10770) granting the consent of Congress to the county of Itasca, State of Minnesota, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge across the south arm of Pokegama Lake.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of the Congress is hereby granted to the county of Itasca, State of Minnesota, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the south arm of Pokegama Lake at a point suitable to the interests of navigation in section 17, township 54, range 25, in the county of Itasca, State of Minnesota, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

With a committee amendment as follows:

Page 1, line 3, strike out "consent of the Congress is hereby granted to the county" and insert "highway bridge built by the authorities." Strike out after the word "Itasca," in line 4, the words "State of" and insert the word "County." In line 5, strike out the words "to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto." In line 7, strike out "at a point suitable to the interests of navigation." In line 9, strike out the word "the" and insert the word "said." In the same line, strike out the words "of Itasca" and insert the word "and." In the same line, strike out the words "of Minnesota, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled 'An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters,' approved March 23, 1906," and insert "is hereby legalized and the consent of Congress is hereby given to its maintenance by said county for the use of the general public: Provided, That any changes in said bridge, which the Secretary of War may deem necessary and order in the interest of navigation, shall be promptly made by the said county."

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, this bill is a little different in form from the form in which such bills are usually reported. How does it happen that the authorities proceeded to construct a bridge across this stream without any consent or approval apparently by the War Department?

Mr. WINSLOW. I regret that I am not able to give that information. It was explained to the committee by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. LARSON], who introduced the bill. It is one of those cases that come up now and then where they have obtained it in some way.

Mr. MANN. I may say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that there are many cases where there is authority to construct bridges without getting the consent of Congress, where the navigable stream lies wholly within a State, and it does not require an act of Congress under the general bridge act. It is quite possible that in a number of cases—and this may be one of them—the people constructing the bridge have assumed that the stream lies wholly within the State and have proceeded to raise the money by the sale of bonds, and then, there being some question about it, they are advised that they will have to get the consent of Congress.

Mr. WINSLOW. This is probably one of those cases.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill as amended.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended in accordance with the text.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE ACROSS RED RIVER OF THE NORTH, MINN. AND N. DAK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11634) granting the consent of Congress to the county of Norman and the town and village of Halstad, in said county, in the State of Minnesota, and the county of Traill and the town of Herberg, in said county, in the State of North Dakota, to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North on the boundary line between said States.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the consent of Congress is hereby granted to the county of Norman and the town and village of Halstad, in said county, in the State of Minnesota, and the county of Traill and the town of Herberg, in said county, in the State of North Dakota, to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto across the Red River of the North, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, at or near the section line between sections 24 and 25, township 145 north, range 49 west, fifth principal meridian, on the boundary line between Minnesota and North Dakota, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters" approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. STEENERSON, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the next bill.

BRIDGE BETWEEN DEL RIO, TEX., AND LAS VACAS, MEXICO.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11128) to authorize the construction of a bridge across the Rio Grande between the cities of Del Rio, Tex., and Las Vacas, Mexico.

The title of the bill was read.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the gentleman from Texas [Mr. HUDSPETH] if this bridge is to take the place of some existing structure in the vicinity, or is it a new project?

Mr. HUDSPETH. I would say to the gentleman from Massachusetts that they have no bridge there. They have been using a ferry. This is a new project.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman also inform the committee whether there are more available places for the erection of this bridge at the point named? I notice from the bill that it proposes to extend the privilege to a copartnership. The grant is under a corporate name, but states it is a copartnership. I am rather surprised to see a corporate name attached to a copartnership.

Mr. HUDSPETH. I would say to the gentleman from Wisconsin that for several years the citizens have been trying to accumulate enough money to build a bridge there. I got a bill passed a year ago granting them that privilege, but they did not get the funds. This copartnership consists of several people. They have got together the funds.

Mr. STAFFORD. This is to be a toll bridge?

Mr. HUDSPETH. Yes; this is to be a toll bridge.

Mr. STAFFORD. How many bridges are there in that vicinity?

Mr. HUDSPETH. There are two at El Paso. There were two at Eagle Pass, but one of them has been washed away. That is in the district of my colleague [Mr. GARNER].

Mr. STAFFORD. Were the bridges that were washed away substantial structures—steel bridges with concrete foundations?

Mr. HUDSPETH. One of them was, and thought to be a permanent structure, but an unprecedented rise in the river washed it away.

Mr. STAFFORD. How wide is the Rio Grande at this point?

Mr. HUDSPETH. At Las Vacas and Del Rio I think it is about 200 yards wide.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the bill.

The bill was read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Del Rio & Las Vacas Bridge Co., a copartnership organized and entered into under the laws of the State of Texas, be, and is hereby, authorized and empowered to construct, maintain, and operate a bridge and approaches thereto over the Rio Grande between the cities of Del Rio, Tex., and Las Vacas, Mexico, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906.

SEC. 2. That the consent of the proper authorities of the Republic of Mexico shall have been obtained before said bridge shall be built or commenced.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was accordingly read the third time and passed.

On motion of Mr. HUDSPETH, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CLAIMS OF CERTAIN AMERICAN CITIZENS.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 2235) to confer jurisdiction upon the Court of Claims to adjudicate the claims of American citizens.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. MANN. Reserving the right to object, I should like to make inquiry from some one, first, as to why it is proposed to give this authority from the years 1875 to 1896? What is the reason for fixing those dates?

Mr. SUTHERLAND. This is a Senate bill. There was one case of seizure and detention and subsequent release in 1876. Between then and 1886 there are no cases of sealers involved. As to the case of 1876, I know nothing. The bill does go back over quite a period of years, and whether to shorten the time and bring it up to 1886 would do an injustice to the 1876 claimants I do not know.

Mr. MANN. The bill provides for the dates from 1875 to 1896. The evidence submitted expressly states that it covers shipping between April 21, 1886, and April 6, 1894, only. What there may have been before or after those dates, of course, I do not know. I am not in favor of authorizing everybody who wants to go into the Court of Claims to do so without knowing anything about his claim. There is no real merit in any of these claims.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If there is no merit in these American claims, then there was no merit in the Canadian claims or in the Russian claims.

Mr. MANN. That does not follow at all.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. We demanded indemnity from Russia for seizures under similar circumstances.

Mr. MANN. That does not follow at all. The Government of the United States forbade all persons from engaging in these fur-seal operations; but there is quite a difference between the Government of the United States saying to American citizens, "You shall not do so and so" and saying to a Russian subject, "You shall not do so and so." We have some jurisdiction over American citizens. We had no jurisdiction over Russian citizens on the high seas, and that was the finding of the court. However, I am not going to argue that question.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. What would the gentleman say of those who did obey the law and who ask for consequential damages?

Mr. MANN. There are no consequential damages for those who did obey the law. There are no damages to those who did obey the law.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. In the Canadian cases we recognized that there were, and they came in for consequential damages, and within the past year the British-American Claims Commission has settled those claims of the Canadians for consequential damages.

Mr. MANN. That is all right as to the Canadians. We issued a regulation providing that no one should engage in these fur-seal operations, on the ground that the Pribilof Islands were within our territory and not on the high seas, and that the 3-mile limit did not apply, that those were inland waters. We maintained that contention, but the court of arbitration overruled us on that subject and we had to pay damages to citizens of foreign countries. Of course, it is always easy to say we ought to do as much for our own citizens as we do for citizens of foreign countries. On the other hand, our own citizens should have obeyed our laws whether we had a right to make them or not, and most of them did, but these few deliberately flaunted the law.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. The gentleman is in error about that.

Mr. MANN. I am not in error. I have been studying this particular subject for nearly 20 years, I guess.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. There are a number of specific cases where Americans who obeyed the law suffered damage.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman has been engaged in the study of this subject only a few weeks.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I have heard it discussed in the Territory for a long time.

Mr. MANN. This matter has been knocking around here in Congress ever since the Fifty-ninth Congress. I am not saying there is no merit in the gentleman's contention, but there is absolutely no merit that I have seen yet in extending the date, and I do not know what is the purpose of doing that. I am afraid of it.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I am not acquainted with the reasons for fixing that date.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman ought to find out.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. If the gentleman wants to amend by reducing the number of years, I have no objection.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman will have to find out if he wants to pass the bill by unanimous consent while I am here.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. It might be pretty difficult for me to find out just why that year was included.

Mr. MANN. It may be very difficult. I do not know how difficult it is, but I am not willing to let the bill pass under any circumstances with my consent with the dates as fixed in this bill. This being a Senate bill, if the House should amend it and it should go to conference, I would be nowhere. I can stop it now.

Mr. SUTHERLAND. Will the gentleman submit his amendment?

Mr. MANN. Why, no. Probably the gentleman would agree to the amendment. Then the bill would go back to the Senate and the Senate would disagree to the amendment and ask for a conference, and the House conferees, without any knowledge on the subject any more than the gentleman has or I have, would agree to recede from the House amendment to the Senate bill. I am too old a hand at this business to get caught in that way.

Mr. CURRY. Will the gentleman consent that the bill be passed without prejudice and remain on the calendar?

Mr. MANN. I am perfectly willing to have the bill go over and remain on the calendar and give the gentleman a chance to ascertain the information whether, if the House makes the amendments changing the date, those amendments will probably be agreed to in the Senate.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed without prejudice to give the gentleman an opportunity to obtain the information.

Mr. MANN. And I hope the lady who has this in hand will be able to give us that information.

TO LOWER AND MAINTAIN THE LEVEL OF LAKE ANDES, S. DAK.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 243) providing for the construction of a spillway and drainage ditch to lower and maintain the level of Lake Andes, S. Dak.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the consideration of this bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Reserving the right to object, when I first read this bill I was inclined to favor it, but on further consideration and on reading that part of the report which states that recent reports indicate that at the present time the lake is 3 feet lower than at high-water mark last year and is lowering very fast, I thought it was rather ridiculous for us to direct the Secretary of the Interior to build a spillway when there might not be any need for it at all. If these waters were increasing and there was danger of further damage, there might be pressing reasons for directing the Secretary of the Interior to build a spillway.

In the report made May 25, 1921, Acting Secretary Finney says:

> Recent reports indicate that at the present time the lake is 3 feet lower than at high-water mark last year, and is lowering very fast; that at least one of the artesian wells is choked up with sand and has ceased to flow; and that if left to itself, the lake may eventually reach its former level.

There are the facts as they were a year ago, and what is the use of spending $60,000 now in building a spillway?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Let me say to the gentleman that the facts as set forth in the letter of the department are not now correct. The water is higher to-day than it ever has been. There is danger that in a short time it will break over in the east and southeast, where it would overflow a whole township of splendid farm land. The wells are not closed; two of them are in the bed of the lake and are therefore pouring the water into the lake, not visible to the eye. The people interested over there have examined the wells in the lake, and the wells are open and throwing their water into the lake.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman a personal acquaintance with the conditions there?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. I have been all around the lake.

Mr. STAFFORD. When?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Two years ago this summer.

Mr. STAFFORD. But we have the report of a year ago from a representative of the department. There is no question that two years ago the conditions may have been alarming when the bill was introduced. But here is the report of a year ago where it says that the waters are receding.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Gentlemen who were here and testified last November——

Mr. STAFFORD. There is nothing in the report with reference to any testimony last November.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. On the 21st of October of last year the lake was 6 feet and 9 inches above the meander line. That is the testimony of Mr. Miller taken by a surveyor, and that profile is on file with the Indian Committee.

Mr. MANN. May I ask the gentleman a question?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Is this the case where the Indians and the Indian Office and the Representative in Congress from that State asked for an appropriation to drill an artesian well or wells in the lake so as to get water for the Indians?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. I do not know as this is the case the gentleman refers to, but Congress did appropriate money for the boring of the wells.

Mr. MANN. At the request of the Indians and the Indian Office and the Member of Congress?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. It was embraced in the Yankton Indian Reservation. They bored two wells in 1894 and two in 1907. As evidence that these wells were the cause of the destruction, I wish to say that on the shores of the lake there are a number of trees many years old standing in the water, indicating that if the lake had been as high before these trees would never have reached that age.

Mr. MANN. We did provide the money and the wells were bored at the Government expense for the benefit of the Indians at their request?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. The Government having done that, there is so much water that they want to get rid of it?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Yes.

Mr. MANN. At the Government expense all the time.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Let me say that there are 2,000 acres of land submerged, 300 acres owned by the Indians under the jurisdiction of the department. Claims have been filed and are pending before Congress amounting to over $200,000. An agreement has been entered into and is on file in the department in which the claimants have agreed to waive their rights to their claims on the condition that this spillway be constructed.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think that if at the request of citizens of a locality in one of the arid regions we provide for the construction and drilling of artesian wells we are then obligated to stop the water flowing because it flows too rapidly?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Perhaps if those who asked for it were the only ones damaged, it might be different, but there are many there who had nothing to do with asking for it, who have obtained land since that time, or purchased land since that time.

Mr. MANN. I know they did it, but here was a case where in order to supply water in a more or less arid region we were asked to drill artesian wells. Having drilled the wells they say they get too much water, and that they have got to get rid of it. I am merely stating the facts of the case.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. They were drilled to supply the Indians with water. If the flow from these wells has damaged adjacent property owners, somebody is liable for that damage. There is no question that damage has been done. There are fine farms over there with buildings, where the buildings are standing in water now 8 feet deep.

Mr. MANN. I think the gentleman is right. There is no question that damage has been done. It may be that the Government ought to pay for it, but after all it is a good deal, is it not, to come with nice hands to the Treasury of the United States and say, "give me money," and after they get it to come back and say, "give me some more, because you gave me first too much."

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. The Indian office itself will reclaim enough land to more than pay for the cost of this ditch.

Mr. MANN. Oh, no.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Three hundred acres, it is conceded, the Indians own that are now under water; splendid, fine land, and it is not only the land that is submerged, but that water is rising every year, and there is danger that a vast area of land will be submerged to the east of the lake within the next two or three years unless the level of the lake is controlled.

Mr. MANN. As far as I can read the report, the Indian office to-day thinks the Government is not under obligation to pay these people, although I think there is some merit in the gentleman's claim.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. The gentleman who went out there said that he did not believe the Government was liable, but that does not change the fact that these wells are the contributing cause to the rise in that water, because if the water had ever reached this level in this lake before there certainly would have been evidence of it on the shore line. It would have killed these trees now standing in several feet of water and which are estimated to be over 70 years old. They were there long before the construction of these wells—positive evidence of the fact that the waters in this lake bed never reached the level of these trees before these wells were brought in. Here is the picture of a tree, now dead, standing in several feet of water, the tree, it is stated, is over 70 years old. There was no water around it prior to the construction of the wells. It was a sound, live tree until the rising waters of the lake surrounded its trunk.

Mr. STAFFORD. Does not the gentleman think it is going quite far enough if we provide an authorization without a direction to the Secretary of the Interior.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. I do not know that I gather the gentleman's meaning?

Mr. STAFFORD. Under the phraseology of the bill we direct the Commissioner of Indian Affairs to construct this spillway. The facts are in dispute. The department, according to the last report to the committee, says there is no need for this spillway. Why not leave it to the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior?

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. Yes; I will accept an amendment to that effect.

Mr. STAFFORD. We don't want to construct a spillway if it is drying up, as the country out there is drying up in some districts.

Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON. I am willing to provide for just an authorization.

Mr. STAFFORD. With that assurance, I withdraw the reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Commissioner of Indian Affairs is hereby authorized and directed to construct a spillway and drainage ditch that will lower and maintain the level of Lake Andes, S. Dak., to 2 feet above the present Government meander line.

With the following committee amendment:

Line 7, after the word "line," insert "and there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, the sum of $60,000, or so much thereof as may be necessary, for the construction of said spillway and drainage ditch.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. STAFFORD: Page 1, line 4, after the word "authorized," strike out the words "and directed."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CHRISTOPHERSON, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

TRANSFERRING CERTAIN LANDS TO HAWAII.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11589) to provide for the transfer of the lands and buildings of the Federal leprosy investigation station at Kalawao, on the island of Molokai, in the Territory of Hawaii, to the Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, this is rather a lengthy bill and I would like to have some explanation from either the gentleman from California [Mr. CURRY] or the Delegate from Hawaii. I suppose it is a very simple matter, but I have not had an opportunity to examine the measure.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, the reason the bill is lengthy is because it describes the metes and bounds of the land. This land is about 502.6 acres. It was deeded to the United States Government by the Territory of Hawaii for the purpose of building thereon a leprosarium, which the Government constructed at an expense of about $70,000. After it was constructed it was found that it was not in the proper location, the climate was bad, the winds were high, and it was not a good place for lepers to be treated in a sanitarium. The Molokai leper settlement is in the neighborhood of this tract of land. Not being available for the purpose desired, the Territory of Hawaii itself, in the city of Honolulu, constructed a leprosarium at an expense of $40,000 and put in a laboratory for the use of the Federal Government. That is being used by the Federal Government, and has been for some time. The department wrecked all of the buildings that were of any use at Molokai and took the material away for Federal use. That which is left there is contaminated by being inhabited by lepers and is rapidly deteriorating. It is costing the Government to maintain a keeper. The land belonged to the Territory of Hawaii. It is simply a retransfer of land from the Federal Government to the Territory, not to individuals, and it becomes a part of the public land of the Territory of Hawaii.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized and empowered to convey by quitclaim deed to the Territory of Hawaii the lands and buildings thereon of the Federal leprosy investigation station at Kalawao, on the island of Molokai, said lands being fully described in the proclamation of the Governor of the Territory of Hawaii, dated June 28, 1905, by which such lands were ceded to the United States of America, and also to transfer to the Territory of Hawaii the equipment of the said station except such parts thereof as may be required for the use of the Public Health Service.

The said lands are more particularly described as follows:

(a) Description of landing site situated on the east side of Waikolu stream, Waikolu, Molokai, Territory of Hawaii, selected by Surgeon General Wyman, Public Health and Marine Hospital Service, as portion of Federal leprosarium.

Beginning at an iron bolt on rocky point overlooking sea and known as Hawaiian government survey trigonometry station Leinaopapio, the true azimuth and distance to Hawaiian government survey trigonometry station Kaupikiawa being 132° 12′ 39″ 11,164.5 feet and to Hawaiian government trigonometry station Mokapu being 202° 32′ 9″ 4,255.1 feet, and the azimuth to Kalawao Protestant Church spire being 105° 29′, and to the cross on Kalawao Catholic Church being 103° 43′, as shown on Government survey registered map No. 2309, and running by true azimuths:

(1) Up center of ridge to rocky ledge in same, the direct azimuth and distance being 330° 30′ 1,418 feet; (2) 79° 43′ 1,174 feet down side of ridge to a X on large solid stone on the east bank of Waikolu stream; (3) thence along the east bank of Waikolu stream to high-water mark on beach; the direct azimuth and distance being 183° 5′ 448 feet; (4) thence along beach along high-water mark, the direct azimuth and distance being 240° 555 feet; (5) then along the foot of bluff, the direct azimuth and distance being 161° 53′ 834 feet; (6) 289° 18′ 224 feet up ridge to the point of beginning. Area, 18.9 acres.

(b) Description of spring site, situated on the east side of Waikolu Valley, Waikolu, Molokai, Territory of Hawaii, selected by Surgeon General Wyman, Public Health and Marine Hospital Service, as portion of Federal leprosarium:

Beginning at X on stone in trail up the east side of Waikolu Valley, the coordinates from Hawaiian government survey trigonometry station Leinaoapapio being south 2,478 feet and east 219 feet, as shown on Government survey registered map No. 2309, and running by true azimuths:

(1) Two hundred and fifty-four degrees thirty-three minutes three hundred and eighty-five feet up ridge; (2) 351° 750 feet along Territorial government water reserve; (3) 117° 53′ 466 feet down ridge to a X on stone in trail; (4) thence along each side of trail, the direct azimuth and distance being 215° 40′ 90 feet; (5) 176° 53′ 227 feet; (6) 136° 168 feet to the point of beginning. Area, 4.5 acres.

(c) Description of hospital site, Walawao, Molokai, Territory of Hawaii, selected by Surg. Gen. Walter Wyman, Public Health and Marine Hospital Service, as portion of Federal leprosarium:

Beginning at X on large rock in stone wall on edge of bluff overlooking sea, the true azimuth and distance to Hawaiian government survey trigonometry station Kaupikiawa being 159° 3′ 6,130.8 feet, and to Hawaiian government survey trigonometry station Leinaopapio being 286° 15′ 30″ 6,332.5 feet as shown on government survey registered map No. 2309, and running by true azimuths:

Area, 114 acres.

(d) Description of reservation site, situated in Kalawao and Makanalua, Molokai, Territory of Hawaii, selected by Surg. Gen. Walter Wyman, Public Health and Marine Hospital Service, as portion of Federal leprosarium:

Beginning at Hawaiian government survey trigonometry station Kaukaho, on the southwest rim of Kauhako Crater near graves, the true azimuth and distance to Hawaiian government survey trigonometry station Kalawao, being 175° 45′ 8,088.9 feet; to Hawaiian government survey trigonometry station Leinaopapio, being 291° 15′ 9″ 14,461.6 feet, as shown on Government survey registered map No. 1728, and running by true azimuths:

(1) One hundred and thirty-seven degrees 21′ 1,692 feet; (2) 227° 21′ 6,942 feet high-water mark at seacoast; (3) thence along seacoast along high-water mark, the direct azimuth and distance being 336° 10′ 3,762 feet; (4) 47° 21′ 350 feet to Hawaiian government survey trigonometry station Kaupikiawa, the true azimuth and distance to Leinaopapio △ being 312° 12′ 7″ 11,164.5 feet; (5) 47° 21′ 5,378 feet to an iron bolt on the north side of main government road; (6) 137° 21′ 1,869 feet to the point of beginning. Area, 502.6 acres.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURRY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

ANNOUNCEMENT.

The SPEAKER. The Speaker was notified by the Acting Secretary of War that the Marine Corps from Quantico is on the march to Gettysburg, and this evening at 7 o'clock will be reviewed on the White Lot back of the White House and Members of Congress are invited to witness the parade.

WOMAN DELEGATE FROM HAWAII.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11590) to amend sections 34 and 40 of the organic act of the Territory of Hawaii.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That section 34 and 40 of the organic act of the Territory of Hawaii be amended by deleting therefrom the word "male," so that said sections when amended shall read as follows:

"SEC. 34. That in order to be eligible to election as a senator a person shall—

"Be a citizen of the United States;

"Have attained the age of 30 years;

"Have resided in the Hawaiian Islands not less than three years and be qualified to vote for senators in the district from which he or she is elected."

"SEC. 40. That in order to be eligible to be a member of the house of representatives the person shall, at the time election—

"Have attained the age of 25 years;

"Be a citizen of the United States;

"Have resided in the Hawaiian Islands not less than three years and shall be qualified to vote for representatives in the district from which he or she is elected."

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to the bill. I move to amend page 1, line 4, after the word "Hawaii," by inserting the language which I send to the Clerk's desk.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "Hawaii," insert "being an act entitled an act to provide a government for the Territory of Hawaii approved April 30, 1900."

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. CURRY, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

PROHIBITING INTERSTATE SALE OF CERTAIN ARTICLES CONTAMINATED WITH ANTHRAX.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 7156) to prohibit the interstate sale of certain articles contaminated with anthrax.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I suppose I am one of the few persons of the House who can look dispassionately upon a bill of this sort, although the author of the bill ought to be able as well as myself. I would like to ask this question. Suppose a shipment is on the way at the time this bill becomes a law. Would the property be forfeited and the importer fined or imprisoned?

Mr. WEBSTER. I think it would have the right to land——

Mr. MANN. That does not answer the question.

Mr. WEBSTER. I have no doubt that he would be subject to this statute if it comes in after its enactment.

Mr. MANN. Does the gentleman think somebody who ships an article to the United States and then Congress provides by law that such article shall not be admitted, that the man to whom it is shipped ought to be fined or sent to jail because such shipment has been made to him?

Mr. WEBSTER. No; I have no doubt that no such result——

Mr. MANN. But that is what this bill provides.

Mr. WEBSTER. I think not. I do not think there is any inherent right of a shipper to send to the shores of the United States a thing that is infected and permit that article to produce death, and that is the case with reference to these brushes made of horsehair. These men who send these brushes here are cognizant of this fact. It is a scientific fact.

Mr. MANN. But whether it causes death or not, you forbid the right to import a certain article into the United States. I suppose we have that authority as to any article; I am not questioning that; I do not know, but I assume we have.

Mr. WEBSTER. The question the gentleman asks is highly interesting, and it takes one into the realm of discussion of hazy principles of criminal law as to when an act begins and when it ends; and if an act is continuous and a law is enacted in the meantime, whether the criminal act dates back to the time when the act began. That is rather a nice question of criminal law and involves the question whether there was any intention on the part of anyone to violate. The right to pass ex post facto laws is also involved. I have no doubt that no sensible prosecutor would attempt to enforce the statute in that particular under those circumstances.

Mr. MANN. Well, because it was such a nice question I submitted it to my distinguished friend, although when he replies that the law will not be enforced by a sensible prosecutor that does not help it any, because we have some very sensible prosecutors—I think we have a very able one at the head of the Department of Justice—but there are some whom I do not have so much confidence in. However, not being in any danger from this, I have no desire to have my friend from Washington run the risk of losing his life by the use of a shaving brush made abroad. However, I do not think there is much danger. I believe it is really in the interest of the man who is making shaving brushes in the United States.

Mr. WEBSTER. No; that is not the case, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois. This bill has been unanimously approved by the brush industry of the United States.

Mr. MANN. Certainly they have.

Mr. WEBSTER. The national association and——

Mr. MANN. Yes; it is to their interest.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WEBSTER. I will.

Mr. WALSH. The bill, as I read it, particularly prohibits the import or interstate shipment of shaving or lather brushes made from horsehair?

Mr. WEBSTER. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. It does not make any difference whether the brush has been disinfected or is not contaminated with anthrax and the importer or shipper is able to say that it is free from infection, the importation or shipment is prohibited notwithstanding?

Mr. WEBSTER. Yes; and the reason——

Mr. WALSH. Then why is anthrax carried in the title? That has got nothing to do with it. The amended title has got anthrax in it. That has nothing to do with the bill. We are trying to shut out the shipment of horsehair lather and shaving brushes.

Mr. WEBSTER. I think the use of anthrax in that connection might be of assistance to this bill.

Mr. WALSH. The title is no part of the bill.

Mr. WEBSTER. Very often the title is referred to in construing a bill.

Mr. WALSH. Not very often.

Mr. MANN. Not unless the bill means nothing.

Mr. WEBSTER. In the very situation I am about to suggest it means a great deal. This bill is passed under the commerce clause of the Constitution, plus the power to enact necessary and proper laws to carry into effect the powers specifically granted. It is in the nature of a health regulation. The court will take judicial knowledge of the fact that anthrax is a deadly disease, and it characterizes the bill and enables the court to determine its constitutionality.

Mr. WALSH. Suppose the shipment upon consideration or examination shows that there was not a single brush infected with anthrax, then where does the question of conserving the public health enter in?

Mr. WEBSTER. The answer to that question, I will say to the gentleman from Massachusetts, is based upon the scientific testimony of witnesses representing the Public Health Service. It is shown by those experts that this anthrax germ is a spore-forming germ; that it attaches itself to horsehair, and that the ordinary methods of sterilization will not destroy it. You can boil it for hours at a time, and the germ will still be there, and if it enters an abrasion on the face, caused by shaving, it will very likely produce death. All the chemical methods of sterilization that are strong enough to destroy the germ destroy the horsehair, and the brush is worthless. That is the testimony of the experts before the committee, and there is no controversy about it.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. MANN. Suppose somebody wanted to know whether he could import shaving brushes into the United States and wanted to look up the law on the subject, how would he find that information? There would be nothing about shaving brushes in your title.

Mr. WEBSTER. I am not responsible, I will say to the gentleman from Illinois, for the method which the compiler of the Federal statutes uses in indexing the laws. If a law is placed upon the statute books, it is there for the information of anybody who wishes to get it.

Mr. WALSH. You are partly responsible for the title of the bill, because you are the author of it.

Mr. WEBSTER. I am not the author of it. It seems a little inconsistent to say that the title is such an unimportant part of the bill when construing it, and yet it is to characterize the whole thing when it comes to indexing it.

Mr. MANN. That is all the title is for, to characterize it so that people can find it. Here we deliberately put in a title that means nothing, and by which anybody can find anything. Nobody would look——

Mr. WINGO. Mr. Speaker, I shall not object to prohibiting in interstate commerce any article which is contaminated with a dangerous or infectious germ or disease; but here is the trouble. You start with a proposition to do something, but you do not. You prohibit the carrier, instead of getting at the fault. You simply say we are incompetent and inefficient, and, if inspection falls down, that we are too indolent to cut out the bad and let in the good, or else we are incapable of doing it. I do not believe it is an impossibility to get proper inspection. If we follow this plan and go and exclude everything that is a possible transmitter of infectious or contagious diseases, we would put up the bars for 90 per cent of our commerce. Ninety per cent of the people of some countries in Europe have certain bodily diseases which is very bad, but we do not see fit to debar everybody from those countries from visiting this country.

Mr. WEBSTER. Theoretically the gentleman's position is sound, but in applying it to a case like this it is impractical. The transportation of shaving brushes is a rather inconsequential thing. It requires expensive machinery of a very scientific kind to determine the existence of these spores on the horsehair out of which these poor and cheapest kind of shaving brushes are made, and the cost of enforcing such a law would be wholly disproportionate to the situation sought to be dealt with. No harm will come from the denial of the use of horsehair in shaving brushes, because it is conceded to be the poorest kind of shaving brush made. The manufacturers of them concede it themselves.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Such a brush was never used until the last war. It is a practice that started during the war.

Mr. WINGO. Of course, we all want to protect the public health against disease. But there is a way to do things and there is a way not to do them. The title of your bill says you are going to do a commendable thing—that is, you are going to prohibit brushes contaminated with anthrax in interstate commerce. If you did that, it would be a commendable thing. But you debar horsehair brushes.

Mr. WEBSTER. It prohibits the importation into this country of shaving brushes made of horsehair, it being scientifically determined that horsehair shaving brushes are the means by which this deadly disease is communicated. If a man uses one of these cheap brushes, and there is an abrasion on the cheek, scarcely noticeable to the naked eye, inoculation takes place and the man dies.

Mr. WINGO. That is not the only way. You take the finest kind of brushes, and some of them that are imported from some countries I would not use at all, unless I knew personally they had been sterilized, and even then I would be in doubt about them. It is not the disease itself that you want to shut out. You say we will shut out all horsehair, not simply the infected.

Mr. WEBSTER. We do not do that. We shut out shaving brushes made of horsehair.

Mr. WINGO. You do not say all shaving brushes not properly inspected. You do not require proper inspection to shut them out. The answer to that is that it is an elaborate, expensive process. If you want to put on the importer the burden and the expense of proper inspection, of course that would be proper.

Mr. MANN. Is not this the fact, that the only way you can determine whether a horsehair shaving brush is affected with anthrax is by whether or not you get anthrax from the use of it?

Mr. WINGO. I do not know. I am not an expert.

Mr. MANN. If you do not get the disease, you assume there is no anthrax. If you do get it, you are dead, and it no longer matters. They can not find out without trying it.

Mr. WINGO. So the gentleman from Illinois is in favor of shutting out all of it?

Mr. MANN. I can say that I can look at this matter from a wholly disinterested point of view. I think it would be wiser to prevent the horsehair shaving brushes from being used than to let one man in ten million die from infection by anthrax.

Mr. WINGO. And prevent the use of horsehair brushes in the United States?

Mr. MANN. Yes; and I do not think anybody will miss the use of proper shaving brushes if they are not permitted to use horsehair shaving brushes.

Mr. WINGO. Who can tell a horsehair brush from a goat-hair brush?

Mr. MANN. I could not tell a horsehair brush from a pig's hair brush, but the men in the trade know the difference well enough.

Mr. WINGO. The gentleman from Illinois is more than a mere layman. He is an expert on this health service. On his assurance, I do not think I shall object. If he wants to shut out all horsehair brushes, I will not complain.

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to object. There is a grave constitutional doubt connected with this bill that perhaps the attention of the House should be directed to.

The proposal here is to prohibit interstate commerce in all horsehair shaving brushes, whereas, of course, only such brushes as are infected with anthrax are harmful. The point is whether, under the guise of regulating commerce, we can forbid commerce in articles which may be entirely harmless. Manifestly we have no power to forbid commerce in harmless articles; if we concede that an article is in its nature harmless, Congress can not forbid commerce in it. The point is whether Congress may prohibit interstate commerce in articles and commodities which may be vehicles for disease germs, but which are not harmful in themselves and are not necessarily infected.

Now, then, horsehair shaving brushes are harmless articles unless they are infected with the germs of anthrax. Horsehair shaving brushes are harmful if they are infected with other disease germs as well as anthrax. The difference is merely one of degree and not of kind. In that connection it must be observed that the prohibition of commerce does not extend to all horsehair but merely to horsehair which is used for making shaving brushes. There are many articles made out of horsehair. Mattresses are stuffed with it; haircloth is made of it; other brushes are made of it. These horsehairs may be infected with anthrax, but under this bill interstate commerce in them is entirely legitimate and permissible. Yet if it so happens that the horsehair is made into a shaving brush, immediately, under this bill, it becomes necessarily harmful, and Congress assumes the power to prohibit it absolutely. I voted against this bill in committee because I had grave doubts as to its constitutionality. I do not intend to object to it, but I thought it would be well that the House should be informed as to the doubt which I have as to its constitutionality.

The SPEAKER. Objection is withdrawn. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read the first section of the bill, as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That it shall be unlawful for any person to import into the United States from any foreign country any shaving or lather brush containing horsehair.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I offer an amendment to section 1.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas offers an amendment to section 1 of the bill. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WHITE of Kansas: Page 1, lines 4 and 5, after the word "shaving," in line 4, strike out the word "or"; and in line 5, between the word "lather" and the word "brush" insert the words "or hair," so that it will read: "That it shall be unlawful for any person to import into the United States from any foreign country any shaving, lather, or hair brush containing horsehair."

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I reserve a point of order against that.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. What is the point of order?

Mr. STAFFORD. I press the point of order. The gentleman from Kansas wants to know what the point of order is. It is that it is not germane. I will reserve the point of order.

Mr. WINGO. Does the gentleman mean to say that lather is not germane to shaving?

Mr. STAFFORD. Yes; but horsehair is not germane to a lather brush.

Mr. WINGO. Lather is germane to the hairbrush. You can split a hair, but you can not lather. [Laughter.]

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I am not familiar with the rules of the House to the extent that I feel competent to discuss the point of order. I wish I might have unanimous consent to speak to the merits of my amendment. If there is no objection, I will do so.

I take it, Mr. Speaker, in the interest of the health of the American people that this amendment should be included in this section of the bill. We are trying to exclude the importation of a brush into the United States in the interest of the public health. Now, it is stated by the chairman of the committee or subcommittee, as the case may be—I just came in during the discussion—that horsehair shaving brushes should be excluded. It would seem that it is fully as essential to prohibit the importation of a hairbrush that is liable to carry a deadly germ and imperil the life of the citizen, and even of some of our country's statesmen. I brush my hair less and less, of course, as the years go by. Why would there not be the same danger in a horsehair hairbrush, the same menace to the public health, the same peril to the lives of our citizens? Suppose there might be a slight abrasion of the skin where the hair is thin. Might it not have the same deadly and fatal result, from which there would be no recourse? Because the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MANN] says, "When you have anthrax you are dead." You can not protect yourself. [Laughter.]

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. I shall be glad to yield.

Mr. MANN. It is a fact, is it not, that the gentleman from Washington [Mr. WEBSTER], who reported the bill, would not be in any danger of a hairbrush reaching the scalp on the top of his head——

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Whereas——

Mr. MANN. Whereas the gentleman from Kansas might be in imminent danger from anthrax from an infected horsehair brush? [Laughter.] Perhaps that is why it was not included by the gentleman from Washington. He is not afraid of it.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. I am speaking in the deepest seriousness, Mr. Speaker and gentlemen, and I hope the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] will withdraw his point of order.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I am approaching the status of the gentleman from Kansas [Mr. WHITE], so far as the hair on the top of the head is concerned, and I will withdraw the reservation of the point of order in consequence. [Laughter.]

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That any shaving brush or lather brush containing horsehair, whether imported separately or contained in packages with other goods entitled to entry, shall not be admitted to entry; and all such articles shall be proceeded against, seized, and forfeited in manner prescribed by law.

SEC. 3. That it shall be unlawful for any person to ship any shaving or lather brush containing horsehair from one State or Territory in the United States or the District of Columbia to any other State or Territory in the United States, or to the District of Columbia.

SEC. 4. That this act shall take effect on October 1, 1921.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word. The House has just inserted an amendment to cover hairbrushes. If that amendment is to remain in the bill in section 1 it ought to be in section 2 and in section 3.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the same amendment in relation to section 3.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

Mr. MANN. In section 2 it would be—

Any shaving brush, lather brush, or hairbrush.

Mr. WINGO. That should be inserted in section 2 and section 3 both.

Mr. MANN. Section 3 would have the same amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. White of Kansas: Page 1, line 6, after the word "brush" strike out the word "or" and after the word "brush" where it appears the second time, insert the words "or hairbrush."

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I desire to oppose the amendment briefly. I do not think this amendment ought to be in this bill. I do not think the first amendment should have been agreed to. This is a good bill. It accomplishes a very useful purpose. If we load it up with a lot of outside articles like hairbrushes, probably the bill will not be passed. It is extremely hard to get a bill of this kind passed anyhow. It stops the trade in certain legitimate articles of commerce. If you add to it hairbrushes, about which the committee has taken no evidence and has no knowledge as to the number manufactured or the interests involved or anything of that kind, the probabilities are that we will get nowhere with this bill.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Let me finish this statement. The gentleman from Kansas [Mr. WHITE] speaks of hairbrushes. So far as I am aware there was no case stated before the committee where anthrax had been communicated to anybody through a hairbrush. It is introduced into the circulation when the skin is cut and lather is applied by the infected brush to the cut or abraded spot. But nobody is going to cut his head with a hairbrush.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes; I yield.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. I think, probably on account of the absence of hirsute adornment on my dome, Members have not taken me seriously. I am speaking in the deepest sincerity. Does the gentleman know that the anthrax germ is not present in hairbrushes? Might there not be a slight abrasion of the skin on the head of some gentleman whose hair is a bit thin, and would not an infected hairbrush communicate the disease?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I think the chairman of the committee, and also Judge Webster, will verify my statement that, so far as any testimony before the committee was concerned, it showed that the disease is communicated through cuts on the face when a man is in the act of shaving. It is a violent assumption that anyone would brush his head with a hairbrush when his head was bleeding and so infect his blood with the spores of this disease. This amendment will not help the bill, but rather will imperil it, because you will get up against interests engaged in the manufacture of hairbrushes and you will have trouble in getting the bill through the Senate.

Mr. MANN. They do not make hairbrushes out of horsehair.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Did the committee have anyone except Mr. McCoy before it?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes; we had quite extensive hearings and considered this matter carefully. This question of broadening out this proposition was considered. It was the advice of those who testified before our committee that we should not broaden it in any respect, and we restricted it to this particular article, which is extremely dangerous. It is unwise to enlarge the scope of this bill unless there is some useful purpose to be accomplished.

Mr. MANN. Does not the gentleman think it is a useful purpose to prevent the gentleman from Kansas being infected with anthrax?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes; but the gentleman from Kansas is not going to catch anthrax from a hairbrush, nor is anybody else; and the testimony showed that a great many good men have died from anthrax, which is, as I understand it, an incurable disease, fatal when you get it, and communicated by infected shaving brushes.

Mr. MANN. Did the committee consider also the use of hand brushes—flesh brushes?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. This matter is fresher in Judge WEBSTER'S mind than it is in mine. We asked the Department of Public Health as to other kinds of brushes, and we were advised very strongly to limit the bill to this particular brush.

Mr. MANN. Horsehair brushes?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Horsehair shaving brushes.

Mr. WEBSTER. I do not recall any statement before our committee that the horsehair is used in the manufacture of hair brushes, and it is my impression that there are no such brushes. I do know that the experts of the Public Health Service advised that we confine our bill to the lather brushes, because that was the brush that caused the harm.

Mr. MANN. The lather brush has to be a very soft brush.

Mr. WEBSTER. And, of course, it is used in connection with a razor, where abrasions are very likely to occur.

Mr. MANN. A hair brush is very different.

Mr. WEBSTER. Certainly.

Mr. VOIGT. Was there any evidence before the committee that hair brushes were made of horsehair?

Mr. WEBSTER. No; there was no evidence about it at all.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the chairman if the testimony before his committee disclosed the fact that there had been any fatalities from the use of these horsehair shaving brushes?

Mr. WEBSTER. Oh, yes; a large number. They examined 35 cases of anthrax in New York alone, and in 16 of them death occurred, and every one of them was traceable to the use of a horsehair shaving brush, which upon examination was found to be infected with anthrax germs.

Mr. WALSH. Were those brushes manufactured in the State of New York?

Mr. WEBSTER. We have no means of knowing.

Mr. WALSH. If they were, then this bill would not prevent that.

Mr. WEBSTER. It would not; we could not prevent the manufacture and sale of brushes wholly within one State, because of lack of constitutional power.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kansas.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WHITE of Kansas) there were 18 ayes and 17 noes.

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point that no quorum is present. The Chair will count.

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw the point of order.

So the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WHITE of Kansas. Now, Mr. Speaker, I offer my amendment to section 3.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 2, strike out the word "or" after the word "shaving," and after the word "lather" insert the words "or hair."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, strike out lines 6 and 7.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I desire to be heard on the amendment. When the bill was introduced there was a date as to when the bill should take effect. Does the gentleman think that we ought to pass a bill making punishable a thing of this sort where the goods may be on the way, without fixing a date when the bill shall take effect?

Mr. WEBSTER. Speaking for myself alone, I can think of no objection to an amendment if the gentleman will offer one stating a date when the bill shall take effect with respect to foreign shipments. I do not think we ought to let the fellows get rid of the anthrax-affected brushes before the law takes effect.

Mr. MANN. They may be in the course of shipment.

Mr. WEBSTER. If the bill can be so worded as not to apply to shipments in transit at the time the bill becomes effective, I would have no objection.

Mr. MANN. That will come later.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk completed the reading of the bill, as follows:

SEC. 5. That the word "person" as used in this act shall mean natural persons, firms, associations, copartnerships, and corporations.

SEC. 6. That any person violating any of the provisions of this act shall, upon conviction, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than one year, or by both such fine and imprisonment, in the discretion of the court.

With the following committee amendments:

Page 2, line 13, after the word "for," insert the words "not more than," and amend the title so as to read: "A bill to prohibit the importation and the interstate shipment of certain articles contaminated with anthrax."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment to section 6:

Page 2, line 15, after the word "court," add a new section as follows:

"SEC. 6. This act shall not be effective in the case of goods actually in transit at the time of the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment:

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. MANN: Page 2, line 15, after the word "court," add a new section as follows:

"SEC. 6. This act shall not be effective in the case of goods actually in transit at the time of the passage of this act."

The SPEAKER. The question is on the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. WEBSTER, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I was going to ask the gentleman if he had any objection to amending the title by prohibiting the importation and interstate shipment of certain articles made of horsehair.

Mr. WEBSTER. No; you would have to find contamination by anthrax in each shipment.

The SPEAKER. The title has been amended.

Mr. WEBSTER. We want to prohibit the shipment for the reason that we want to avoid the inspection to see whether these anthrax germs are on it. It was shown to the committee that these brushes made of horsehair are cheap, that they sell in the 5 and 10 cent stores, and it would cost 6 or 7 cents to have them inspected.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, amending the title does not make any difference about the operation of the bill. It does not affect whether the thing is going to be inspected or not inspected, prohibited or not prohibited. I was thinking about the index, and I thought if horsehair is referred to in the title it would give some aid. However, if the gentleman does not want it, very well.

Mr. WEBSTER. I would prefer to have the title as it is.

Mr. WALSH. Very well.

AMERICAN RED CROSS.

Mr. FESS. Mr. Speaker, I present a conference report upon Senate Joint Resolution 43, to grant authority to continue the use of the temporary buildings of the American Red Cross headquarters in the city of Washington, D. C., for printing under the rules.

BRIDGE ACROSS MISSISSIPPI RIVER, LA.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11626) to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Baton Rouge, La.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is it really intended to ever construct this bridge?

Mr. FAVROT. As I understand it, it is the purpose to construct the bridge.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman hopes so, anyway.

Mr. FAVROT. I hope so, anyway. This was authorized in 1914, just prior to the breaking out of the World War. Consequently, nothing has been done, because of the war conditions and the conditions immediately following the war. This point is a very important railroad river crossing. Five railroads interchange freight across the river at that point.

Mr. WALSH. Then it would seem they ought to go ahead and construct the bridge. This permission was granted in 1914, was extended in 1916, again in 1919, and now we are asked to extend it again in 1922. It is not such an important point that anybody down there seems to be sufficiently interested in it to begin the construction of the bridge.

Mr. FAVROT. I just stated to the gentleman that the first authorization for the construction of the bridge was just prior to the breaking out of the World War.

Mr. WALSH. I observed that from the date given in the report.

Mr. FAVROT. Consequently, nothing was done during the World War, and the conditions immediately following the World War were such that they have prevented anything being done.

Mr. WALSH. What did the World War in Europe between 1914 and 1917 have to do with constructing the bridge?

Mr. FAVROT. The conditions in this country were in a very much demoralized state, and the greater part of the railroads were in the hands of the Government.

Mr. WALSH. Between 1914 and 1917?

Mr. FAVROT. Oh, no; but between 1914 and 1917 business conditions in this country, due to the war in Europe, were very much demoralized.

Mr. WALSH. That is not my recollection. I know that during part of that time business was very much demoralized, but for a different reason. I have no objection, and I thank the gentleman for the information.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the time for commencing and completing the bridge authorized by the act of Congress approved July 17, 1914, to be built across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Baton Rouge, La., are hereby extended three years and six years, respectively, from the date of approval hereof.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out the word "time" and inserting in place thereof the word "times" in line 3.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Line 3, strike out the word "time" and insert the word "times."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 2. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The SPEAKER. The question now is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. FAVROT, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

CONSTRUCTION OF PUBLIC BUILDING AT PARIS, TEX.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11298) amending existing law which authorizes the construction of a public building at Paris, Tex., so as to authorize and empower the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire a new site for same by exchanging therefor land and property now owned by the United States Government in said city; and to authorize the erection on said new site, when acquired, a public building suitable for post-office purposes; and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, personally I think the policy of the Government should be, when it plans to provide ultimately for public buildings for housing other activities than the post office, to make provision once and for all for the construction of the building, because there is the additional expense to which the Government will be put in the construction of a building, as this bill provides for an additional superstructure, which will be entirely wasted when the new story is added.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. STAFFORD. I estimate offhand that the amount involved to carry out a provision of this kind for constructing so that accommodations will be ultimately provided for the court and other offices will be something like $15,000 to $20,000. Why waste that money by making this temporary provision?

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I quite agree with the gentleman that it would be better policy in this individual case to increase the authorization and thereby permit the construction of a building adapted not only for the post-office business but for all of the Federal activities. However, this is an emergency proposition, and this legislation is sought because of the destruction of practically the entire town by fire. It has been subsequently rebuilt. To launch upon a general policy at this time of increasing authorizations would necessarily involve the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds in much-needed legislation in this regard, which probably could not now be brought before the House for consideration. It is the matter of avoiding the adoption of that policy at this time that has led to the reporting of this bill rather than of another bill also introduced by Mr. BLACK, of Texas, asking to increase the authorization.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman through the committee or otherwise obtained any estimate as to the additional cost that would be involved by providing a second story so as to ultimately accommodate the court and other officers?

Mr. LANHAM. Yes, sir; I will say to the gentleman that the committee has had that matter up with the Supervising Architect, and I have also had it up personally with him. The total cost for the completion of the building for housing these various Federal activities would be, according to the estimate of the Supervising Architect, $225,000.

Mr. STAFFORD. Has the gentleman any figure from the Supervising Architect as to the wastage there will be by providing a concrete roof and making it suitable ultimately for a second story?

Mr. LANHAM. I have not that in figures. However, the Supervising Architect has assured me the cost will be relatively slight. This one story and basement will be built in such a way as to accommodate a second story when authorized, and the flooring of the second story will be built at the time of the construction of this one-story structure, so it will be a very simple proposition to remove the temporary roof and continue the second story.

Mr. STAFFORD. I am not an architect or a builder, but I am at a loss to know how a roof of concrete construction providing for drainage can be so constructed that it can be used for a floor for a second story. My little acquaintance with that construction leads me to believe that a concrete floor can not be utilized for flooring purposes for a second story.

Mr. LANHAM. The gentleman misunderstood me. I did not mean that the concrete floor would serve as a roof, but that in this construction the $170,000, which has been heretofore authorized, will be sufficient for this first story and the basement, and also a flooring for a second story, and this temporary roof will be placed above that flooring. The authorization is sufficient for that purpose.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I recognize the legislative difficulty that the committee has in not providing a sufficient amount for completing the building all at once, and although I would rather favor that policy I withdraw the reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That existing law authorizing the Secretary of the Treasury to expend $170,000 "for the purpose of supplying the necessary building for the Federal court, post office, and other Government offices at Paris, Tex.," be, and the same is hereby, amended so as to authorize and empower the Secretary of the Treasury, in his discretion, to exchange and convey to the city of Paris, Tex., by the usual quitclaim deed, the present Federal building and so much of the site thereof in the city of Paris, Tex., bounded as follows: Fronting 123.7 feet, more or less, on the east side of North Church Street, and extending eastwardly of that width along the south side of East Houston Street 107.4 feet, more or less, for the title in fee simple to the site known as the Young Men's Christian Association property, together with the adjoining site known as the Click lot, bounded as follows: Fronting 216 feet, more or less, on the west side of North Twenty-third Street and extending eastwardly between the south side of East Houston Street and the north side of Lamar Street 71 feet, more or less: Provided, That the United States shall have the right to occupy the present Federal building free of cost until the new Federal building is ready for occupancy. That upon said new site, when acquired as aforesaid, the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed to cause to be erected a suitable and commodious building, including fireproof vaults, heating and ventilating apparatus, approaches, etc., complete, for the use and accommodation of the post office, at not to exceed the limit of cost above stated, and said building shall be so constructed that accommodations for the United States courts and other Government offices may be provided at a later date at an increase in the limit of cost to be hereafter fixed. The general annual appropriations for the repair, mechanical equipment, maintenance, and operation of public buildings under the control of the Treasury Department shall be available for the present Federal building in said city so long as said building shall be occupied by the Government.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I offer the following amendment.

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 12, strike out the word "Click" and insert in lieu thereof the word "Glick."

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, that is a typographical error in the description of the lot.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The bill as amended was ordered to be engrossed and read the third time, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. LANHAM. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the title be amended by inserting the word "of" before the words "a public building" after the word "acquired."

The SPEAKER. Without objection, the title will be amended in accordance with the suggestion of the gentleman.

There was no objection.

On motion of Mr. LANHAM, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD on Federal aid to States.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Iowa asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD in the manner indicated.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman's own remarks?

Mr. RAMSEYER. They are not. I requested the Treasury Department to give me a list of the various projects, the statutes authorizing them, the amount of money spent last year, and the estimates for this year, and the appropriations for the next year.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman does not call that Federal aid to the States?

Mr. RAMSEYER. It comes under this heading—23 different projects.

Mr. WALSH. It is aid by some States to others through Federal agencies.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I have used the term as it is generally used.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, which I do not expect to do, I have noticed of late when such requests as these have been made that there has been a growing tendency to insert the extended remarks in the proceedings instead of placing them in the back of the RECORD. This appeals, I think, to many of us as being a very bad practice, making it difficult to follow the real proceedings of the House. I assume the gentleman does not expect to put this insertion in the body of the proceedings?

Mr. RAMSEYER. I would rather have them appear in the back of the RECORD, as it will attract more attention. Very many people commence reading the back part of the RECORD and read forward.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The extension of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Speaker, under leave to extend my remarks in the RECORD on "Federal aid to States," I submit for printing in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD a statement prepared at my request by the Treasury Department. This statement shows the departments which administer those projects, the statutes authorizing them, the amount of money expended for those purposes out of the Federal Treasury last year, the estimated expenditures for this fiscal year, and the appropriations made by Congress to carry on the said projects for the next fiscal year.

Division of Bookkeeping and Warrants, June 8, 1922.

BRIDGE ACROSS NIAGARA RIVER BETWEEN NEW YORK AND CANADA.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3458) to authorize the Niagara River Bridge Co. to reconstruct its present bridge across the Niagara River between the State of New York and the Dominion of Canada, or to remove its present bridge and construct, maintain, and operate a new bridge across the said river.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

Be it enacted, etc., That the Niagara River Bridge Co., a corporation which heretofore, under lawful authority then existing, constructed a cantilever bridge across the Niagara River between the United States and Canada, such bridge having been duly declared by act of Congress to be a lawful structure and an established post route of mail of the United States, is hereby authorized to enlarge, change, and alter its present bridge, or to remove its present bridge and construct, maintain, and operate a new bridge and approaches thereto across the Niagara River, at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, upon the present site, or on a new site north of and near the site of the present bridge, in lieu thereof, in accordance with the provisions of the act entitled "An act to regulate the construction of bridges over navigable waters," approved March 23, 1906: Provided, That before the construction of the said bridge shall be commenced, all proper and requisite authority therefor shall be obtained from the Government of the Dominion of Canada.

SEC. 2. That for the purpose of carrying into effect the objects of this act the Niagara River Bridge Co. may receive, purchase, and also acquire by lawful appropriation and condemnation in the State of New York upon making proper compensation, to be ascertained according to the laws of that State, real and personal property and rights of property, and may make any and every use of the same necessary and proper for the construction, maintenance, and operation of said bridge and approaches consistent with the laws of the United States.

SEC. 3. That the right to alter, amend, or repeal this act is hereby expressly reserved.

The committee amendments were read, as follows:

Page 1, line 4, after the word "which," strike out the words "heretofore under lawful authority then existing."

Page 1, line 6, after the word "Canada," strike out the words "such bridge having been duly declared by act of Congress to be a lawful structure and an established post route of mail of the United States."

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Speaker, I move to strike out the last word for the purpose of asking a question. Is it customary to provide in these bridge bills that the bridge may be constructed on any site as this bill provides? The Senate bill provides that the present bridge may be removed and a new bridge constructed in its place on the present site or any other site. That seems to be unusual.

Mr. PARKER of New York. Mr. Speaker, this bill has passed the Senate. This bridge was built in 1884, and it is not adequate to carry the traffic at the present time.

Mr. LONDON. I understand that.

Mr. PARKER of New York. It has got to be approved by the War Department.

Mr. MANN. I can give the gentleman that information. It is to provide a site suitable to the interests of navigation, to be approved by the War Department, and that has been the policy ever since the general bridge act was passed. Instead of our fixing definitely the ends of the bridge, we say it shall be at a point suitable to the interests of navigation, to be approved by the War Department, which means the engineer determines where it is to be located.

Mr. LONDON. I thank you.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The question was taken, and the amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

On motion of Mr. PARKER of New York, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

AMENDING SECTION 22 OF INTERSTATE COMMERCE ACT.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 848) to amend section 22 of the act entitled "An act to regulate commerce," approved February 4, 1887, as amended.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. Speaker, this bill is not one reported by the unanimous vote of the committee. It occurs to me that it is not the kind of legislation that should be expected to go through the House with unanimous consent. I am compelled to object to it.

TERM OF UNITED STATES DISTRICT COURT AT SELMA, ALA.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (S. 3156) to change the terms of the district court for the northern division of the southern district of Alabama.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of this bill?

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Speaker, may I inquire what the number of the bill is that is under consideration?

The SPEAKER. Either the calendar number is wrong or the Clerk reported the wrong bill.

Mr. STAFFORD. It is 331 on the Unanimous Consent Calendar.

The SPEAKER. The title as printed on the calendar apparently is wrong. The Clerk will again report the title.

The title was again reported.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. The bill does amend the judicial code with reference to the northern district of Alabama.

The SPEAKER. The same bill has two different titles. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will report the bill.

The Clerk read as follows:

An act (S. 3156) to change the terms of the district court for the northern division of the southern district of Alabama.

Be it enacted, etc., That the last sentence of section 70 of the Judicial Code, as amended, is amended to read as follows:

"Terms of the district court for the southern division shall be held at Mobile on the fourth Mondays in May and November; and for the northern division at Selma on the second Mondays in January and July."

Also, the following committee amendment was read:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

"That section 70 of an act entitled 'An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary,' approved March 3, 1911, be, and the same is hereby, amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 70. That the State of Alabama is divided into three judicial districts, to be known as the northern, middle, and southern districts of Alabama. The northern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Cullman, Jackson, Lawrence, Limestone, Madison, and Morgan, which shall constitute the northeastern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Colbert, Franklin, and Lauderdale, which shall constitute the northwestern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Cherokee, Dekalb, Etowah, Marshall, and St. Clair, which shall constitute the middle division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Blount, Jefferson, and Shelby, which shall constitute the southern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Walker, Winston, Marion, Fayette, and Lamar, which shall constitute the Jasper division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Calhoun, Clay, Cleburne, and Talladega, which shall constitute the eastern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Bibb, Greene, Pickens, Sumter, and Tuscaloosa, which shall constitute the western division of said district. Terms of the district court for the northeastern division shall be held at Huntsville on the first Tuesday in April and the second Tuesday in October; for the northwestern division, at Florence on the second Tuesday in February and the third Tuesday in October: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Florence shall be furnished free of expense to the Government; for the middle division, at Gadsden on the first Tuesdays in February and August: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Gadsden shall be furnished free of expense to the Government; for the southern division, at Birmingham on the first Mondays in March and September, which court shall remain in session for the transaction of business at least six months in each calendar year; for the Jasper division, at Jasper on the second Tuesdays in January and June: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Jasper shall be furnished free of expense to the Government; for the eastern division, at Anniston on the first Mondays in May and November; and for the western division, at Tuscaloosa on the first Tuesdays in January and June. The clerk of the court for the northern district shall maintain an office, in charge of himself or a deputy, at Anniston, at Florence, at Jasper, and at Gadsden, which shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of said court. The district judge for the northern district shall reside at Birmingham. The middle district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Autauga, Barbour, Bullock, Butler, Chilton, Coosa, Covington, Crenshaw, Elmore, Lowndes, Montgomery, and Pike, which shall constitute the northern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Coffee, Dale, Geneva, Henry, and Houston, which shall constitute the southern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Chambers, Lee, Macon, Randolph, Russell, and Tallapoosa, which shall constitute the eastern division of said middle judicial district. Terms of the district court for the northern division shall be held at Montgomery on the first Tuesdays in May and December; for the southern division, at Dothan on the first Mondays in June and December; and for the eastern division, at Opelika on the first Mondays in April and November: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Opelika shall be furnished free of expense to the Government. The clerk of the court for the middle district shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at Dothan, and shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at Opelika, which said offices at Dothan and Opelika shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of said division. The southern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Baldwin, Choctaw, Clarke, Conecuh, Escambia, Mobile, Monroe, and Washington, which shall constitute the southern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Dallas, Hale, Marengo, Perry, and Wilcox, which shall constitute the northern division of said district. Terms of the district court for the southern division shall be held at Mobile on the fourth Mondays in May and November; and for the northern division, at Selma on the second Mondays in January and July: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Selma shall be furnished free of expense to the United States."

Mr. McDUFFIE. Mr. Speaker, I move to amend by striking out the proviso on page 5, lines 12 and 13.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Alabama offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. McDUFFIE to the committee amendment: Page 5, lines 11 and 12 and 13, strike out the proviso.

Mr. McDUFFIE. This proviso was in the bill some years ago before the Government building was constructed in the city of Selma at which to hold sessions of this court. It having been constructed, this language is surplusage, and therefore I offer an amendment to the committee amendment to the Senate bill. It does not affect the time of holding the court at any other time in the State of Alabama. It simply changes it for the benefit of the parties, witnesses, and attorneys in the city of Selma, Ala., and that territory.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer an amendment, the necessity for which was brought to my attention by the gentleman from Illinois. In line 11, page 1, after the figures "1911," insert the words "as amended"; and after the word "hereby," in the same line, insert the word "further."

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers an amendment, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 1, line 11, after the figures "1911," insert "as amended"; and in the same line, after the word "hereby," insert the word "further."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I desire to offer the following amendment: On page 4, line 25, strike out the word "division" and insert the word "divisions."

The SPEAKER. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WALSH: Page 4, line 25, strike out the word "division" and insert the word "divisions."

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the third reading of the Senate bill.

The bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed.

The title was amended, as follows:

An act to amend section 70 of the Judicial Code.

On motion of Mr. McDUFFIE, a motion to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed was laid on the table.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by publishing a short letter and statement which I have received from Mr. N. P. Chipman with reference to the origin and purpose of Memorial Day.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD for the purpose indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Speaker, the history of the origin of Memorial Day is of great interest, and the following letter and statement on the subject I have received from Gen. N. P. Chipman contains accurate and valuable information that should be preserved. General Chipman had a brilliant record in the Civil War. After the war he practiced law in the city of Washington. In 1870 he was appointed Secretary of the District of Columbia by General, then President, Grant. He resigned and was elected Delegate to the House of Representatives, serving two terms from 1871–1875. He is the only man who ever sat in Congress as a Delegate for the District of Columbia. In 1876, after the form of the District government had been changed, he located in California and engaged in the practice of the law and in industrial enterprises and social welfare work. In 1897 he was appointed one of the supreme court commissioners of the State of California and held that position until 1905 when he was appointed by the governor presiding justice of the third appellate district court at Sacramento. He was afterwards elected twice to that office for 12-year terms. He resigned from the bench the early part of 1921 on account of ill health. He is now 87 years old.

Memorial Day was first observed in 1868 on an order issued by Gen. John A. Logan, who was at the time a Representative in Congress from Illinois and who was commander in chief of the Grand Army of the Republic. Gen. N. P. Chipman was at the time the adjutant general of the Grand Army of the Republic, and as such promulgated the order. He is the only living man who was connected as an official of the Grand Army of the Republic in formulating, issuing, and promulgating the order, and I believe his statement of the origin of Memorial Day to be of sufficient historic interest to warrant its publication in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

SAN FRANCISCO, CALIF.,
972 Bush Street, June 10, 1922.

Hon. CHARLES F. CURRY,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. CURRY: Your letter inclosing the clipping from Washington Times giving Mrs. Logan's version of the origin of Memorial Day is received, and I thank you for taking the trouble to send it to me.

Last year the Woman's Relief Corps, an auxiliary of the Grand Army of the Republic, requested me to write the story of the origin and purpose of Memorial Day, of which I am sending a copy. This account is in accord with the actual facts as accepted by the Grand Army and published in its blue book many years ago.

I have never known that Mrs. Logan gave a different version until it appeared in a Washington paper after the Woman's Relief Corps had sent out the inclosed leaflet.

In a speech on Memorial Day at Sacramento in 1884 I gave this account. It was published in pamphlet form and widely distributed. This was two or three years before General Logan died and years before had been accepted by the Grand Army as the true history of the origin of General Logan's order instituting Memorial Day. I have great regard for Mrs. Logan, and under no circumstances would I enter any controversy with her.

I am looking forward to a visit from you this summer when you come home, if you can spare me the time.

With best personal regards, I am yours sincerely,

N. P. CHIPMAN.

MEMORIAL DAY.
(Instituted May 30, 1868.)
ITS ORIGIN AND PURPOSE.

The frequent inquiries from various parts of the country with regard to the origin and purpose of Memorial Day, and the erroneous statements made concerning some of the facts which have been called to my attention, impel me to put in printed form the true history of the observance.

The organization known as the Grand Army of the Republic is composed of the veteran soldiers, sailors, and marines who carried the flag of the Republic to victory during the great rebellion of 1861–1865. This unique and patriotic association of the loyal soldiers of the Nation came into being in 1866. It spread rapidly throughout the Northern States, and by 1868 it had achieved a nation-wide body with national headquarters at the National Capital, having department organizations embracing posts in cities and towns and a membership of several hundred thousand. Its fundamental object was expressed in the three words, "fraternity, charity, loyalty."

In 1868 Gen. John A. Logan, who typified the highest example of the volunteer soldier, was commander in chief and I was adjutant general of this splendid organization. I will not now trace its growth and influence upon the national life during the half century it has been the Nation's great school of patriotism. Its membership is rapidly yielding to the ravages of time and old age, and will in a few years cease to exist. But its spirit survives and will in the uncharted future of our beloved country continue to shed its inspiring influence so long as the sentiment of liberty and free government is the guiding motive of our people.

Early in May, 1868, I received a letter from a comrade residing in Cincinnati, Ohio, suggesting that in some of the countries of Europe it was the custom to strew with flowers in the springtime the graves of heroes who had fallen in defense of their country, and asked if such custom would not be appropriate to commemorate the services of our comrades who had given their lives that the Nation might not perish. Upon reading this letter there seemed to me to open up a great opportunity through our organization to institute observances which might grow into a custom that would help to advance its great objects, and at the same time be a fitting means of perpetuating memories of our departed comrades.

Moved by the thought which had thus been inspired, I made a rough draft on May 5, 1868, of General Orders, No. 11, and took it to General Logan at the House of Representatives, who promptly approved of its issuing, and after having inserted a paragraph directed me to issue the order at once.

My object was to have the ceremonies come in a spring month, but to postpone it to a date which would give opportunity for flowers to mature. The 31st of May that year fell upon Sunday, and so I named May 30. This is the true and only reason for having named May 30 as the date to be observed.

The order was given to the Associated Press and was sent to all parts of the country as rapidly as telegraph and mail could convey it.

The day was observed by comrades of the Grand Army of the Republic, aided by citizens, in 27 States of the Union; very imposing ceremonies were observed at the Arlington Cemetery, in the District of Columbia, at which Gen. James A Garfield, afterwards President of the United States, delivered the principal address.

Annually on each succeeding 30th day of May this tribute to the loyal heroes of the Civil War has been observed.

By usage and custom the observance has broadened out so as to include the graves of our dead of all previous wars, of the Spanish-American War and the World War. Some touching and beautiful ceremonies were held overseas last Memorial Day as testimonials of love and respect for those who had died in the great World War in defense of liberty, self-government, and the freedom of the seas. A very beautiful ceremony has been instituted, embracing the scattering abroad of flowers on the ocean in honor of gallant sailors and marines who perished at sea.

The purpose of instituting Memorial Day very clearly appears in the general orders, as follows:

HEADQUARTERS GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC,
Washington, D. C., May 5, 1868.

General Orders, No 11.

1. The 30th day of May, 1868, is designated for the purpose of strewing with flowers or otherwise decorating the graves of comrades who died in defense of their country during the late rebellion, and whose bodies now lie in almost every city, village, and hamlet churchyard in the land. In this observance no form of ceremony is prescribed, but posts and comrades will in their own way arrange such fitting services and testimonials of respect as circumstances may permit.

We are organized, comrades, as our regulations tell us, for the purpose, among other things, of preserving and strengthening those kind and fraternal feelings which have bound together the soldiers, sailors, and marines who united to suppress the late rebellion. What can aid more to assure this result than by cherishing tenderly the memory of our heroic dead, who made their breasts a barricade between our country and its foes? Their soldier lives were the reveille of freedom to a race in chains and their death a tattoo of rebellious tyranny in arms. We should guard their graves with sacred vigilance. All that the consecrated wealth and taste of the Nation can add to their adornment and security is but a fitting tribute to the memory of her slain defenders. Let no wanton foot tread rudely on such hallowed ground. Let pleasant paths invite the coming and going to reverent visitors and fond mourners. Let no vandalism of avarice or neglect, no ravages of time, testify to the present or to the coming generations that we have forgotten as a people the cost of a free and undivided Republic.

If other eyes grow dull and other hands slack and other hearts cold in the solemn trust, ours shall keep it well as long as the light and warmth of life remain to us.

Let us, then, at the appointed time gather around their sacred remains and garland the passionless mounds above them with the choicest flowers of springtime. Let us raise above them the dear old flag they saved from dishonor. Let us in this solemn presence renew our pledges to aid and assist those whom they have left among us, a sacred charge upon the Nation's gratitude—the soldier's and sailor's widow and orphan.

2. It is the purpose of the commander in chief to inaugurate this observance, with the hope that it will be kept up from year to year while a survivor of the war remains to honor the memory of his departed comrades. He earnestly desires the public press to call attention to this order and lend its friendly aid in bringing it to the notice of comrades in all parts of the country in time for simultaneous compliance therewith.

3. Department commanders will use every effort to make this order effective.

By order of

JOHN A. LOGAN,
Commander in Chief.
N. P. CHIPMAN,
Adjutant General.

It seemed to me that this ceremonial was of sufficient importance to justify its recognition in some manner by the Nation, and, so believing, I suggested to General Logan that he secure the passage of a resolution by the House of Representatives authorizing the publication of the proceedings on Memorial Day, which I thought could be obtained by communicating with the various posts and department headquarters. General Logan thereupon offered and there was passed the following resolution:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES, IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
June 22, 1868.

On motion of Mr. Logan,

Resolved, That the proceedings of the different cities, towns, etc., recently held in commemoration of the gallant heroes who have sacrificed their lives in defense of the Republic and the record of the ceremonial of the decoration of the honored tombs of the departed shall be collected and bound under the direction of such person as the Speaker shall designate for the use of Congress.

Attest:

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, June 22, 1868.

Frank Moore, Esq., editor of the Rebellion Record, is hereby appointed under this resolution.

SCHUYLER COLFAX,
Speaker House of Representatives.

To carry out the object of the resolution, I prepared and General Logan directed to be issued the following:

HEADQUARTERS GRAND ARMY OF THE REPUBLIC,
Washington, D. C., June 25, 1868.

GENERAL ORDERS, NO. 14.

The commander in chief calls attention to the congressional action with regard to the memorial ceremonies on the 30th ultimo.

In order to make successful this effort to perpetuate the record of a just tribute to our patriotic dead, departments, posts, and comrades will forward to these headquarters everything pertaining to the ceremonies alluded to which can aid to complete the work proposed—newspaper paragraphs, editorials, and reporters' accounts, and also manuscript copies of addresses and observances which may not have been printed. It is hoped that material may be collected out of which a book of value to the country may be edited.

By order of

JOHN A. LOGAN,
Commander in Chief.
N. P. CHIPMAN,
Adjutant General.

In response to this order there came to headquarters prompt and quite complete proceedings by the various posts upon Memorial Day, which I placed in the hands of Mr. Frank Moore, pursuant to the action of the House of Representatives.

The book was gotten out in 1869 and the usual number of 250 copies printed by order of Congress. Later the stereotype plates were used by Mr. Moore in publishing the book for general circulation.

On April 12, 1869, I issued General Orders, No. 21, by direction of General Logan, calling attention of departments and posts to the approaching Memorial Day, and "as the 30th of May occurred on Sunday posts were at liberty to observe either that day or Saturday, the 29th."

The ceremonies for 1869 were very much more general than in the preceding year, and were held in 31 States.

Reports of the proceedings throughout the country were sent to the headquarters, and were edited and published in book form as a private enterprise. No similar publication of Memorial Day proceedings has since been issued.

The foregoing is the simple story of the origin and purpose of Memorial Day.

For more than half a century the sacred and beautiful ceremonies in honor of the Nation's heroic dead have been observed, and by the legislatures of many States of the Union May 30 has been declared a legal holiday. Thus have been realized the hopes of the Grand Army of the Republic expressed in General Orders, No. 11.

N. P. CHIPMAN.

SACRAMENTO, CALIF., March 28, 1921.

RENTS, ROYALTIES, AND BONUSES, NAVAL PETROLEUM RESERVES.

The next business in order on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11363) granting a portion of the rents, royalties, and bonuses received from lands within naval petroleum reserves to the States within the boundaries of which said reserves are located.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I think this bill is of so much importance and has such large financial interests involved that I do not believe it ought to pass at this time by unanimous consent.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman reserve the objection?

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Yes; I will.

Mr. MONDELL. This bill simply follows out a policy of the Government that we have adhered to since the foundation of the Government. It is not a new policy in any way. It is applying to some small areas a policy that we have applied from the beginning to all areas that have been permanently reserved, and in a smaller sum in its relief to the States than we have heretofore provided for for their permanently reserved areas. We give all of the States 25 per cent of the receipts from the forest reserves. We gave the States 20 per cent of the impounded royalties from oil lands, impounded during the consideration of the leasing bill. We gave them 37½ per cent of all the receipts under the leasing bill. This is 20 per cent compared with 37½ per cent in the matter of other lands lying immediately adjacent to all these lands. It is 20 per cent as against 37½ per cent. It is a policy that we have followed right along and carried out, and carried out with a smaller proportion of the royalty to the States than they are receiving from adjacent areas.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Well, Mr. Speaker, it may be all right. It comes from very respectable sources, but I do not like to sit here and consent to its consideration now. If I did it would seem that I would be bound by it. If the gentleman will consent to have it passed over without losing its place on the calendar, that will satisfy me, and I shall inform myself on it.

Mr. MONDELL. It is not a question of whether I would be willing to do it or not; I would have to. This is the only bill that "the gentleman from Wyoming" has had on the Unanimous Consent Calendar in this Congress.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. Well, I dislike very much——

Mr. MONDELL. We have passed many important bills today.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Does not the gentleman from Wyoming think that this bill is of such a character that it ought to have more consideration than it is likely to have under the existing conditions?

Mr. MONDELL. Well, if the bill were not a bill that follows a uniform policy, a policy which we established a great many years ago, which we have followed without variation as to all lands permanently reserved——

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. And as to the wisdom of which there is a wide difference of opinion——

Mr. MONDELL. Well, I do not know as to that. It is along the line of an established policy. The committee of which the gentleman is an honored member, the Committee on Agriculture, long since gave the States 25 per cent of the receipts of the forest reserves.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. Those bills came from the Committee on Public Lands.

Mr. MONDELL. No. Those bills came from the Committee on Agriculture.

Mr. MCLAUGHLIN of Michigan. If the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] is not going to object, I object, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. GRAHAM of Illinois. I was going to ask unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Illinois asks unanimous consent that the bill be passed over without prejudice. Is there objection?

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Speaker, I want to object to the consideration of this bill.

The SPEAKER. If the request of the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. GRAHAM] is granted, it can not be considered to-day. It will go over until the next time. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for one minute out of order.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to proceed for one minute out of order. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. CRAMTON. A few minutes ago, when the request was made by the gentleman from Iowa [Mr. RAMSEYER] for an extension of remarks, I made some remarks on the growing practice of inserting in the body of the proceedings of the House speeches or addresses or papers that had been presented with leave to print. I think probably the remarks that I made would appear to be criticism of the course of Members of the House. Since making those remarks my attention has been called by the reporters and others to the fact that this changed custom is not the fault of the Members of the House, but is due to the action of the Government Printing Office, where, in many cases, when a document is presented with leave to print and the document is sent to the Government Printing Office with a notation upon it to put it in the back of the RECORD, instead of in the proceedings, that notation or request of the Member is disregarded by the Government Printing Office. Hence the Members of the House are not to blame for the change of the custom.

Looking at the rules for the publication of the RECORD, which are entirely in the control of the Joint Committee on Printing, I find subdivision 7 provides:

The Public Printer will arrange the contents of the RECORD as follows: First, the Senate proceedings; second, the House proceedings; third, the speeches withheld for revision.

There appears to be nothing that would cover an extension, that would permit it to go into that same day's RECORD except in the back of the RECORD. It seems to me—and I simply want to make this suggestion—that the Joint Committee on Printing, which has the matter entirely in control, could abate this abuse which the Public Printer is said to have brought about by adding an amendment to paragraph 7, so that it will read:

Seventh. The Public Printer will arrange the contents of the RECORD as follows: First, the Senate proceedings; second, the House proceedings; third, the speeches withheld for revision and leaves to print.

Mr. MANN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CRAMTON. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman knows that in the permanent RECORD these things will come in their proper places, where the Public Printer now puts them. The gentleman wants them to be put at the end of the temporary RECORD, thereby incurring the added expense of putting them in the proper place in the permanent RECORD, and it is more or less of an expense. The only reason for putting them in the end of the RECORD is that if that is done Members are not required to read them. Would it not be better to leave them out if Members are so desirous to avoid seeing them?

Mr. CRAMTON. That would seem to be so, but Members seem loath to object to those insertions. My purpose was to bring the matter to the attention of the Joint Committee on Printing, for their consideration. Often in looking over the day's proceedings and trying to keep up with what is going on, I find 10 or 12 pages of extraneous matter interjected into the proceedings, and have to wade through those pages to find out what actually happened, and that is somewhat of a nuisance.

Mr. MANN. That is the place where it will be in the permanent RECORD. That is where other people in the country will have to find those insertions when they are reading the RECORD.

Mr. CRAMTON. I do not know what the additional expense will be; but it does not appeal to me that it will be much if any. My ostensible occupation is somewhat akin to that of printer. I have had some experience in such matters, and my impression is that the expense would be negligible.

Mr. MANN. Much of it has to be reset.

Mr. CRAMTON. It would not involve a resetting of the type. It would involve merely a new make-up of the pages.

Mr. MANN. It involves a new setting up of the type.

Mr. CRAMTON. Well, the indexing and paging are different in the temporary RECORD from that of the permanenent RECORD.

Mr. MANN. I feel myself, as the gentleman does, like avoiding much of this stuff that is put in the RECORD. But I do have sympathy for those who read the permanent RECORD; and the number of people who look at the permanent RECORD is much greater than the number of those who look at the temporary RECORD, and all of this matter appears in its proper place in the permanent RECORD, at the point where it is offered.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, my desire, the accomplishment of which has been contributed to by the gentleman from Illinois, has been simply to get the matter before the House and before the Committee on Printing.

The SPEAKER. The time of the gentleman has expired. The clerk will report the next bill.

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR.

The next business on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent was the bill (H. R. 11155) creating the positions of Second Assistant Secretary and private secretary in the Department of Labor.

The clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the bill?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, a number of gentlemen who are interested in this measure and one or two who are opposed to it are absent. Among them is the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN], who is engaged in his duties as chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The gentleman from Illinois [Mr. MADDEN] is present.

Mr. MADDEN. I object to the consideration of the bill.

LEAVE TO EXTEND REMARKS.

Mr. OLDFIELD. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing an article by the gentleman from New York [Mr. TEN EYCK] on Marketing Farm Products and Other Farm Problems.

Mr. TEN EYCK is a member of the Committee on Agriculture of the House, as well as a member of the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry, and has done valuable work on both of these important committees in the interest of the farmer. When the Joint Commission of Agricultural Inquiry first convened, he made certain recommendations as regards its organization and policy which met with approval and (see note A) were beneficial in the proper functioning of this commission.

He is a dirt farmer and thoroughly understands the farmer's present conditions and the needs of agriculture not only in his own State but throughout the entire country.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Arkansas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD by publishing an article by Representative TEN EYCK on Marketing Farm Products and Other Farm Problems. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, with the understanding that it shall be printed in the back of the RECORD, I have no objection.

Mr. OLDFIELD. I will be glad to do that.

Mr. CRAMTON. With that understanding I will not object.

The SPEAKER. With the understanding that it will be printed in the back of the RECORD is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

THE FARMERS HAVE "LET GEORGE DO IT" TOO LONG AND AT GREAT COST TO THEMSELVES—CONGRESSMAN TEN EYCK, OF NEW YORK, POINTS TO THE NECESSITY OF A GREATLY IMPROVED AGRICULTURAL CREDIT SYSTEM—PRESENTS SOME NEW AND HELPFUL IDEAS.

[By PETER G. TEN EYCK.]

(Congressman TEN EYCK was born and raised on a farm. From experience gained in the course of many years farming activities, he is qualified to present suggestions regarding the present and past causes of agricultural troubles. Mr. TEN EYCK first operated what, in the East, is called a general farm, later a market garden farm, and at present owns and operates a fruit and cattle farm. He is also connected with various farm organizations and agricultural societies. He is a member of the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives, a member of the Joint Commission on Agricultural Inquiry, and a member of the governing board of the New York State Agricultural Experiment Station, also president of the Albany County Agricultural Society and Exposition.—The Editor.)

The farmers of the country in the past have devoted too much of their energy, time, and attention to the production of their products and have given too little attention to the marketing of produce. They have "let George do it," but have found out to their sorrow that while George did it, he expected a toll from them all out of proportion to the service rendered. What a farmer is entitled to is a fair return on his money invested and labor performed.

The basic trouble of present-day agricultural conditions is the cost of spread, which is the difference between the price that the farmer receives for his produce and the price that the consumer pays for the same article. This condition is caused by many things, to some of which I will endeavor to call attention.

CAUSES OF TROUBLE.

First. An inadequate credit system. Before the land bank was established it was almost impossible for a farmer to obtain money by mortgaging his farm without paying an exorbitant rate of interest and commission. His time or discount loans were undesirable, and even to-day it is practically impossible for him to secure money for the length of time of the turnover that some of his products require. Most of this can be taken care of and remedied by proper financial legislation; not all, however.

Second. The farmer is suffering from the high cost of transportation. His point of production is of necessity located at great distances from the large markets of consumption. On account of his products being bulky and low priced, his freight charges are out of proportion to the value of the products or the prices he receives.

MARKETING SYSTEM WRONG.

Third. The farmer in marketing his goods is at a disadvantage, on account of the practice of selling his products at the point of delivery rather than at the point of shipment; he produces in small units and, therefore, is unable to control the price of his commodity in the wholesale markets. He lacks proper facilities for storing his products, so as to carry them over from the season of production throughout the season of nonproduction. This can be remedied to a certain extent by cooperating in the construction of the necessary warehouses where his products can be stored and warehouse certificates issued covering the articles stored. When proper community storage warehouses have been built he will be able to borrow from the banks on so-called warehouse certificates, thus enabling him to carry his produce, as well as store it, throughout all seasons of the year.

Fourth. It is essential that he organize for cooperative bargaining. This should include not only cooperation in selling his products, but cooperation in purchasing those articles which are necessary for conducting his business.

HOW TO SECURE RESULTS.

Fifth. Through well-organized farm groups, with proper leadership, he will be in a position to come before State and National legislative bodies and intelligently present his case and inform them as regards his needs. For many years the financial interests have had their representatives in Washington to advise with the lawmakers and call attention to their views as to what is necessary in legislation for the best interests of the country at large. On the other hand, labor has had its representatives stationed in the various capitals of the States, as well as the Capital at Washington, to bring to the attention of the legislators their views and state what they think is necessary in the way of legislation for the best interests of the community. Why should not the farmers have their representatives, who understand the farming industry of the country, located here in Washington and in the other capitals of the different States of the Union, to counsel with the legislators and explain to them what the agricultural industry of the country feels is necessary to be done for the best interests of the people of the entire country?

DUTY OF ORGANIZATION.

The farmers represent a wholesome and large percentage of the best citizenship of the United States. They hold a large portion of the taxable property, they are the representatives of the basic industry, they are the producers of the food of the Nation, and I feel it is their duty to organize, so as to be in a position to take an active interest in the running of the Government, not to control it from a selfish standpoint, but for the purposes of cooperation with all the other interests of the country to do that which is best for all the people.

THINGS FARMERS WANT.

For the consideration of the reader I take great pleasure in making the following recommendations:

That cooperative bargaining be permitted by the enactment of proper permissive laws by the Federal Government and the various States and that the farmers organize to take advantage to the fullest extent possible of cooperative buying, cooperative selling, cooperative manufacturing and canning plants, cooperative cheese and butter factories, cooperative storage plants, cooperative grain elevators and warehouses, cooperative packing houses.

That proper and adequate farm credit be secured by inaugurating and establishing a suitable banking system to give to the agricultural industry of the country the same banking facilities in accordance with the turnover of its various products that all other industries of the country receive to-day.

LONG-TIME LOANS.

That to meet the great need for an extension of time, discount loans to the farmer be made from six months to three years. The farmer should be assured at all times of a reasonably low rate of interest on farm mortgages through the Federal land bank, as well as a reasonable interest rate on all his short-time loans through the banking institutions, farm loan associations, and cattle loan corporations throughout the country. This will encourage the farmer to own his own farm and thus cut down the increased tendency toward tenantry.

That so-called short-time loans be furnished to the farmer from six months to three years to meet his requirements, extending the time of loan to meet the time of the turnover on his different products.

That the banking system of the country be so organized that all the banks that loan to the farmers will obtain discount facilities to the fullest extent possible commensurate with the security which they present.

That suitable provision be made for discounting farm paper on warehouse receipts, also loans of cattle loan corporations as well as farm paper in all banks of the country, member banks, nonmember banks, and State banks.

That the reserve bank be authorized to rediscount farm paper for the full time of the turnover of the farmer's products which have been accepted as collateral on his loan at the local banks, other than what is known as the three-year turnover of the cattle-raising industry.

RESTRICTIVE INTEREST RATES.

That all the banks rediscounting farm or other paper be restricted as to the amount of additional interest they charge the farmer and other customers over the rate which they pay for rediscounting the same paper.

That banking facilities be provided for the farmer so that his products can be used for basic credit to the fullest extent possible, and the banks accept loans with proper warehouse certificates as collateral.

That there should be public markets in all of our cities for the mutual use of the farmer and the consumer.

That suitable and adequate joint-terminal facilities be established connecting railways, waterways, and highways, and at the various terminals suitable machinery be installed to handle the farmer's products.

That proper warehouse and grain elevators should be built and located at big terminal centers and at export harbors, so as to accommodate the farmer's products while en route for export.

GATHERING DATA.

That an attaché or Government agent be located in each of the American consular agencies abroad, whose duty it will be to obtain information as regards the farming industry of that particular locality or country, and obtain authentic information as regards the amounts of crops raised, the amount of produce stored, the amount of food consumed, the amount imported by the Government and from whom imported, and the amount imported from the United States, together with such other information as regards the method of growing the various crops, the kinds of seeds used, and the kind of food consumed; what pests are prevalent, and the method of eradication of the same, and whether necessity exists for placing an embargo on diseased plants.

That the farmer standardize his produce by proper grading of his products as well as standardization of the containers therefor, which will permit him to extend his operations of selling more directly to the consumer throughout the entire country as well as through local agents.

That a system of improved highways be inaugurated and the necessary assistance rendered by the Federal Government, the State, county, and town for the purpose of building roads to connect up farms with transportation terminals and local markets.

That there be coordination of the trinity of transportation methods—highway, waterway, railway—with the idea of obtaining the cheapest rates commensurate with the best possible service.

REDUCING THE RATES.

That railroad rates be reduced on farm products systematically and scientifically, giving due regard to the localities of production and the localities of consumption.

That adequate and efficient merchant marine and trans Atlantic and Pacific water routes be established for the use of agricultural interests.

That inland waterways, harbors, and waterway routes within the territory of the United States connecting the Great Lakes and the interior with the Atlantic Ocean be given the proper attention and improvements.

That proper machinery for loading and unloading of agricultural products be installed at way stations, freight houses, terminals, and harbors for the use of the farmer.

That suitable and adequate joint terminal facilities be installed connecting the waterway, railway, and highway, and sufficient and efficient terminals and proper warehouses and elevators be located at convenient places and at export ports to accommodate farm products en route.

LABOR SUPPLY BUREAU.

That labor supply bureaus be established both by the Federal Government and the various States, where a record may be kept of unemployed farm labor and where a farmer may apply for efficient and competent help.

That a national endeavor be made for improvement in production by the use of the best seeds, blooded cattle, poultry, etc., and that a system of diversified crops be inaugurated.

That information be gathered as regards soil treatments in the various localities, improved crop treatments, and the utilization of the latest types of machinery.

That the farmer should be permitted to make a fair return on money invested and labor performed so that he may improve the rural school system, thereby allowing his children to receive proper academic training for a higher agricultural college education. He should have his living conditions raised to the level of his city brethren by having modern heating, sanitary plumbing, improved modern lighting, rural mail delivery, rural telephone service, improved highways, community attractions, convenient churches, all of which will tend to give him a better social intercourse with his neighbors and lessen the work of the women folks on the farm.

Mr. NOLAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD by printing a letter received from the Secretary of Labor relating to H. R. 11155, the bill creating the positions of Second Assistant Secretary and private secretary in the Department of Labor, and I will also state that I am willing to have it published in the back of the RECORD.

Mr. CRAMTON. Reserving the right to object, not only that the gentleman is willing but with the understanding that it is to be inserted in the back of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER. That is included in the gentleman's request. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

DEPARTMENT OF LABOR,
OFFICE OF THE SECRETARY,
Washington, June 13, 1922.

Hon. JOHN I. NOLAN,
House Office Building, Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. NOLAN: The bill providing for a Second Assistant Secretary of Labor, I am told, will be reached for action within a few days. My attention has been directed to the suggestion made by some Members of Congress when the bill was presented to the House that there was no apparent great need for this additional assistant, as the amount of labor arising from the Bureau of Immigration was decreasing. The fact is the business coming to the office of the Secretary from the Bureau of Immigration has been steadily increasing in the last year and there is no likelihood of its decrease.

Permit me to call attention to the fact that the relation of the Bureau of Immigration to the Secretary is quite a different one than the relation of any other bureau to the Secretary, and so far as I can learn different from the relation maintained by any bureau of any other department to the head of the department. This arises largely from the fact that appeals from the ports, as well as all other appeals arising in the Bureau of Immigration, are not to the head of the bureau, as is the case in every other bureau. The appeals, by special provision of the law, are directly to the Secretary through the Commissioner General of Immigration. Why this is so I do not know, but Congress in its wisdom has so provided. It is not necessary here to repeat the statement often made that the number of these appeals is great, and that there is never a day in which there are less than 50 and some days they run into the hundreds. Careful compilations heretofore made and submitted to you and your committee indicate that from the Bureau of Immigration alone there arise matters requiring the signature of the Secretary or an assistant not less than 300 per day. Some of these are routine, but most of them very important, requiring considerable thought and labor before they are ready for signature, but at least 50 are in the nature of appeals involving important human rights.

Prior to the war appeals of immigrants to the Secretary from the ports were very rare. The immigration law of 1917 was the first act containing many restrictions, but the flow of immigration was not resumed to any degree following the war until the latter part of the year 1920. During the war a number of acts were passed providing for the deportation of aliens or residents here who were never disturbed prior to that time. Every effort to deport an alien under warrant proceedings means extended hearings and long-drawn-out appeals. Many of these were instituted prior to March, 1921, but very few of them were finally disposed of by that time. New warrants for this class of undesirables are being issued daily and more will be issued.

By virtue of the war there is a much heavier percentage of aliens applying for admission than ever before who are disqualified under the act of 1917. There is a much larger per cent suffering from mental ills resulting from the horrors of war. There is a much larger per cent of physically defectives and a much larger per cent of aged, of widows, and of orphans than ever before, and most of these fall within the prohibitions of the act of 1917. However, the greatest increase in appeals is due to the fact that the number of European aliens is now limited by the so-called quota act. Practically every alien who comes in excess of the quota takes an appeal to the Secretary. Almost all of them have attorneys, relatives, and friends appear for them in order to present argument and show either that the quota law does not apply to them or that unusual hardships are involved in the case and that it would be inhumane to deport them forthwith. Great numbers are going to Mexico and Cuba for the purpose of surreptitious entry from those points. A great many of these are either intercepted at the border or found subsequently and arrested for deportation. All of them invoke the appeal provided by law and all of them demand personal hearings before the Secretary through attorneys, relatives, and others. A recent investigation in Cuba indicated that there are in excess of 25,000 Chinese on that island, all expecting to smuggle into the United States. There is a great flood of Europeans in Cuba for the same purpose. The apprehension of any of these, either while trying to enter or when found after unlawful entry, means an appeal to the Secretary.

Conservatively estimated, the appellate work of the Secretary's office arising from the Bureau of Immigration has run for a year at least five times as heavy as at any previous period in the history of the bureau.

A year ago the Secretary and the Assistant Secretary, in an effort to cope with the situation, devoted an average of 16 hours per day to the work of trying to dispose of all these appeals as they arose. It was believed that the condition was temporary, but it was found that this hope was not well founded. Efforts were made to create other agencies by way of help in handling this enormous business, and these efforts are constantly being assailed in courts by way of writs of habeas corpus, because every alien insists on his right of personal hearing before the man who makes the final decision. I am told by the members of the board of review, consisting of five men who are endeavoring to furnish a measure of relief, that it is inconceivable that the work which was accomplished a year ago could have been accomplished by the Secretary and Assistant Secretary alone.

The decision of the average appeal involves vastly more than merely signing the decision. It means careful review of the evidence submitted and it means listening to the pleadings of lawyers, of relatives, of friends, and of the alien himself. These people are not satisfied to present their argument solely to those who may make recommendations. They insist upon seeing and speaking to the man who makes the final decision. The law apparently gives them this right, and it can not be denied. The man who makes the final decision is loathe to make the decision without personally seeing and hearing those who present the case. As a result, the regular business hours of the men who must decide these things are occupied by listening to the alien or his representatives, and they must do the work other than listening to argument at other hours of the day or night. It is physically impossible for any man to long carry such a burden. There are seven other bureaus and divisions in the Department of Labor, and all require attention. The work coming to the office of the Secretary from the Bureau of Immigration alone is more than any one man should be asked to do and more than any one man can do under the letter and spirit of the law.

As heretofore suggested, the Commissioner General of Immigration under the law has no power of any kind to decide any appeal. These appeals merely pass through his hands to the Secretary. Congress should either amend the law so as to place final authority and responsibility in these appeals in the Commissioner General of Immigration or furnish the Secretary of Labor with another assistant who may devote all of his time and attention to this important and ever-increasing work. This work will increase in volume and in importance in the same proportion in which immigration, either European or oriental, is restricted. I earnestly urge that the pending bill be enacted into law without delay, so that an appointment may be made prior to July 1, when reopening of exhausted quotas will again bring on a new flood of appeals. Should Congress hereafter so modify the law as to vest final authority in these appeals in the Commissioner General of Immigration, there would be no objection at that time to abolishing the office of Second Assistant Secretary of Labor. I believe the Commissioner General of Immigration should be invested with power to decide all these appeals, subject only to general review by the Secretary in the same manner as the acts of all other bureau heads are subject to general review by the head of the department, but until the Commissioner General of Immigration is given power to dispose of immigration matters, there is the most urgent need for a Second Assistant Secretary of Labor.

The American people desire always that every human being shall have every opportunity to present his rights in a fair hearing before any tribunal authorized to render a decision involving these rights. The matters coming to the Secretary of Labor for decision, from the Bureau of Immigration, are entirely matters involving human rights. Humanity demands that decisions be rendered promptly to minimize suffering. The American spirit of fair play demands that careful attention be given these human rights by the men who must decide them personally. As at present constituted, the office of the Secretary of Labor is not sufficiently equipped to fulfill this requirement. I urge that this condition be remedied. In urging the passage of this bill I am asking for that which does not mean an additional expenditure of money. The creation of a Second Assistant Secretary of Labor will not add to the amount of money expended in pay rolls but will simply mean that the work will be done by some one charged under his oath with responsibility, instead of some one acting for some one else.

Permit me to thank you for your personal interest in this matter and to express the hope that your colleagues in the House may understand the situation as thoroughly as you do.

Very sincerely yours,

JAMES J. DAVIS, Secretary.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD with reference to the bill (H. R. 11155) just referred to by the gentleman from California [Mr. NOLAN].

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD on H. R. 11155. Is there objection?

Mr. CRAMTON. With the same understanding that the remarks are to be printed in the back of the RECORD.

Mr. BOX. Yes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

MARY ANN SHIPPING CO.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to return to Calendar No. 273 for consideration. This bill was objected to the last time for the lack of certain information, and I made a very strenuous effort to get this information and was promised that it would be here by 10 o'clock. Inadvertently, it did not get here until after 12. It was just a few minutes late. I trust no objection will be made. I do not take up very much of the time of the House.

Mr. WALSH. What has that got to do with it?

The SPEAKER. The gentleman asks unanimous consent to return to No. 273 on the Calendar for Unanimous Consent. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. If the gentleman desires to present some information with reference to it, I have no objection to his presenting the information, but I do object to the consideration of the bill.

Mr. A. P. NELSON. Of course, the mere presenting of the information would be of no value at this time unless I am permitted to have the bill considered.

Mr. WALSH. Then I object.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted—

To Mr. OLIVER (at the request of Mr. MCDUFFIE), indefinitely, on account of illness of his mother.

To Mr. WILLIAMS of Texas, for three days, on account of important business.

To Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska, indefinitely, on account of serious illness in his family.

To Mr. LONGWORTH, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

Mr. WINSLOW. Mr. Speaker, is it not in order to consider H. R. 10716?

The SPEAKER. The Chair is informed that that bill was laid on the table, a similar Senate bill having passed the House.

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. GARNER. Will the gentleman withhold that a moment until the gentleman from Wyoming [Mr. MONDELL] can make a statement?

Mr. STAFFORD. Certainly; I withdraw the point of no quorum.

Mr. GARNER. Will not the gentleman give us whatever information he may have at this time touching the reported possible recess about the 1st of July? So many Members are asking the question that it does seem to me it would clear up the situation and enable Members to make their calculations, if the gentleman could give us anything like definite information at this time.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, it is impossible at this time to give any definite information. I think within a comparatively short time we will be able to make an announcement to the House as to what we may expect to do and as to the possibility of a recess—possibly within the next 24 hours.

Mr. GARNER. We thank the gentleman for the expression of that hope.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with Calendar Wednesday business on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wyoming asks unanimous consent to dispense with Calendar Wednesday business on Wednesday next. Is there objection?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. MONDELL. My reason for doing that is that the Committee on Appropriations desires to present a deficiency bill, and it is highly important that that bill be considered and go to the Senate. I think the bill should become a law before there is any recess taken.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wyoming?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 4 o'clock and 27 minutes p. m.) the House adojurned until to-morrow, Tuesday, June 20, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of Rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

654. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a list of judgments rendered by the Court of Claims, amounting to $472,683.60, which have been submitted by the Secretary of the Treasury (H. Doc. No. 356); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

655. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting a list of judgments rendered against the Government by the district courts of the United States, as submitted by the Attorney General through the Secretary of the Treasury, as follows: Under the War Department, $25,982; under the Navy Department, $71,416.94; under the United States Housing Corporation, $22,844.32; total, $120,243.26 (H. Doc. No. 357); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

656. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting records of judgments rendered against the United States by the District Court of the Eastern District of New York; the Eastern District of Virginia; the District Court for the District of Massachusetts, for the relief of Merritt & Chapman Derrick & Wrecking Co.; for the relief of the owner of the steamship Matoa, and for the relief of the owner of the steamship Henry O. Barrett (H. Doc. No. 358); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

657. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting schedules of claims amounting to $3,881,905.11 allowed by the various divisions of the General Accounting Office, as covered by certificates of settlement (H. Doc. N. 359); to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

6032. Also petition of Rose Schneiderman, president, the New York Woman's Trade League, New York City, N. Y., favoring the $240 bonus for Federal employees; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

SENATE.

TUESDAY, June 20, 1922.

(Legislative day of Thursday, April 20, 1922.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I ask that the tariff bill be laid before the Senate——

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I object until we have a quorum.

Mr. McCUMBER. And that the Senate proceed to the consideration of paragraph 329, chains.

Mr. ASHURST. Pending that, I ask for a quorum call.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Mr. TRAMMELL. I wish to announce that my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. CURTIS. I desire to announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] is detained on official business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Sixty-five Senators having answered to their names, there is a quorum present. The Senate will receive a message from the House of Representatives.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 2682) to amend the act entitled "An act to establish a code of law for the District of Columbia, approved March 3, 1901," and the acts amendatory thereof and supplementary thereto.

The message also announced that the House had passed the bill (S. 426) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 1, chapter 209, of the United States Statutes at Large, volume 27, entitled 'An act providing when plaintiff may sue as a poor person and when counsel shall be assigned by the court,' and to provide for the prosecution of writs of error and appeals in forma pauperis, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1910 (36 Stats., p. 866), with an amendment, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

The message further announced that the House had passed the following bills, each with amendments, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

S. 3156. An act to change the terms of the district court for the northern division of the southern district of Alabama; and

S. 3458. An act to authorize the Niagara River Bridge Co. to reconstruct its present bridge across the Niagara River between the State of New York and the Dominion of Canada, or to remove its present bridge and construct, maintain, and operate a new bridge across said river.

The message also announced that the House had passed the following bills, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate:

H. R. 243. An act providing for the construction of a spillway and drainage ditch to lower and maintain the level of Lake Andes, S. Dak.;

H. R. 7156. An act to prohibit the importation and the interstate shipment of certain articles contaminated with anthrax;

H. R. 9528. An act providing for the retention by the Government of the property in Nome, Alaska, known as the Detention Hospital Building, and its use by the Bureau of Education, Department of the Interior;

H. R. 10248. An act authorizing the sale of surplus power developed under the Salt River reclamation project, Arizona;

H. R. 10770. An act to legalize a bridge across the south arm of Pokegama Lake in Itasca County, State of Minnesota;

H. R. 11128. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Rio Grande between the cities of Del Rio, Tex., and Las Vacas, Mexico;

H. R. 11298. An act amending existing law which authorizes the construction of a public building at Paris, Tex., so as to authorize and empower the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire a new site for same by exchanging therefor land and property now owned by the United States Government in said city; and to authorize the erection on said new site, when acquired, of a public building suitable for post-office purposes; and for other purposes;

H. R. 11362. An act declaring Tchula Lake, Holmes County, Miss., to be a nonnavigable stream;

H. R. 11589. An act to provide for the transfer of the lands and buildings of the Federal leprosy investigation station at Kalawao, on the island of Molokai, in the Territory of Hawaii, to the Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes;

H. R. 11590. An act to amend sections 34 and 40 of the organic act of the Territory of Hawaii;

H. R. 11626. An act to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Baton Rouge, La.; and

H. R. 11634. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county of Norman and the town and village of Halstad, in said county, in the State of Minnesota, and the county of Traill and the town of Herberg, in said county, in the State of North Dakota, to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North on the boundary line between said States.

THE TARIFF.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, is the tariff bill now before the Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The tariff bill is before the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, a point of order. When did the bill get before the Senate?

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask to take up for consideration paragraph 329.

Mr. ASHURST. A point of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Arizona will state his point of order.

Mr. ASHURST. I respectfully submit that the tariff bill is not before the Senate. It has not been laid before the Senate by unanimous consent or by motion. One or the other must happen. Neither has happened. The distinguished Senator from North Dakota asked that the tariff bill be laid before the Senate, but before the Chair could put that request I suggested the absence of a quorum. The eligible motion now would be to move to proceed to the consideration of the tariff bill or to ask unanimous consent to proceed to its consideration, and that has not been done.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood that the tariff bill had been laid before the Senate——

Mr. ASHURST. I call for the reading of the reporter's notes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Just a moment. Will the Senator allow the Chair to state his position?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understood the tariff bill had been laid before the Senate prior to the time when the Senate took its recess last evening.

Mr. ASHURST. The record does not disclose that fact.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair was mistaken in that respect. The Senator from Arizona is right, and the point of order is well taken.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of House bill 7456, the tariff bill.

Mr. CURTIS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Kansas?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. CURTIS. The tariff bill is the unfinished business. It was temporarily laid aside. A demand for the regular order brings that measure back before the Senate without a motion of any kind or character.

Mr. McCUMBER. That was my understanding, but I understood that the Chair ruled the other way.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair, not having been present at the time the tariff bill was laid aside, was uninformed in that respect. The Chair is advised by the Assistant Secretary that when the tariff bill was laid aside it was laid aside temporarily for the consideration of the naval appropriation bill.

Mr. ASHURST. If that be true, then my point of order is not well taken. If the record discloses, or if the Chair asserts—and the Chair's word with me is as good as any record——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair will accept the statement of the Assistant Secretary in that respect and hold that the tariff bill is before the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Assistant Secretary says that when the tariff bill was laid aside it was laid aside temporarily to consider the naval appropriation bill, then the tariff bill is before the Senate, and I withdraw the point of order.

Mr. McCUMBER. And I withdraw my motion.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I ask to have printed in the RECORD a letter from one of my constituents with reference to the pending tariff bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The letter referred to is as follows:

Hon. OSCAR W. UNDERWOOD,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Will you please read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the following resolution and have a copy of the RECORD containing it sent me?

"Resolved, That we protest against the food, tableware, and women's wear schedules of the Fordney-McCumber bill. These schedules will increase the cost of living in every American home. They are fines levied by American men upon American women and upon American children. They should not be allowed to become law."

Yours truly, Mrs. J. S. STARKE,
State Chairman Home Economics,
Alabama Federation Women's Clubs,
Representing 10,000 Alabama Women.

ALASKA FUR-SEAL SKINS.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I ask unanimous consent that a communication from the Secretary of Commerce, recently received in response to Senate Resolution 287, agreed to May 27, 1922, containing information relative to sales of Alaska fur-seal skins under the direction of the Secretary of Commerce, and so forth, be printed as a Senate document.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

M. BORIS BAKHMETEFF.

Mr. BORAH. I ask unanimous consent to have inserted in the RECORD an article from The Freeman entitled "A ghost dance of diplomacy."

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

A GHOST DANCE OF DIPLOMACY.

The announcement of M. Boris Bakhmetiev's approaching departure from our shores removes from our vision the costliest diplomatic representative that we have ever entertained, but by no means clears up the mystery of what became of the huge fortune turned over to him by our prodigal Government. In making public the correspondence attendant on the decision to permit M. Bakhmetiev to leave us, the State Department was at pains to have it known that the matter of the departure was all settled before Senator BORAH began his requests for an accounting. The dates on the correspondence were six weeks old at the time of publication. Yet the self-styled ambassador begins his letter with the explanation that his retirement is decided on "in view of recent events." Since the letter as given out by the State Department bears a date prior to the recent events that have caused M. Bakhmetiev's anomalous status to become an embarrassment, it is a fair assumption that the dating of the correspondence is in accordance with the diplomatic rather than the Julian calendar.

When Secretary Hughes remarked recently that the American State Department had not of late years conducted any proceedings that could not be shouted from the housetops he probably did not have the case of M. Bakhmetiev particularly in mind. Nobody has been able to evoke a single shout, or even a whisper, from Mr. Hughes or any other officer of our Government by way of explaining what has become of $188,000,000 of taxpayers' money turned over to M. Bakhmetiev. Neither Mr. Hughes nor any of his predecessors has permitted M. Bakhmetiev to be questioned in the matter, despite no slight public curiosity and occasional efforts by Senators BORAH and REED to secure some illumination. Accompanying the announcement of M. Bakhmetiev's withdrawal, Mr. Hughes made public a letter from Secretary Mellon, which sheds no light on the subject except to note that when M. Bakhmetiev closed out his accounts, March 4, 1921, he turned over to the American Government a cash balance of $70,426.34. This seems a small salvage. Nor is Mr. Mellon's further statement that since that date he has received from M. Bakhmetiev the additional sum of some $338,000, realized "from sales of the Russian Government's property," likely to cheer the sweated taxpayer unduly. Apparently Mr. Hughes's objection to confiscation is not such as to put anything in the way of the irresponsible M. Bakhmetiev in confiscating property of the Russian people for the purpose of private sale.

The adventure of M. Bakhmetiev is a truly romantic chronicle. He was received as ambassador July 5, 1917. At that time his Government was in a precarious position. The Wilson administration, if it had troubled to consult anyone with a practical knowledge of Russian conditions, could easily have learned that it was not likely to outlive the summer. Logic and the trend of events both intimated its early demise. The Russian workers and peasants, having observed how easy it was to get rid of a Czar, were unlikely to boggle at a small political group representing bankers and landlords, especially as the continuance of such a Government implied new and greater sacrifices in a war in which the masses had no interest whatever. Apparently, this never occurred to Mr. Wilson and his advisers; they seemed to think that all that this tottering Russian administration needed was money. The day after M. Bakhmetiev was received he got a loan of $35,000,000. Credits of $450,000,000 were hastily established. There was assurance that Russia would be backed to the extent of $2,000,000,000. By November 1 M. Bakhmetiev had been permitted to draw $186,000,000. A week later his Government vanished forever, but on November 15 he received $2,000,000 more. That was the end of the direct credits, though at later intervals, when M. Bakhmetiev needed a little ready cash, our Government generously purchased some supplies from him, paying $11,000,000, and also paid over to him some $2,000,000 for chartering Russian ships in these waters. One would think that a decent regard for prudence would have impelled our representatives to apply this money against the debt, or at least to hold it against the eventual recognition of some real Russian Government, but nevertheless the shadowy M. Bakhmetiev was permitted to appropriate the amount.

According to official reports, on December 1, 1917, M. Bakhmetiev had paid out on various contracts all the money in his possession except $56,000,000, which he deposited in the National City Bank. This money our Government made no attempt to safeguard for its taxpayers. Subsequently, some $29,000,000 was added to this amount through various sales effected by M. Bakhmetiev. This makes a total of $84,000,000 and the fate of this sum is a secret to this day zealously kept by Government officials from the people who had to raise the money. At different times officials of the State Department and of the Treasury have been questioned about it, though not as a rule with great vigor, by congressional committees. The responses have been confusing.

For instance, Mr. Russell C. Leffingwell, Assistant Secretary of the Treasury, testified before a committee of the House of Representatives, July 26, 1919, that part of our money had been used to maintain M. Bakhmetiev and his staff here in the style to which they had become accustomed after their arrival in this land of easy money. On May 6 last Secretary Hughes sent to the Senate a letter from M. Bakhmetiev, in which it was stated that none of the money had been used for such a purpose. Other discrepancies of a similar nature may be noted in the different statements.

Mr. Leffingwell, testifying before the House committee, gave an ingenious reason for refusing to make public the disposition of this huge fund. He declared that it would violate the diplomatic proprieties to give the details without first obtaining the permission of M. Bakhmetiev's Government. Since that Government was defunct, it was impossible to get this permission. Apparently, therefore, M. Bakhmetiev could represent his dead Government for other substantial purposes, but not for the release of this information.

Yet news of the disposition of some of this money has managed to seep out. It was used to ship munitions and supplies to the various Czarist adventurers who from time to time have attempted to overthrow the Russian Government. In June, 1919, Mr. Frank L. Polk estimated that such supplies "shipped to Russia" amounted in value to between $25,000,000 and $50,000,000. Mr. Leffingwell, who followed him on the stand, testified that the soviet government would be held responsible for this debt incurred by M. Bakhmetiev and used in the attempt to overthrow the soviet government. This is an interpretation of international law that must fill the ordinary yeggman with a sense of futility and frustration. Secretary Houston, in February, 1921, confirmed Mr. Polk's admission. "A substantial amount of property has been sent to Russians in territory not in control of the Bolsheviki," he declared. It is a fair guess that this "property" consisted neither of primers nor of pruning hooks. Incidentally, we know, too, that M. Bakhmetiev spent a considerable sum in this country for the printing of many bales of Russian rubles in behalf of one of the counterrevolutionary enterprises. Furthermore, although after November 15, 1917, he paid no interest on the $188,000,000 loaned to him by the American Government, the money was used for nearly two years longer to pay interest on loans of $86,000,000 that had been engineered by a syndicate of American bankers.

Just how much remains of M. Bakhmetiev's American fortune or his American war supplies is a mystery. He leaves for Paris, where he will find company as congenial as the membership of the Czarist division of our own State Department. Rumor has it that General Wrangel is gathering the clans for one more effort to bring back the glad old days, and it may be that M. Bakhmetiev has been thrifty enough to be able to furnish some of the sinews of war. The devastation which Wrangel left in the wake of his last essay multiplied immeasurably the difficulty of dealing with the famine, and those humane Americans who have contributed for the relief of Russian sufferers may well wonder whether the money exacted from their patriotism a few years back is still being used to intensify that suffering.

As one ponders over the obscure and fragmentary facts that are available concerning the Bakhmetiev incident, it is increasingly difficult to recall that the American people once fought a bitterly difficult war for the abolition of taxation without representation. M. Bakhmetiev has demonstrated that to-day the American people are without representation in the State Department and the Treasury Department. This is an unfortunate condition, and possibly it distresses Messrs. Hughes and Mellon as well as the rest of us, though we do not think it does. In connection therewith, we trust no "blackguardly person" will criticize either of these gentlemen unduly, for it is a condition which they inherited among a number of other embarrassments. No doubt both gentlemen will be grateful to us for pointing out that departmental irresponsibility leads directly to dissipation of the taxpayers' funds on futilities such as this Russian adventure. No British Government would be likely in so heavy-handed a way to waste $200,000,000 on the ambassador of a phantom government and his romantic military friends, because any cantankerous member of Parliament could at any time secure an accounting. It would seem that when the founding fathers ousted George III they made a mistake in not retaining the British practice of holding political administrators directly accountable for their acts.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. LADD presented a petition of members of the First Baptist Church of Roseglen, N. Dak., praying for the granting of relief to the suffering peoples of Armenia, which was referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

Mr. SHEPPARD presented a resolution of the Women's Christian Temperance Union of San Antonio, Tex., protesting against the sale or disposition of intoxicating liquors on American vessels and the granting of subsidies to American vessels selling such liquors, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

Mr. McKINLEY presented a petition of sundry Federal employees of Chicago, Ill., praying for the passage of the bill (H. R. 8928) to provide for the classification of civilian positions within the District of Columbia and in the field services, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations.

BILLS INTRODUCED.

Bills were introduced, read the first time, and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as follows:

By Mr. JOHNSON (by request):

A bill (S. 3731) to amend an act entitled "An act to prevent the extermination of fur-bearing animals in Alaska," etc.; to the Committee on Commerce.

By Mr. STANLEY:

A bill (S. 3732) declaring a part of Tradewater River, in the State of Kentucky, to be a nonnavigable stream; to the Committee on Commerce.

AMENDMENTS TO HOUSE RIVER AND HARBOR AUTHORIZATION BILL.

Mr. JOHNSON submitted an amendment providing for improvement work at Oakland Harbor, Calif., intended to be proposed by him to House bill 10766, the river and harbor authorization bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

Mr. EDGE submitted an amendment providing for improvement work on the Passaic River, N. J., above the Montclair and Greenwood Lake Railway Bridge, intended to be proposed by him to House bill 10766, the river and harbor authorization bill, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce and ordered to be printed.

HOUSE BILLS REFERRED.

The following bills were severally read twice by title, and referred as indicated below:

H. R. 243. An act providing for the construction of a spillway and drainage ditch to lower and maintain the level of Lake Andes, S. Dak.; to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

H. R. 7156. An act to prohibit the importation and the interstate shipment of certain articles contaminated with anthrax; to the Committee on Finance.

H. R. 10248. An act authorizing the sale of surplus power developed under the Salt River reclamation project, Ariz.; to the Committee on Irrigation and Reclamation.

H. R. 9528. An act providing for the retention by the Government of the property in Nome, Alaska, known as the Detention Hospital Building, and its use by the Bureau of Education, Department of the Interior; and

H. R. 11298. An act amending existing law which authorizes the construction of a public building at Paris, Tex., so as to authorize and empower the Secretary of the Treasury to acquire a new site for same by exchanging therefor land and property now owned by the United States Government in said city, and to authorize the erection on said new site, when acquired, of a public building suitable for post-office purposes, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Public Buildings and Grounds.

H. R. 11589. An act to provide for the transfer of the lands and buildings of the Federal leprosy investigation station at Kalawao, on the island of Molokai, in the Territory of Hawaii, to the Territory of Hawaii, and for other purposes; and

H. R. 11590. An act to amend sections 34 and 40 of the organic act of the Territory of Hawaii; to the Committee on Territories and Insular Possessions.

H. R. 10770. An act to legalize a bridge across the south arm of Pokegama Lake in Itasca County, State of Minnesota;

H. R. 11128. An act to authorize the construction of a bridge over the Rio Grande between the cities of Del Rio, Tex., and Las Vacas, Mexico;

H. R. 11362. An act declaring Tchula Lake, Holmes County, Miss., to be a nonnavigable stream;

H. R. 11626. An act to extend the time for constructing a bridge across the Mississippi River at or near the city of Baton Rouge, La.; and

H. R. 11634. An act granting the consent of Congress to the county of Norman and the town and village of Halstad, in said county, in the State of Minnesota, and the county of Traill and the town of Herberg, in said county, in the State of North Dakota, to construct a bridge across the Red River of the North on the boundary line between said States; to the Committee on Commerce.

BENJAMIN O. KERLEE.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 494) for the relief of Benjamine O. Kerlee, which were, on page 1, line 5, to strike out "Benjamine" and insert "Benjamin," and to amend the title so as to read: "A bill for the relief of Benjamin O. Kerlee."

Mr. MYERS. I move that the Senate concur in the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill.

The motion was agreed to.

LITIGATION BY POOR SUITORS.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore laid before the Senate the amendment of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 426) to amend an act entitled "An act to amend section 1, chapter 209, of the United States Statutes at Large, volume 27, entitled 'An act providing when plaintiff may sue as a poor person and when counsel shall be assigned by the court,' and to provide for the prosecution of writs of error and appeals in forma pauperis, and for other purposes," approved June 25, 1910, which was, on page 2, line 25, to strike out "or," where it occurs the second time, and to insert "of."

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the amendment is merely designed to correct a misprint in the bill by striking out the word "or" and inserting in place of it the word "of." I move that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

COURTS IN ALABAMA.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair) laid before the Senate the amendments of the House of Representatives to the bill (S. 3156) to change the terms of the District Court for the Northern Division of the Southern District of Alabama, which were to strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

That section 70 of an act entitled "An act to codify, revise, and amend the laws relating to the judiciary," approved March 3, 1911, as amended, be, and the same is hereby, further amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 70. That the State of Alabama is divided into three judicial districts, to be known as the northern, middle, and southern districts of Alabama. The northern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Cullman, Jackson, Lawrence, Limestone, Madison, and Morgan, which shall constitute the northeastern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Colbert, Franklin, and Lauderdale, which shall constitute the northwestern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Cherokee, Dekalb, Etowah, Marshall, and St. Clair, which shall constitute the middle division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Blount, Jefferson, and Shelby, which shall constitute the southern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Walker, Winston, Marion, Fayette, and Lamar, which shall constitute the Jasper division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Calhoun, Clay, Cleburne, and Talladega, which shall constitute the eastern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Bibb, Greene, Pickens, Sumter, and Tuscaloosa, which shall constitute the western division of said district. Terms of the district court for the northeastern division shall be held at Huntsville on the first Tuesday in April and the second Tuesday in October; for the northwestern division, at Florence on the second Tuesday in February and the third Tuesday in October: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Florence shall be furnished free of expense to the Government; for the middle division, at Gadsden on the first Tuesdays in February and August: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Gadsden shall be furnished free of expense to the Government; for the southern division, at Birmingham on the first Mondays in March and September, which courts shall remain in session for the transaction of business at least six months in each calendar year; for the Jasper division, at Jasper on the second Tuesdays in January and June: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Jasper shall be furnished free of expense to the Government; for the eastern division, at Anniston on the first Mondays in May and November; and for the western division, at Tuscaloosa on the first Tuesdays in January and June. The clerk of the court for the northern district shall maintain an office, in charge of himself or a deputy, at Anniston, at Florence, at Jasper, and at Gadsden, which shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of said court. The district judge for the northern district shall reside at Birmingham. The middle district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Autauga, Barbour, Bullock, Butler, Chilton, Coosa, Covington, Crenshaw, Elmore, Lowndes, Montgomery, and Pike, which shall constitute the northern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Coffee, Dale, Geneva, Henry, and Houston, which shall constitute the southern division of said district; also the territory embraced on the date last mentioned in the counties of Chambers, Lee, Macon, Randolph, Russell, and Tallapoosa, which shall constitute the eastern division of said middle judicial district. Terms of the district court for the northern division shall be held at Montgomery on the first Tuesdays in May and December; for the southern division, at Dothan on the first Mondays in June and December; and for the eastern division, at Opelika on the first Mondays in April and November: Provided, That suitable rooms and accommodations for holding court at Opelika shall be furnished free of expense to the Government. The clerk of the court for the middle district shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at Dothan, and shall maintain an office in charge of himself or a deputy at Opelika, which said offices at Dothan and Opelika shall be kept open at all times for the transaction of the business of said divisions. The southern district shall include the territory embraced on the 1st day of July, 1910, in the counties of Baldwin, Choctaw, Clarke, Conecuh, Escambia, Mobile, Monroe, and Washington, which shall constitute the southern division of said district; also the territory embraced in the date last mentioned in the counties of Dallas, Hale, Marengo, Perry, and Wilcox, which shall constitute the northern division of said district. Terms of the district court for the southern division shall be held at Mobile on the fourth Mondays in May and November; and for the northern division, at Selma on the second Mondays in January and July."

And to amend the title so as to read: "An act to amend section 70 of the Judicial Code."

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I understand the House amendment changes the language but does not change the substance. It is merely in reference to fixing a term of the court, and I move that the Senate concur in the House amendments.

The motion was agreed to.

THE TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. McCUMBER. I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of paragraph 329, chains.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota asks unanimous consent to consider at this time paragraph 329. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McCUMBER. The committee report certain amendments to that paragraph. I desire to call attention to quite a number of amendments to be offered to the paragraph, so that we may better understand it.

On line 15, page 64, in paragraph 329, the committee proposes to strike out "1 cent" and insert in lieu thereof "seven-eighths of 1 cent"; on line 17, to strike out "1½" and insert "1⅛"; on line 19, to strike out "2½" and insert "1⅝"; on line 20, to strike out "4" and insert "3"; on line 23, to strike out "50" and insert in lieu thereof "35."

Of course, these amendments will be entitled to be voted upon separately, and the first question will be upon the first amendment, proposing to insert "seven-eighths of," on line 15, page 64, and I move that amendment, Mr. President.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, will the Senator from North Dakota advise us how the proposed changes compare with existing law in these several items?

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes. They represent duties something above the existing law, and are substantially, and I do not know but entirely, the same as the Payne-Aldrich law.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I desire to read to the Senate a resolution which was recently adopted by the Nebraska Retail Hardware Association:

LINCOLN, NEBR., June 10, 1922.

GILBERT M. HITCHCOCK,
Washington, D. C.

DEAR MR. HITCHCOCK: At a group meeting of members of the Nebraska Retail Hardware Association held at Crete, Nebr., June 1, there being present representatives from Crete, Fairmont, Dorchester, Sprague, Milford, Friend, De Witt, Jansen, Chappell, and Lincoln, Nebr., the following resolution was unanimously adopted, and the secretary of the Nebraska Retail Hardware Association was instructed to convey to you the following resolution opposing the enactment of the proposed tariff bill now under consideration:

Resolution.

"Whereas the Nebraska Retail Hardware Dealers, who were present at this meeting, are unalterably opposed to unnecessary advances in the prices of commodities; and

"Whereas they believe that higher prices will react unfavorably against the retailer; and

"Whereas the proposed tariff bill under consideration at the present time in the United States Senate will in our belief cause a needless increase in prices due to the large increase in tariff rates on many commodities, the ones we are especially interested in being such items as are carried in a hardware store: Therefore be it

"Resolved, That this group meeting convey to the Senators and Representatives from Nebraska this resolution opposing the enactment of the proposed tariff bill now under consideration."

Very truly yours,

THE NEBRASKA RETAIL HARDWARE ASSOCIATION,
GEO. H. DIETZ, Secretary.

Mr. President, I desire to say to the Senator from North Dakota that that resolution, which was passed at a group meeting of hardware merchants in Nebraska covering a considerable area of territory, represents the opinion of the western business man without regard to politics; and I present the resolution as what might be termed a nonpartisan or a bipartisan protest against the proposed increases in the tariff by the pending bill. It is the universal opinion among the merchants and retail dealers of the West that this bill means an increase in the prices that retail dealers will be compelled to charge their customers. I think it is fair to say to the Senator from North Dakota that if he could have a referendum of Republicans in his own State he would find that an overwhelming majority of them are opposed to this bill. They are opposed to it because they believe that it means an increase in the cost of living to the American people. I present this resolution at this time because it happens to be appropriate to the pending paragraph.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I find very little difference in the people of any State or of any community with reference to their views upon the tariff situation. While they are practically, and especially in the Northern States, all supporters of a protective policy, each one is against protection for the things that he buys and must buy; each one wants to buy in the place of cheapest cost and would like to sell in the place of greatest price. It is impossible, however, Mr. President, to formulate a tariff bill that will meet both of those conditions. A tariff bill, if it be protective and if it is based upon the protective idea, must protect each and every one of the industries.

I do not agree that this bill, if passed, is going to necessitate any higher prices for hardware. I am satisfied that the prices of all commodities have got to come down, tariff or no tariff; and I am certain most of them will come down. It may be a little difficult to say that the law of supply and demand is not a controlling factor, for it does govern to a great extent in the sale of commodities. It is, nevertheless, equally true that commodities are sold for the highest price that is obtainable; but I think, in view of present high prices, commodities can go down considerably and yet leave a good profit to the retailer. I am certain the manufactured product is going down throughout the country, and I see no reason why the retailers, after they shall have disposed of what they have on hand which they purchased at the higher price, should not also lower their prices to meet the lower cost of the manufactured product.

Mr. President, that is all I can say with reference to the objection of hardware merchants or any other merchants to the pending bill. Either we have got to sustain the principle of protection as a national policy or we have got to surrender it entirely and let everyone go into the cheapest market he can find to purchase his products.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, I should like to ask the Senator from North Dakota whether he advocates an increase in the tariff on chains against foreign competition on the theory that, after increasing the tariff against the importation of chains from abroad, the manufacturer in this country will lower the prices here?

Mr. McCUMBER. I think there is sufficient competition in this country for the American to fix his price without reference to the duty which we put upon the article in this bill. Under a tariff substantially the same as this that is now proposed they sold at a very much lower price than they are selling to-day and have been selling, and if they could then sell at a very much lower price than they are selling to-day, with the recurrence of normal conditions, I have not any doubt in the world that they will again sell at a much lower price than that which obtains to-day.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Do I understand the Senator to say that the manufacturers will reduce the price of chains in this country?

Mr. McCUMBER. I believe the manufacturers will reduce the price of chains in this country, and I think probably they will have to reduce the price in order to stimulate the market and the demand for them.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Then I ask the Senator what object there is in increasing the tariff duty if, in his opinion, the manufacturers can afford now to reduce the price of chains?

Mr. McCUMBER. If this tariff were based upon what might be done at the present time with the present cost of the article in the foreign country, I would say that we need a greater tariff than we have now; but the tariff is made with reference to future conditions, and the future conditions will, in my opinion, justify the rate which we have given in order adequately to protect the American industry, although to-day it might possibly not need to be as high as the old law was from 1909 to 1913.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Now, let me ask the Senator what conditions he is afraid of and in what country?

Mr. McCUMBER. During the last six months, Mr. President, there have been considerable importations coming in not only from England but from France and Germany; there has been a steady increase in the importations, and I have no doubt that, as we approach a more normal condition, prices will go down both for the imported and for the American article.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Now, let me ask the Senator a further question. Is it not a fact that the German exports at the present time are only a third of what they were before the war?

Mr. McCUMBER. Certainly, and a little while ago they were only one-sixth of what they were before the war, and a little previous to that they were only one-twentieth of what they were before the war.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me ask the Senator another question. Is it not a fact that we export nearly three times as much to Germany as Germany exports to us?

Mr. McCUMBER. Not of chains.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I mean exports, generally speaking.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, yes; Germany has got to buy a whole lot of things that she herself does not produce.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. So that the Senator is directing this tariff against the future conditions in Germany and not against existing conditions?

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, Mr. President, there are conditions that are developing. We have got to start our plants working; we have got to broaden our production, and that is just as surely going to happen as day is going to follow night, and in building up a tariff bill anyone who blindly fails to see the changing conditions and to recognize them would formulate a very poor tariff bill at this time.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Now, I understand that the Senator is directing the rates in this schedule and in other schedules not against existing conditions, but against what he presumes or guesses will be future conditions.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, any country can make chains; Germany can make them; France can make them; Great Britain can make them. Any one of those countries, with their cheaper labor, in my opinion, can make them cheaper than we can.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Are they doing it now?

Mr. McCUMBER. They did do it under a law that was practically the equivalent of this, and I will say that they are doing it now; but they are not swamping our market as yet and we are not going to wait until they do.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Now, will the Senator please give the statistics. He has abandoned his prophetic attitude and says they are doing it now.

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, Mr. President, I have abandoned nothing. Until the Senator can meet me in a fair and courteous manner in the discussion I decline to yield. I have abandoned nothing that I have said, neither prophetic nor otherwise, and the Senator has no right to charge that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me ask the Senator another question. Did not the Senator state that under existing conditions this schedule might not be justified, but that for future conditions it was justified?

Mr. McCUMBER. I said that to-day there is not a sufficient quantity of importations coming in to hurt us materially; but those importations have grown quite rapidly in the last six months; and, in my opinion, they will continue to grow until the present rate of duty will be insufficient properly to protect us.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator is referring to Germany?

Mr. McCUMBER. I am referring to all the countries from which the imports are coming.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is the Senator able to give the statistics?

Mr. McCUMBER. Oh, yes; I will give them in a short time to the Senator from Nebraska. The Senator from Connecticut [Mr. McLEAN], however, is desirous of discussing this question, and I wished in my own time merely to state what we had reported and our reasons for our action.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I will say to the Senator that I will take occasion to-morrow to show that the bogey of German competition is a myth, and that the attempt to erect a tariff against possible German competition is an attempt to continue commercially a war which stopped a good while ago in a military sense; that it is utterly unjustified, and is done in the interest of a few manufacturers of the United States and at the expense of the American people.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I recognize——

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I will yield in a moment. I recognize that there is a line of thought on the other side of the Chamber to the effect that our great competitor from 1900 to 1913 will never come back again into the field as a great competitor. I disagree with them upon that. That is only a difference of opinion; and I can see no reason on earth why a country which could compete with us when her wages were about half what ours were can not more than compete with us when they have dropped to one-fifth what ours are.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I want to give the Senator from Nebraska certain facts about which he seemed to be inquiring, namely, as to what is now taking place in the chain industry. I happen to have before me a copy of a telegram from the Cleveland Chain Products Co., of my State. I may say, for the comfort of the Senator, that so far as I know there is no monopoly in this business. I know of seven or eight independent small concerns in the State of Ohio manufacturing chain.

Here is a telegram from the Cleveland Chain Products Co. which will throw some light on the particular matter about which the Senator inquired:

German goods in Argentine laid down for 20 per cent our prices.

Yet the Senator says this is purely speculative and is a matter of prophecy. Here is the actual fact, now, on the 8th day of June.

German goods in Argentine laid down for 20 per cent our prices. Arbillia—

I judge that is one of the agents of the company—reports in Greece that our lowest prices are as 90 drachmas to 17 drachmas. In France our prices to-day average five times cost of similar goods. This reported by Peubrier.

I judge that is the agent of this company.

Belgium shipments are returned to us because customers can not afford to pay our price, even after we cut bill in two, claiming our prices still 200 to 300 per cent high. To summarize, reports from every section indicate that German-made goods can be offered in competition at approximately 15 to 20 per cent of American prices.

That is not prophetic. That is not speculative. That is the actual fact, now that these goods are being offered at from 15 to 20 per cent of the American price.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, they are not being offered in the United States at any such fictitious proportions, and it can not be shown that they are offered here.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I do not know what the Senator means by saying "fictitious proportions." This is the fact that I am giving the Senator. There is nothing fictitious about this.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Those are unsupported statements relating to something that is occurring in South America. I know the facts to be these, and the statistics show the facts to be these—that German commerce now is practically stationary; that Germany has been unable to push her exports, with all of her great efforts, to more than one-third of what they were before the war, and they are only one-third now; and, as a matter of fact, the United States is exporting to Germany nearly three times as much as Germany is exporting to the United States.

Mr. WILLIS. Not of chains.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The Senator has not given us the figures on chains. I have asked for them. I have not seen them; but I have not been able to find that anyone has been able to show any considerable increase in German exports to the United States. I find constantly the desire to raise a wall against doing business with Germany.

Does not the Senator know that Germany is our great customer in Europe to-day; that our trade with Germany is increasing more rapidly, as far as our own exports go, than our trade with any other country; that the one thing the United States needs at the present time above all others is a market for our surplus goods, and Germany is our hope? We can double and treble our exports to Germany if Germany is only given a chance to do business with us and with the rest of the world; and yet in the United States we are doing in this bill just exactly what France and what Great Britain have done: We are attempting to bar out trade with Germany from the foolish fear that German trade is going to injure us.

German trade would be a benefit to us. Germany never can hope to export to us as much as we can export to Germany. Germany needs so much of our raw material—so much of our cotton, so much of our copper, so much of our oil, so much of our grain, so much of our cattle, so much of our meats—that Germany is the very customer of Europe that we should encourage business with; and yet, above all other countries in the world, this bill is directed against Germany. We hear it constantly on every hand. The purpose of the bill is to shut out German goods, not against present importations—there is no pretense that present importations are injuring American business—but it is just for the future. We are asked to build a tariff wall so high as to shut out German goods, and then hope that American manufacturers, as the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] says, will reduce their charges to American customers! What warrant is there for the belief that the American manufacturers, when given a prohibitive tariff for their benefit, are going to reduce the cost to the American people? We are right now on the very eve of an era of trust formation behind the wall that you are trying to erect in this bill.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think a complete answer to the statement made by the Senator from Nebraska may be found in an article in the Washington Herald, dated Sunday, June 18. It is very short, and if the Senator will yield, I will ask that it may be read from the desk.

Mr. WILLIS. I yield.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and the Secretary will read the article.

The reading clerk read as follows:

[From the Washington Herald of June 18, 1922.]

GERMANS DEMAND CONTROL OF UNITED STATES DYE INDUSTRY—THREATEN LOSS OF PROFITS UNLESS AMERICANS AGREE TO COMBINATION.

PARIS, June 17.—The German dye industry, which is the backbone of the German chemical warfare operations, is rapidly approaching its pre-war dominance—already it holds most of the dye trade of Europe. During the month the Germans have made arrangements with the leading dye company of Italy and the leading French Compagnie Nationale des Matieres Colorants, giving them a strangle hold on the dye trade of the two countries. A similar arrangement with a British dyestuffs corporation is about to be signed.

Regarding the dye situation in America, Herr von Weinburg, the head of a leading German dye corporation, said:

"Possibly you can make dye as well as we can, but through 40 years' experience we have learned to make them cheaper than you. We will send you experts and let you use German processes if you will give us part control of your companies. By cooperating with us you can profit, but if you do otherwise you can not. We will agree not to compete in our own countries, and we will be willing to divide up the Orient and Latin-American trade among ourselves."

The French company, of which the French Government actually is a part owner, still denies German control, but from American sources it is learned that an agreement already is in operation. The German discussion with British dye interests are open.

The German dominance of the dye trade in Europe thwarts Annex VI of the treaty of Versailles which elaborated provisions to build up the allied industries by including delivery of one-fourth the German dye production until the end of 1924.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, the article which has just been read at the desk shows the general principle that actuates our competitors beyond the sea. They are willing to go to any extent to capture the American market. I am not one of those who worry constantly about what is going to happen to Germany. Senators indulge in eloquent argument about what is going to happen to that country, and tell us that if Germany is not prosperous she will not trade with us, and all that sort of thing. That is a fallacy that was exploded about 60 years ago. A country will buy where it is to its advantage to buy.

The Senator from Nebraska says that Germany is one of our best customers. Very well. So be it. She will continue to be. If we can sell to her things that she wants, and can sell them cheaper than some other country can sell them, Germany will buy those things of us whether we buy anything of Germany or not. That is the theory that is always advocated by our friends who take the revenue view or the free-trade view of the tariff question—that we can not sell to a country unless we buy of that country. It is simply an exploded fallacy. That is all there is to it.

I repeat that so far as I am concerned I am not worrying about Germany, but I am concerned as to whether the industries of this country shall continue to operate.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to the Senator from Montana.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. HITCHCOCK] did not have at hand the information concerning the manufacture of chains in this country; but I have the figures here, and if the Senator will permit me I shall be very glad to submit them briefly.

The Tariff Commission reports:

The United States is a large producer of chains made of iron or steel, but statistics are not available. A representative of an important producer estimated the investment in the chain industry in 1918 at $5,000,000 and the country's normal output at $10,000,000.

Imports of chains are small compared with exports. During the years 1918 and 1919 there was a large importation for the construction and equipment of vessels. In the tabulation below imports are given both by kinds and uses.

The amounts are perfectly insignificant—perfectly insignificant. Of one class there was $44,000 worth in 1920, of another class $69,000 worth, of another class $24,000 worth, and that is all.

On the other hand—

Exports of chains have been since 1917, by calendar years, as follows: 1918, $1,940,000; 1919, $3,318,565; 1920, $3,335,637.

That is the situation under which a tariff is asked in order to protect the home market from an inundation of chains from Germany, when as a matter of fact we are exporting apparently one-third to one-half of what we produce in this country—in which, by the way, we lead the world.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, I am perfectly familiar with the figures the Senator has quoted. I have no doubt he has quoted them accurately, and they prove nothing at all, because here is the fact: As everybody knows, during the war the great chain industry in Germany was largely broken up. They are just getting hold of themselves; and this I say to the Senator: Their agents, their traveling salesmen are in this country now offering chain at prices clear below the American cost of production. If the Senator wants the chain that is to be used in this country to be manufactured in Germany and wants our own plants in Ohio and other places to close down, with the workingmen in the street, he can very easily bring about that condition; but I do not believe in that policy.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President, will the Senator suffer another interruption?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield to my friend.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. It is a question as to whether, in fixing these duties, we shall be governed by ex parte information, such as is conveyed by some interested manufacturer, or whether we will take the conclusions of the Tariff Commission.

Mr. WILLIS. What is the date of the figures the Senator read?

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I gave those of 1920.

Mr. WILLIS. Precisely; and what I am talking about has occurred within the last six months.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I will give the figures for the first nine months of 1921. Of one class there was $20,000 worth, of another class there was $595 worth, and of another class there was $19,035 worth in the first nine months of 1921. I submit that we ought to be governed in our action in this matter by some reliable kind of information. This is the prognostication of the Tariff Commission, as contrasted with that of the Senator from Ohio.

The commission says:

Chains are largely made by automatic or semiautomatic machinery. Even in the production of heavy chains machinery is beginning to displace hand labor. Raw materials play an important part in costs of production. The chief raw material is iron or steel in the form of bars or heavy wire, although some chains are made of brass. For finishing or plating brass, copper, zinc, tin, nickel, asphalt, benzine, and japan are used. The chain industry is one in which the trend is toward large-scale production, with combination of formerly independent plants and larger investment in plant and equipment. It is therefore an industry well suited to American conditions of production and American producers should be able to meet foreign competition successfully. The domestic industry is now well established, imports are relatively small, and a large export trade has been developed. Prior to 1918 no export statistics are available, but before that date American chains had appeared in the world market in competition with the chains of European producers. However, exports before 1914 were purely nominal, and in that year imports increased substantially when the low tariff of 20 to 25 per cent went into effect. The chief advantages of England and Germany in the export field before the war were low freight rates. Germany undersold England, France, and Belgium, but put out an inferior product. With favorable freight rates, American producers should be able to retain a place in the export field.

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, if the Senator has finished reading, I want to make two observations touching that. First, the devotion of the Senator from Montana to the findings of the Tariff Commission is certainly touching, because a few days ago, when the manganese duty was under discussion, the Senator put aside the findings of the Tariff Commission with a wave of his hand and himself voted for a duty practically prohibitive on the importation of manganese, manganese being produced to some extent in the State of Montana. I do not find fault with the Senator for that; but in order to reach that conclusion he was obliged to put aside the findings of the Tariff Commission. Now the findings of the Tariff Commission are good.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. The Senator from Montana attacked the findings of the commission on that subject by something more than a mere letter from somebody.

Mr. WILLIS. I am not through with the findings of the commission. I call the attention of the Senate to the fact that what the Senator has read from this survey was prepared for the Ways and Means Committee in 1919. But a good many things have happened since 1919. I am intensely interested in current matters and not in ancient history. The fact of the business is that there are now in this country representatives of the producers of German chains who are offering their products at prices away below the cost of the American production, and I have seen their official offerings.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President, of course it is all very interesting to hear about these offers, but can the Senator give the statistics showing that German chains are coming into this country and being sold in large quantities so as to endanger our industry?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President, the Senator knows, and he knows that I know, that you can not obtain statistics up to yesterday. That is the trouble with Senators——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the Senator give the statistics for January or February?

Mr. WILLIS. No; because no statistics are available for that period, as the Senator perfectly well knows.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Suppose we should produce the statistics for January, February, and March and show that there is no increase whatever in the import of German chains or any other kind of chains; would that satisfy the Senator?

Mr. WILLIS. I would accept any statement the Senator might make, but it would not have the slightest bearing upon that about which I am speaking. I am saying that now, to-day, in this country there are representatives of the manufacturers of German chains who are offering their products at prices below the cost of production in this country. What may have been imported in January or February could have no bearing on that.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Can the Senator give the statistics for any month since the war?

Mr. WILLIS. I am not interested in them, and the Senate is not interested in them. If the Senator wants to give the statistics, he is at liberty to do so. I am calling his attention to a condition. But I decline to be diverted from the point I was making.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Would not the statistics reveal the conditions better than a mere naked statement some dealer has made? Would not the statistics for one month throw some light on the subject? Can the Senator give statistics for a single month within the last four years which sustain in any degree the attitude he takes, that we need an increase in the import duty on chains?

Mr. WILLIS. I fear it is utterly impossible for me to make myself understood by my friend from Nebraska. What I am trying to show to him and to the Senate is this: That a condition has developed within the last month or two—within the last few weeks, as a matter of fact. These men are now in this country offering their products, and I have read the telegram showing that fact.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Has a single carload of chains been imported at those prices?

Mr. WILLIS. I do not know, and I do not care. It has not the slightest bearing upon this proposition. The fact is that this chain is being offered at 15 to 20 per cent of the price at which our chains can be offered. The fact that it has not arrived here yet does not make any difference.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Ohio yield to the Senator from New Mexico?

Mr. WILLIS. I yield.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If I have been able to follow the line of argument of the Senator from Ohio, it amounts to this: That if any amount of an article is offered for sale in the United States the Senator would place the tariff so high as to prevent the importation of that article.

Mr. WILLIS. Certainly not. I never have said anything of that kind, or thought anything of that kind. I advocate no such proposition. I do advocate a tariff that will place the producers and the workingmen of this country on an equality in production with the workingmen of other countries.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. If the Senator will permit an observation, he has undertaken to present to the Senate one instance of chains being offered for sale in the American market. He says that that is all the evidence he needs. Any person who can use one single incident, such as the Senator has mentioned, as a sufficient reason for increasing the tariff must have the opinion that whenever any amount of a foreign article comes into the United States, however small, should debar it. In other words, the logic of the Senator's argument is that an embargo tariff should be imposed whenever any commodity comes into this country from any other, regardless of its amount.

Mr. WILLIS. Of course, I do not favor prohibitive rates and have not indicated that I favored such rates. Furthermore, the position I have taken is not based upon one instance but upon very numerous ones. As an illustration of that I ask to print in the RECORD as an appendix to my remarks the telegram, a portion of which I have read, and extracts from three letters I have received.

Incidentally, let me suggest to my friend from New Mexico that the particular amendments under discussion do not increase the rate but rather decrease it. They ought, therefore, receive the support of the Senator from New Mexico.

APPENDIX.

CLEVELAND, OHIO, June 8, 1922.

Mr. CHAS. M. LUTHY,
Hotel Willard, Washington, D. C.:

German goods in Argentina laid down for 20 per cent our prices. Arbillia reports in Greece that our lowest prices are as 90 drachmas to 17 drachmas. In France our prices to-day average five times cost of similar goods. This reported by Peubrier. Belgium shipments are returned to us because customers can not afford to pay our price even after we cut bill in two, claiming our prices still 200 to 300 per cent high. To summarize, reports from every section indicate that German-made goods can be offered in competition at approximately 15 to 20 per cent of American prices.

THE CHAIN PRODUCTS CO.

Concerning the nature of competition American producers are compelled to meet, the Columbus-McKinnon Chain Co. says:

We understand Senate Finance Committee proposes cutting ad valorem duty on chain from 45 to 35 per cent on ground of large exports and imports of no consequence. If this is done our business on grades of chain under that classification will be seriously handicapped, as German agents are already in country offering chain at prices equal to or below our cost. Number of shipments already received. We respectfully ask that duty of 45 per cent be maintained in new schedule.

L. D. Cull, secretary and treasurer of the Cleveland Chain & Manufacturing Co., states:

We are unable to compete with European makers in our own country. For instance, the George Washington Co. showed the writer only two weeks ago prices on chain which were over 2 cents per pound less than our cost. This was understood to be German chain, at least the quotation was made by a New York broker, who said it was a foreign make. Have run up against this same proposition in Chicago, Milwaukee, and quite a number of cities. The chain appears to be equally as good as American chain, and if we do not have proper protection we will be unable to exist against such competition.

And the Hayden-Corbett plant, Columbus, reports:

Germany is now selling chain in this country at a less price than the American manufacturers can sell at this time, and we feel that with the reduction Germany would soon be selling chain here in large quantities at very much less than it can be produced in this country, which would be very detrimental to the chain industry as well as the workmen in this industry.

Hoping to hear from you, I remain,
Respectfully yours,

UNITED STATES CHAIN & FORGING CO.,
J. T. CORBETT, Chairman of the Board.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House disagreed to the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H. R. 11228) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes; agreed to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and that Mr. KELLEY of Michigan, Mr. FRENCH, Mr. MADDEN, Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina, and Mr. OLIVER were appointed managers on the part of the House at the conference.

ADJUSTED COMPENSATION FOR WORLD WAR VETERANS.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I have tried since 11 o'clock to get the floor to make a motion. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] and the Senator from Ohio [Mr. WILLIS] have had the floor since 11 o'clock, and of course neither of them could be expected to yield for the purpose of allowing me to make the motion I intend to offer.

I purpose to make a motion to change the order of business. I would have made it at the very outset, before we renewed to-day the discussion of the tariff bill, had I had an opportunity, and the fact that it is made at this time, when the tariff is under discussion, is not my fault.

It has seemed to some of the minority members of the Finance Committee, whom I represent in making this motion, that portion of whom favor the legislation about to be referred to, that an effort should be made at this time to take up for consideration the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill. On two occasions within the last month I personally have been publicly assured in this Chamber by the Senator from North Dakota that within a reasonable time he would request the Senate to proceed to take up the adjusted compensation bill and set aside the tariff bill.

The senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] has been promised that if he would delay calling up this matter a motion would be made to lay aside the tariff bill for the compensation bill by the Senator in charge of the tariff bill. We intend now to find out whether or not these promises are to be kept. It was not made to me, or to the other Senators in this body, upon the condition of some action to be taken by a conference of any group of Senators. It was made in good faith. It was made to the country. It was made to everybody interested in the soldiers' adjusted compensation legislation. We intend to demand that these promises be kept. We intend to show by our votes that we are not responsible for defeating this bill by delay.

The third effort is at hand to postpone this bill, and indirectly kill this measure. The first time it was reported to this body it was not called up for consideration because it was claimed that the time was too short before adjournment to give it proper consideration. The second time it was before this body it was recommitted to the Finance Committee at the suggestion of the Executive and on the claim that we did not have money enough to meet the obligations named and stated in the bill. Now, it is proposed to postpone it again because the majority Members of this body have decided to proceed with the consideration of the tariff measure, and are not ready to go on record for or against this measure.

Let the soldiers of this country know that this tariff bill has been set aside on several occasions to consider other legislation. It was set aside only a few days ago to consider the naval appropriation bill. It was set aside a week or 10 days ago to consider the Army appropriation bill. The tariff bill can be, has been, and will be set aside whenever the majority in this Chamber are in favor of a bill they want passed.

Mr. President, those of us who have interested ourselves in this legislation, those of us who have said we would do our utmost to have it enacted into law, propose to have a record vote, and to find out just who are the Members of this body who believe in this legislation, are ready and willing to support it, and believe it to be of such merit as to be entitled to immediate consideration. There are more ways of defeating legislation than by voting directly against a bill; one most commonly employed is delay and postponement.

Therefore, Mr. President, I move that we proceed to the consideration of House bill 10874, an act to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes, and upon that motion I ask for the yeas and nays. I, for one, refuse to join with the enemies of this measure in postponing action. Let all that oppose this bill vote to postpone action, but let those that sincerely believe in this measure, united with those who are demanding immediate action, who refuse to follow the course and adopt the program of those hostile to this legislation.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, he is a poor pilot indeed who, finding dangerous rocks in the course he has chosen, is not willing to veer around those rocks and enter a channel which will assure a safe and certain entry into the port into which he has purposed to go.

A very short time ago there were numerous reports afloat, and they were disquieting reports to me, and I am not certain there was not some substance behind them. They were reports of a purpose to sidetrack the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill, or keep it from being acted upon during this session of the Congress. When I heard of those reports, I immediately expressed myself as in favor of calling for a definite showdown as to whether that matter was to be disposed of or not, and I stated to the friends of the soldiers' compensation bill that it was my purpose in a reasonable time to move to lay aside the tariff bill and proceed to the consideration of the soldiers' compensation bill.

That statement of mine resulted in the immediate calling of a Republican conference. At that conference every question of doubt with reference to whether or not the adjusted compensation bill was to be absolutely passed upon was removed. The party in power, which is responsible for the legislation which shall be passed and responsible for putting aside that which it thinks should not be passed at any session of the Congress, went on record squarely, unequivocally, and determinedly to put itself back of the final disposition of this soldiers' compensation bill. It further put itself on record in no uncertain terms that there should be no adjournment and no recess over until the soldiers' compensation bill should finally be disposed of.

Now, that is what I wanted to be assured. I would rather secure this action through the cooperation of both sides of the Chamber, but especially through the cooperation and support of the side which represents the power to do things. I would rather work that way and be certain that I was going to secure the action I desire, because I knew that once the matter was voted on by the Senate, there would be no question of the result.

I want to read into the RECORD just what assurance is given that the bill shall be passed upon at this session. I moved first in the conference that it was the sense of the conference that the soldiers' compensation bill should supersede for the time being the tariff bill; that the latter should be laid aside for its consideration. I failed to secure a great many votes upon that motion because, while the vast majority of the conference were in favor of the passage of the soldiers' compensation bill, they thought it inadvisable at this time to lay aside the tariff bill. But we were not satisfied with that unless there was a most specific assertion and agreement that the matter should be brought up and disposed of during this session. I shall ask at this time permission to insert in the RECORD the resolution which was passed at that conference. I wish just to read the declarative part of the resolution:

Now, therefore, for the purpose of correcting such reports—

That is, the reports that the bill might by any possibility be abandoned—for the purpose of correcting such reports and to reassure the country and the American soldier that there has been no change of purpose on the part of the Republican Members of the Senate, be it

Resolved by this conference, That as soon as the vote is taken on the passage of the tariff bill the soldiers' compensation bill shall be immediately taken up and made the unfinished business and its consideration proceeded with to the exclusion of any other business except when temporarily laid aside for matters of immediate exigency, and continued the unfinished business until it is finally disposed of.

And be it further resolved, That both the said bills shall be pressed to their final disposition as expeditiously as possible and that there shall be no final adjournment of this Congress or any recess over until both these proposed measures are finally disposed of.

Now, I can not imagine a more definite and certain assurance to the country and to the soldiers that the party in power, uniting with the minority party, shall absolutely and unquestionably put the bill to a vote before there is either any recess or any adjournment of Congress. That is what I wanted to secure.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. MCCUMBER. In one moment I will yield. That is why I gave notice to friends and foes that it was my intention to move to displace the tariff bill temporarily for the purpose of considering the soldiers' compensation bill. I secured all that I asked to secure—the assurance that the action taken by the conference on April 18 should be in no way abandoned, but it should be reiterated with all the power and strength of the party in power back of it. I now yield to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. How does the Senator from North Dakota reconcile what he is now saying with the fact that the only measure which the President has come here to oppose was the soldiers' bonus bill, and that the Senator himself backed down when the President proposed it?

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I did not back down. I voted against what the President requested at that time, but I recognized that under our scheme of government the President had power in these matters. He has a power, equivalent to the difference at least between a little more than one-half and two-thirds, to destroy any measure. While I think the President may be within his authority, I think, when there are 500 Members chosen by the people and at least 450 or thereabouts of those Members decide that a thing ought to be done, that the President should yield to their judgment rather than to insist upon the judgment of the one man against the 450.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. McCUMBER. I yield again to the Senator from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I was present on the occasion when the President of the United States came here and made a speech against the soldiers' bonus bill. My recollection is that the Senator from North Dakota said that he was a good party man and would bow to the will of the President, and then the bill was withdrawn and sent to the Finance Committee with the promise that it soon would be reported out. That is my recollection.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator is mistaken. I said that I disagreed with the President and I disagreed with the fears of the Secretary of the Treasury. I did not say that I bowed; but I had to do so because the majority of the Senate decided the other way and decided contrary to the vote which I then cast.

I have sought at all times, and I still seek, to keep this matter from being made a football. I do not want the tariff bill to be blocked by the soldiers' compensation bill, or the latter to be used for the purpose of blocking the tariff bill. I confess a great fear that there is a purpose on the part of some—not the friends of the bill, I am certain of that—who would like to use it for that purpose. I refer to those who are enemies of both the compensation bill and the tariff bill. I want both bills to go through. I believe that the course which I have pursued in the matter is the safest and best course, and I believe that if we put them through in that order the President will sign the compensation bill.

I ask permission to insert in the RECORD the resolution adopted at the Republican conference, to which I have referred.

There being no objection, the resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

Whereas at a conference of the Republican Members of the Senate held on the 18th day of April, 1922, it was moved and carried "that it is the sense of the conference that the Senate proceed without further delay with the consideration of the tariff bill, and that it is the sense of this conference that the Senate should at this session pass a soldiers' compensation bill, and that the Finance Committee be requested to report such a bill within a reasonable time"; and

Whereas the amended soldiers' compensation bill was reported to the Senate by the Finance Committee on the 8th day of June, 1922, and is now on the Senate Calendar for the action of the Senate; and

Whereas reports have been made and circulated to the effect that the soldiers' compensation bill might be abandoned at this session; and

Whereas such reports are without any foundation whatever, and the position taken by the Republican conference on the 18th day of April, 1922, has been in no respect modified or changed: Now, therefore, for the purpose of correcting such reports and to reassure the country and the American soldier that there has been no change of purpose on the part of the Republican Members of the Senate, be it

Resolved by this conference, That as soon as the vote is taken on the passage of the tariff bill the soldiers' compensation bill shall be immediately taken up and made the unfinished business and its consideration proceeded with to the exclusion of any other business, except when temporarily laid aside for matters of immediate exigency, and continued the unfinished business until it is finally disposed of.

And be it further resolved, That both the said bills shall be pressed to their final disposition as expeditiously as possible and that there shall be no final adjournment of this Congress or any recess over until both these proposed measures are finally disposed of.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I move to lay the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] on the table.

Mr. ROBINSON. On that I demand the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered, and the assistant secretary proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN] to the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD] and vote "yea."

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). I transfer the pair which I have with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW] to the senior Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and vote "nay."

Mr. McNARY (when Mr. STANFIELD's name was called). I wish to announce the absence of my colleague, the junior Senator from Oregon [Mr. STANFIELD], from the Senate. If he were present, my colleague would vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and vote "nay."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. McNARY. I wish to announce the absence of the senior Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL]. If present, he would vote "yea."

Mr. CALDER (after having voted in the affirmative). I am paired with the senior Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS]. I transfer that pair to the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. OVERMAN (after having voted in the negative). I have a general pair with the senior Senator from Wyoming [Mr. WARREN]. I transfer that pair to the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN] and allow my vote to stand.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague, the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER], on account of illness. If present, my colleague would vote "nay."

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] and the Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS]. The Senator from Mississippi is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS], and, if present, he would vote "nay." The Senator from Georgia is paired with the Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES], and, if present, he also would vote "nay."

Mr. ASHURST. I was requested to announce that the senior Senator from Nevada [Mr. PITTMAN[is unavoidably absent. If present, he would vote "nay."

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the junior Senator from New Hampshire [Mr. KEYES[, if present, would vote "yea."

I also desire to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER];

The Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS] with the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON]; and

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS].

I wish further to announce that the Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] is detained from the Senate on official business. If present, he would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 51, nays 22, as follows:

So the motion of Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts was laid on the table.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, it is unfortunate beyond expression that the Senate pursues a course of delay in the disposition of adjusted compensation legislation. Do Senators realize how long this question has been pending before the Congress of the United States? On May 21, 1920, two years ago, a bill providing for adjusted compensation was reported to the body at the other end of the Capitol by the chairman of its Ways and Means Committee, Representative FORDNEY, of Michigan. The bill passed the House of Representatives and came to the Senate.

On June 20, 1921, a year ago, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. McCUMBER], chairman of the Committee on Finance, reported to the Senate an adjusted compensation bill, and subsequently the Senate proceeded to its consideration. After the bill had been discussed at great length and every phase of it fully developed, and when the bill was about to be finally voted upon, the President of the United States appeared in the Senate July 12, 1921, and delivered an address against the passage of the bill at that time. It was argued, among other things, that conditions, legislative and economic, were not ripe for the disposition of so important a measure, notwithstanding the fact that a long time previously the House of Representatives had passed the measure, and notwithstanding the further fact that the Senate was then ready to dispose of it. Every Senator in attendance had heard a full and complete discussion of the proposed legislation, yet, in obedience to the extraordinary appeal of the President, who appeared in person to oppose the legislation which was then being considered, the Senate reversed its attitude. It was the first instance in the history of the United States, within my knowledge, when a Chief Executive had appeared before this body to urge the defeat or indefinite postponement of legislation pending and being considered at the time.

We are all familiar with the Executive power of veto. It is in the nature of legislative authority; it gives the President, after a measure has passed both Houses of Congress, the constitutional right, in the exercise of his power, which is in the nature of legislative authority, to override and overrule the deliberate action of Congress registered by a majority vote in both Houses.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I remind the Senator from Arkansas that it was the first time that any chief executive of an English-speaking race since 1641 had appeared before Parliament or Congress to object to a pending measure. That action of Charles I in appearing to make a speech against a measure then pending was the first false step that led his head to the block; and, in my judgment, this false step of President Harding is going to lead his head to the political block the next time the people get a chance at him.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, in addition to the power of veto the President, under the Constitution, has the right, and it is his duty, to make recommendations to Congress respecting legislation. All Chief Executives have exercised that power. We all know that the country is in the habit of looking forward to the recommendations of the Executive submitted in his annual message, and Congress, and the country too, have sometimes felt and manifested great anxiety when special messages to Congress from the President have been in contemplation. Never before, however, has a President appeared in this Chamber while the Senate was considering legislation and urged the Senate to reject that legislation.

Heretofore Executives have recommended the enactment of laws as necessary in the public interest, and in their messages they have voiced disapproval of prospective measures; but when either House of Congress was about to pass upon a specific measure, never has there been another instance when the Chief Executive has used the almost unlimited power which he has to force upon Congress his will.

The Constitution gives to the Executive objection to legislation passed by Congress solemn and important force. It provides that in the event the President vetoes an act passed by Congress, before it shall become law the measure must be passed notwithstanding the objection of the President by a two-thirds vote in both branches of Congress. The Constitution does not contemplate, and legislative independence does not justify, interference by the Executive with the free and unrestrained exercise of the conscientious convictions of the Members of the two Houses of Congress touching legislation pending and immediately to be determined.

I make no attack upon the President. He performs his functions under his oath and under his conscience, as I attempt to discharge mine; but that precedent is vicious in every possible aspect. The United States needs now—worse than anything else, worse than it needs additional revenue, worse than it needs armies and navies—men in the American Congress who will vote their conscientious convictions. How are we to do that when the country is being governed through propaganda, with all forms of selfish organizations and class organizations riding over and disregarding the general public interest, and trying to intimidate public men in the discharge of their duties? How can a Senator in the majority be expected to exercise his honest judgment touching a measure to be voted on if the President, who has the unlimited power of patronage in this Republic, comes into the Senate when the vote is about to be taken and serves notice of his opposition to the passage of the measure?

The power of the Executive over the legislative conscience, when the Executive chooses to exercise it, is illustrated by what happened a year ago, when the adjusted compensation bill was under consideration in the Senate. The Senate was ready to vote; debate had been practically exhausted; every Senator knew his mind upon the subject, and nearly all Senators had announced their attitude respecting the bill; but within an hour after the Executive had instructed the Senate what its action should be that action was taken, and the bonus bill went back into the pigeon holes of the Committee on Finance, where it slept until the calendar day of June 8, 1922, almost one year after the President had exercised his power to control the Senate, and put the bill to sleep.

Senators may recall that immediately following the conclusion of the President's address I took the floor then and said that the courageous course, the just course for the Senate to pursue, was to vote on the bill. We were ready to vote; but it was recommitted to the committee. I then challenged the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] to announce when the committee would again report the measure. You remember that then it was merely a question of the readjustment of some economic conditions, some financial considerations, on the part of the Government, and speedy legislation was promised then. There were more votes for the bonus bill in the Senate when it was recommitted a year ago than there are now, and there are more votes for it now than there will be when it is voted on, and that is the reason underlying the further postponement of it.

A year ago the Senator from North Dakota, when challenged to say what action the Finance Committee might be expected to take and when it might be expected to act, resented any suggestion that a long delay would occur. Of course, he could not say just when the committee would report, but the committee was for the bill, it had so signified, and in his opinion it would be only a short time until the Senate would have an opportunity of voting on the bill. Almost a year went by—a year in which the Congress of the United States considered and disposed of many measures of less importance from an economic and from a political standpoint than the adjusted compensation bill—and at last, with a flourish of trumpets, on the 8th of June of the present year, practically two years after the measure was first considered in the House of Representatives, the Finance Committee, through its chairman, reported the bill to the Senate. He then made important announcements again touching the measure.

The chairman of the committee said, in substance:

> In the very near future I hope to be able to lay aside for a day or two the consideration of the tariff bill for the purpose of considering and passing, if possible, the soldiers' compensation bill.

And then he appealed for consideration and disposition of this subject free from politics; and, as you will remember, I joined with him in that suggestion.

The question ought not to be made the football of politics. It is being made the plaything of contemptible politics. It is wrong to do that. It is wrong to the men who uplifted into light on the far-stretched battle fronts of Europe the flag of this Republic, and maintained it against the intrepid advance of the troops of the Central Empires. It is wrong to the mothers who gave their boys to the military service of this country. It is wrong to the high office that you hold to make politics of this measure.

I have received telegrams urging me to vote for this bill, and I have received telegrams threatening me politically if I do vote for it. I am going to vote my conscientious judgment on this and other measures. If the country can not have here men who are willing to do that the chosen tools of propagandists will make the laws.

All I am asking is that after two years of playing with this question you stand up like men and dispose of it. Has any Senator any doubt as to the effect of the motion of the Senator from Indiana to table the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts? Those who are opposed to the tariff bill will go on to the limit asserting their opposition, and those who are opposed to the bonus bill will look with pleasure, or silent gratification, upon the longest possible delay in the disposition of the tariff bill, because until that is disposed of, under the resolution adopted by the conference of the majority party, the bonus bill can not be considered.

When do you expect this tariff bill to be disposed of under these circumstances? Will somebody answer me? After it passes the Senate—and God alone knows when that will occur—it will go to a conference, which may continue indefinitely. The November elections are only a few weeks in advance, and there is almost a dead certainty that by the time you pass the tariff bill, get an agreement in conference, and adopt that conference report, which is the only condition under which you can take up the bonus bill under the conference resolution adopted by the majority, the election will be at hand.

Mr. BURSUM. Mr. President, I suggest to the Senator that there will be time to take up the bonus bill while the tariff bill is in conference.

Mr. ROBINSON. But the understanding is that the bonus bill is not to be disposed of until the tariff bill is disposed of.

Mr. BURSUM. Not at all. My understanding is that after the tariff bill has been voted upon in the Senate——

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that immediately following the final vote in the Senate on the tariff bill, the Senate shall proceed to the consideration of the bonus bill, without further delay, to its final passage or rejection.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I want to be heard on that motion.

Mr. ROBINSON. I do not for the present yield the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Arkansas?

Mr. BORAH. I object.

Mr. ROBINSON. I realize that before consent could be granted the roll would have to be called, and if the Senator from Idaho did not object any one of a dozen other Senators would object. The fact is the bonus bill is not going to be disposed of by unanimous consent, or any other form of amicable proceeding. It is a fight to the finish in the Senate, and the sooner the fight is begun, the sooner the fight will be over.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. ROBINSON. In just a moment. If you wait until the tariff bill has passed and the forces which are all calling you summon you back to the political battle fields the bonus bill can not possibly become a law during this session, and that is the object of the proceedings of to-day. I yield to the Senator from Arizona.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, in the public press of yesterday afternoon we were advised that the majority side had held a conference and had determined that after the tariff bill was disposed of they would take up the bonus provided certain other matters of exigency did not interpose. We are now told that that exigency which will interpose itself is the ship subsidy bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. May I ask my friend the Senator from Arizona how many Senators were in the Republican conference which adopted the resolution so enthusiastically presented by my friend the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. ASHURST. I do not know.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Thirty-eight.

Mr. ROBINSON. There were 38 Senators, I am informed by Senators about me, some of whom could have been in the conference but were not there because they did not favor that method of disposing of this legislation. There were 38 Senators there; yet the Senator from North Dakota informed us a few minutes ago that his reason for taking this backward step, after having announced here when he reported the bill that he was going to call it up within a few days and secure its passage if possible, was that he had now made certain of the passage of the bonus bill, because the majority side, which control action here, had indorsed the bill. There were 27 for and 11 against the resolution, and nobody is bound by the adoption of the resolution unless he chooses to be bound, and outside of that caucus, muttering audibly and fearfully, stood some of the bravest and best men on the majority side of this Chamber, men some of whom are against the bonus bill, and were unwilling to commit themselves to the resolution for its passage following the tariff bill; others who are for the bonus bill, and who believed that the adoption of the resolution meant defeat or long delay of the legislation. Yet, under those circumstances, we are asked to find that the proceeding to-day, whereby the Senate laid on the table the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to proceed to the consideration of the adjusted compensation bill, is an act calculated to promote the passage of the measure.

Do not deceive yourselves. When the President made his speech to the Senate a year ago in regard to the adjusted compensation bill, I told the Senate that the recommittal of the bill meant either the death of the measure, or that it would require superhuman exertions to resurrect it. That declaration has proved true. From a legislative standpoint, we are further to-day from the disposition of the adjusted compensation bill than we were a year ago.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Massachusetts?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. The Senator read into the RECORD an inquiry which he directed to the Senator from North Dakota a few weeks ago. I wish to read into the RECORD an inquiry I directed to him on May 5 of this year, found on page 6362 of the RECORD, as follows:

> Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, I understand the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING] desires to take the floor to discuss the pending amendment. While waiting for him, and to save calling the roll, may I ask the Senator from North Dakota whether it is contemplated that a favorable report will be made to the Senate shortly on the soldiers' compensation bill, and whether this tariff legislation will be set aside for a discussion of that bill?

This was May 5.

> Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, I will say that that is the purpose. I want to correct the statement which the Senator made this morning, however, that the majority of the committee had adopted an amended bill. That is not the case. I myself have made a number of suggestions, and in order to have the matter brought before the committee I have prepared an amendment to the bill as it passed the House, and that will be presented not only to Republicans but to Democrats as well, as I want to get something, as I have stated, which will be satisfactory to the Congress, to the Executive, to the American soldiers, and to the public; and to get all those things into one bill may be a little difficult.
> Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. How long does the Senator think it will be before the bill can be reported to the Senate?
>
> Mr. MCCUMBER. I hope we shall be able to report it within a week.
>
> Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. When the bill is reported to the Senate, the Senator proposes to lay aside the tariff bill in order to have that measure considered?
> Mr. MCCUMBER. Yes. I assume that it will not take more than a day or two at most to dispose of it.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I had not stated, except in a very general way, what transpired between myself and the Senator from North Dakota when the bill was reported. It will be remembered that when he undertook to report the measure objection was made; it was not then in order to make the report except by unanimous consent. Subsequently, largely through my efforts, and as a result of an understanding with the Senator from North Dakota, the bill was reported, and when I suggested that it ought to be called up within two or three weeks, the Senator from North Dakota expressed the opinion that that was an unduly long time to wait; that it ought to be disposed of, or consideration of it begun, within a week or 10 days. I had that understanding with him, and left the city under imperative necessity, to be gone 10 days, and was notified to be back at the end of 10 days. Compliant with that arrangement, in order that further delay might not occur—and there was a manifestation of restiveness at even that delay—I came back, only to find that the question had been taken into a political conference, or caucus; that with only a few more than a majority constituting that caucus present, it had been agreed by a vote of 27 to 11, less than a majority of the entire conference present voting for the resolution, to postpone the bill until after the tariff legislation is disposed of.

Everyone knows that the President has not consented to this arrangement. Everyone knows that the President of the United States is now insisting, as he has for a long time been insisting, that the adjusted-compensation bill must take its place behind the so-called ship subsidy bill, and from what transpired here once before, a year ago, I think the Senate is quite likely to follow the President's suggestion, for when he then asked that the bill be recommitted to the committee, or delayed, although the Senate had discussed it at great length, had reached a conclusion, and was ready for its final disposition, it complied with the President's recommendation and sent the bill back to the committee. Now, with an understanding, at least by those who favor the bill, that it should be taken up and pressed to a vote at once, it is sidetracked, with the distinct understanding that it shall not come up for consideration until after this tariff bill, with its 2,087 amendments, has been disposed of, and with the assertion by the President that it must not come up until the ship subsidy bill has been disposed of.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Arkansas yield to the Senator from Washington?

Mr. ROBINSON. I yield.

Mr. JONES of Washington. I did not know that the President had made a statement to the effect that the bonus bill should not come up until the shipping bill had been disposed of. I want to say to the Senator, as chairman of the Committee on Commerce, that much as I desire the early passage of the shipping bill, much as I believe that it is necessary for the building up of a merchant marine, I will not, as chairman of that committee, bring the ship subsidy bill before the Senate ahead of the bonus measure, under the action taken by the Republican conference yesterday.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, that would seem to be a very gratifying assurance to the friends of adjusted compensation legislation, coming from so eminent authority; but when I recall that a year ago the Senator from North Dakota occupied a much more aggressive attitude on this subject than the Senator from Washington now occupies, and when I compare the natures of the two Senators, I am inclined to think that if the presidential influence, which overcame my good friend the Senator from North Dakota and made him, in my opinion, reverse his attitude on this subject, is brought to bear upon him the same may be expected of the affable, genial, and able Senator from Washington.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Mr. President, I do not think the Senator is justified in making a statement like that until he sees some action of that kind on my part.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator from Washington voted to recommit the bill, and he voted——

Mr. JONES of Washington. The Senator is mistaken in that. I voted against recommitting it.

Mr. ROBINSON. I was misled by some of my colleagues, who so informed me.

Mr. JONES of Washington. Yes; that is the difficulty. They do not know. They do not look up the RECORD to know.

Mr. ROBINSON. How did the Senator vote to-day on the motion to table the motion of the Senator from Massachusetts to take up the bill?

Mr. JONES of Washington. That is of record. It appears how I voted to-day.

Mr. ROBINSON. But the Senator knows, and I do not know. Will the Senator be good enough to tell me how he did vote to-day?

Mr. JONES of Washington. I voted "yea" to-day. I voted "nay" on the proposition to recommit the bill.

Mr. ROBINSON. The Senator's attitude is worse now, so far as friendliness to the measure is concerned, than it was a year ago, for then he resisted the pressure of the Executive to send the bill back to the committee, but to-day he has yielded to it, to put the bill behind tariff legislation. In view of that fact, I can not permit my beloved friend the Senator from Washington to take exception to my statement that when the thumbscrews are applied to him he will yield a little more quickly than did the Senator from North Dakota at the time the adjusted compensation bill was first considered.

Why, Mr. President, we understand this measure. I have not the slightest doubt that the Senator from North Dakota wants it disposed of. I have not the slightest doubt that he is in good faith in his efforts to get it disposed of.

The only regard in which I differ with him is that he is taking a course which, when considered in connection with the history of the bill, retards rather than promotes its passage. The very small vote that adopted his resolution in the conference, nine members there standing out against it, and the deafening opposition to his resolution on the outside from Senators entitled to be in the caucus but who deliberately refrained from participating in it, are not assuring that further delay will secure the certain passage of the bill. I can not resist the conclusion that the bonus bill is further from passage to-day than it was a year ago, when it was sent back to the committee, over the opposition of the Senator from North Dakota. He stood up then gallantly and, while he recognized the influences which were overwhelming him, carrying the bill back to its resting place in the committee, he voted against the motion to recommit.

How did he vote to-day on the motion to lay on the table the motion by the Senator from Massachusetts to proceed to the consideration of the bill? If I remember correctly, he not only voted to table that motion but he made an argument in favor of tabling the proposal to proceed to the consideration of the adjusted compensation bill. The argument was that if we pass the tariff bill first Senators who are against the adjusted compensation bill will help pass it then. Be not deceived. This is a fight to the finish. Propaganda has been carried on for the bill and propaganda—the best organized the country has ever seen—has been employed against it and is still continued. The longer the vote is delayed the worse the situation will become from every standpoint.

We understand the measure, and we ought to vote on it. Some time within the next few days I want to get, if I can, a direct test on the motion to proceed to the consideration of the bill. When that vote has been taken I shall content myself with the decision of the Senate. I want the Senate to dispose of the question in its own time and in the conscience and judgment of the Members of the Senate. I recognize that it is an issue about which Senators loyally devoted to duty may well differ, but it is not an issue that courageous Senators may dodge or shirk. It is an issue that ought to have been met a year ago. It is an issue which, if postponed, will inevitably inject itself into politics throughout the country. Let us take up the bill and vote on it. Vote our conscientious judgment. If this is promptly done, I shall be satisfied, whatever the result shall be.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas announced that at an appropriate time he would move to proceed to the consideration of the adjusted compensation bill. The Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH] this morning made such a motion, and the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] moved to lay the motion on the table. Word was conveyed to us that a point of order would be sought to be interposed against the motion upon the ground, under Rule XXII, which provides that "when a question is pending no motion shall be received but the following." So, while it is only academic now, when a motion is hereafter made to move to proceed to its consideration the question then will have to be settled. I have examined the precedents, and there is no doubt that the motion is in order.

When the force bill was pending the force bill was the unfinished business. Senator Wolcott, of Colorado, of gracious memory, moved to proceed to the consideration of the apportionment bill, although the force bill was the unfinished business. I do not believe a point of order was raised. The Vice President was at luncheon and he was hurried upstairs so he might be here in the event of a tie vote. Of course, if a point of order would lie, it would have been raised on the force bill, but that question was conclusively settled in 1912.

The esteemed Senator who so fairly presides over the Senate at this moment [Mr. CUMMINS] had in charge, in 1912, a resolution proposing to amend the Constitution so that thereafter no President should be eligible for a term of years longer than six or for more than one term. The Senator from Iowa [Mr. CUMMINS] was pressing that resolution with his usual ability. While the resolution, to wit, Senate Joint Resolution 78, in the Sixty-second Congress, was pending, and on the 21st day of August the Senator from Pennsylvania, Mr. Penrose, rose to make a personal statement, and thereafter the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] made the following motion:

Mr. CULBERSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3315) to prohibit corporations from making contributions in connection with political elections, and to limit the amount of such contributions by individuals or persons.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore—

The Senator from New Hampshire, Mr. Gallinger, was President pro tempore. A number of Senators inquired if this motion would displace the unfinished business.

The President pro tempore said:

The motion would have been in order if the unfinished business had been before the Senate.

A little later:

Mr. BACON. I think, with that fact, undoubtedly the motion prevailing to take it up would displace the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. Gallinger). It was so made; and the Chair is of opinion that under the circumstances the unfinished business will be displaced if the motion prevails. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, p. 11468.)

This decision was rendered on August 21, 1912, Sixty-second Congress, second session.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I am quite sure the Senator from Arizona is laboring under a misapprehension as to what the possible point of order was. I do not think anyone would claim that a motion would be in order while there was another question pending before the Senate.

Mr. ASHURST. Every syllable from the Senator from Wisconsin is important. Will he repeat what he said; I did not hear it?

Mr. LENROOT. The only question that could arise was whether an amendment was pending and a question before the Senate, whether a motion be in order until that amendment had been disposed of; but the moment it was voted upon, I do not think any Senator could claim that the motion would not be in order.

Mr. ASHURST. I am gratified.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator let me finish my sentence? There might, I concede, be some doubt as to whether a motion would be in order while a particular amendment was pending if a roll call had been ordered. I now yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. If it is doubtful and possible, then, of course, the Presiding Officer, by recognizing the Senator in charge of the bill, like the Senator from North Dakota in charge of the tariff bill, can prevent any motion ever being made to take up any other question.

Mr. ASHURST. Assume that a question is before the Senate and a roll call has been ordered; I venture the opinion that the roll call must be had on that amendment.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Accordingly he could arrange with the Chair to recognize him after the vote on the amendment.

Mr. ASHURST. I will ask unanimous consent to include in the RECORD a brief citation from Gilfry's Precedents, under the heading of August 21, 1912, Sixty-second Congress, second session, which appears on pages 559 and 560, with reference to the propriety or eligibility of a motion to displace the unfinished business. It is only a few paragraphs. I do this so that in the future we will not be obliged to discuss the point of order when the motion is made.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

[From Gilfry's Precedents, pp. 559, 560.]

Although the unfinished business is temporarily laid aside, a motion to take up another bill, if carried, will displace it (62d Cong., 2d sess., August 21, 1912).

CAMPAIGN CONTRIBUTIONS.

Mr. CULBERSON. I move that the Senate proceed to the consideration of the bill (S. 3315) to prohibit corporations from making contributions in connection with political elections and to limit the amount of such contributions by individuals or persons.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. Gallinger). The Senator from Texas moves that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Senate bill 3315.

Mr. CUMMINS. I call for the regular order.

Mr. CULBERSON. On that motion I ask for the yeas and nays.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. CUMMINS. I ask whether, having laid aside temporarily the unfinished business, this would interfere with it?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. Gallinger). It will displace it, the Chair suggests, if the motion is carried. The motion would have been in order if the unfinished business had been before the Senate. The Chair recognized the Senator from Texas, and he made the motion.

* * * * * * *

Mr. CUMMINS. Mr. President, the Senator from Georgia is under a misapprehension. I did demand the regular order. It was not demanded, however, until after the motion of the Senator from Texas [Mr. CULBERSON] was made; but as soon as I could thereafter I demanded the regular order.

Mr. BACON. I did not know of that fact.

Mr. CUMMINS. I think the RECORD will show that to be so.

Mr. BACON. I think, with that fact, undoubtedly the motion prevailing to take it up would displace the unfinished business.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore (Mr. Gallinger). It was so made; and the Chair is of opinion that under the circumstances the unfinished business will be displaced if the motion prevails. (See CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, pp. 11468, 11469, 11470.)

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. If the Senator from Arizona was directing his remarks to the suggestion the Chair made to the Senator from Massachusetts, he is entirely aside from the question. The Chair remarked to the Senator from Massachusetts that his motion would be in order the moment the pending amendment was disposed of.

Mr. ASHURST. The suggestion to which I was responding came from other esteemed Senators and not from the Chair.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I ask the Secretary to read the telegram which I send to the desk. This is one of many requests that have come to me in behalf of adjusted compensation.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The Secretary read as follows:

ANNISTON, ALA., June 19, 1922.

J. THOMAS HEFLIN,
United States Senator, Washington, D. C.:

On behalf of the 100,000 ex-service men of this State, their wives, mothers, and dependents, the American Legion appeals to you to use your influence to set aside tariff bill and take up adjusted compensation bill instead. Similar action was taken in behalf of Army and Navy appropriation bills, and we consider our bill of a more pressing nature than either of those measures.

HARRY M. AYERS, Commander.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, in April, 1917, every other measure was laid aside except that providing for the calling of these boys to the colors. Nothing stood in the way of clothing them with uniforms and equipping them with guns to go to Europe to fight for the flag. Everybody seemed to be of one mind that that thing should be done and done at once. These boys went according to the demand of Congress; they served the purpose for which they went; they returned to the country that they had saved, but now they must wait, wait, and wait for simple justice until consideration is given to every kind of measure. They have waited for two years, and the Republican Party has been in power in the other House and the Senate since March 4, 1919, but adjusted compensation has not been given to those faithful boys who saved our country in the hour of its peril.

This same Congress, controlled by the Republicans, has paid out hundreds of millions of dollars to men who furnished material, a great deal of which was never used but left in the hands of the contractor. A great deal of it was never used by the Government. The taxpayers of America were held up in order to get money then to settle every one of these contracts that dealt in the commerce of the country, but the man who offered his life for his country, who exposed himself to the battle fire of the most destructive modern war machine in all the world, the man who offered his life for his flag can not get an act through Congress to permit him to see whether or not the country is still owing him anything for his service.

Mr. President, this presents a sad spectacle to those of us who still believe that this is a Republic and that it belongs to the American people. The soldier who offered his all stands here knocking at the door of this Chamber asking that you pass a measure to see whether or not the Government is owing him something. He is asking for adjusted compensation. Has he not got a right to do that? Certainly he is entitled to that consideration. Why not grant this request of his?

Mr. President, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] is right—that a propaganda against the adjusted compensation measure is being carried on. Literature is being sent out from New York and from other places to business men and bankers here and yonder asking, "Do you want your taxes raised? Do you want the burden of taxation increased? If you do not, write your Senator or your Representative or wire them to vote against the bonus or adjusted compensation." That is what is being done.

Mr. President, the men who got the money out of the Treasury for their contracts—every dollar of it—are sitting back with their big bank accounts, when they charged their Government all sorts of profits during the time of its peril, and are now expending some of that money to carry on a propaganda to prevent those boys who served the flag from getting something upon which to live in the land that they saved. Senators, it is a sad situation that confronts us here to-day. The tariff baron is put ahead of the American soldier. We hear that you intend to cancel the foreign debt. It is talked around here that there is a meeting of certain newspaper men in London right now; that men from New York, the East generally, some from the South, the West, and the North, are over there quietly agreeing on a propaganda to oppose the men who want to collect our foreign debt and use a portion of it in squaring the account with our soldiers.

Mr. President, the adjusted compensation bill which is pending before the Senate is not a satisfactory measure. If it shall pass the boys will then have to wait for a time for the payment provided; they will have to try to negotiate with the banks; they will have to try to borrow on their certificates. You do not intend to pass any sort of a bonus without giving somebody a chance to get something out of it. If ever you pass a bonus bill here you are going to tie strings to it in such a way that somebody will profit by it at the expense of the soldier. That is what you are preparing to do.

Now, why do you not pass a resolution following the line suggested by the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. MCKELLAR], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], myself and others, and collect the interest on the debt due us by foreign nations, and take some of the principal, if necessary, to pay this bonus outright and wipe the slate clean, pay these soldiers of our country, settle this debt, make them happy, give them something to live on in a country where you are drying up the resources of the people by your misuse of administrative power.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Georgia?

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to yield to my friend from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. My friend from Alabama will remember that my plan was to reissue the money which the Federal Reserve Board has called in and destroyed. The contraction of the currency by the Federal Reserve Board has prostrated the industries of this country and has brought countless millions to ruin. Why not put back that money into circulation and thus reinvigorate industry throughout every portion of the Union at once?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, that would be done if the suggestion of the Senator from Georgia could be followed. I have advocated that; I have said frequently, as has the Senator, that they withdrew from circulation vast quantities of money and they contracted credit so that business was stifled and practically choked to death in the United States. That money put back into circulation would make things literally hum; but you are not going to do that. Wall Street does not want it; Wall Street controls the money supply and is making millions by that control. Wall Street has bought up all the bonds that you drove out of the possession of the small bond buyers, men and women the country over, and is watching the price go up and up. Wall Street does not want any more money put into circulation; it is doing too well as it is.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to yield to the Senator.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. What I suggest would not tax anybody one cent; it would put back into circulation the money which the Federal Reserve Board retired and destroyed, and that money going to the soldier as a bonus would electrify North and South, East and West, every community in the Union and at once resurrect the prosperity which the contraction policy of the Federal Reserve Board destroyed.

Mr. HEFLIN. That is true, Mr. President. We have the gold now upon which we could issue those notes and never even get in the neighborhood of the reserve required under the law. We have got nearly half of the gold supply of the world, and yet you can not issue money on it, because Wall Street does not want it done.

Now, who is it that is fighting this bonus to the death? It is the agents of Wall Street, the big financial concerns of the country. They have got some of the big dailies attacking me, the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON], the Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON], the Senator from Arizona [Mr. ASHURST], and other Senators who dare to stand here and plead in the name of the men who saved the flag in the hour of the country's peril. They do not answer our argument; they do not undertake to do it; they classify us as demagogues. Mr. President, to be called a demagogue by one of these sheets that can be bought just like a sheep in the market place can be bought is a compliment to a gentleman; it is a compliment to a patriot; it is a compliment to an American statesman, who will not lower his arm or bend his knee to the corrupting influences back of such sheets. They have no convictions, poor, spineless simps; they write what they are told to write. I mean no reflection upon the many honest and clean newspaper men in the country. I am talking about the other gang.

Mr. President, we frequently find a situation here that reminds us of the wheat field that the Master spoke about when they found the tares in the field. He told them to let them alone until they grew up large enough so that they could tell the tares from the wheat, and then to pluck up the tares and bind them and burn them; but there was a time when the tare and the wheat looked alike. You could not tell which was which or one from the other; but after a while you could easily distinguish the tare from the wheat.

So it is in this Chamber. At times it is hard to distinguish the tare from the wheat; then, again, anybody can tell the difference. That is when the tare can no longer hide its identity.

I have been in public life here several years, and I have known some men, mere timeservers, to remain in the public service for a long time, purely because some of the big daily newspapers backed them and boosted them and deceived the people regarding them. I have noticed that when the issue is squarely drawn and predatory interests call such men, they take their positions on the side of such interests.

What is a demagogue, in their estimation? It is a man who stands up and uses his talents, his energy, and his strength in trying to serve his country. It is a man who wants to do what is right by capital; it is a man who dares to do what is right by the farmer and the laboring man. It is a man who champions the cause of the common masses. He is a demagogue in the eyes of purchased newspapers; but what, in their opinion, is a statesman? He is a fellow that shuts his eyes, who has no thoughts of his own, puts his conscience to sleep, does the bidding of the boodle bosses, votes what they tell him to vote, and remains silent when they tell him to be still. He is a knot on a log, a misfit in the universe of God, and ought not to be in either branch of Congress. That is the fellow they call a statesman; and the other fellow, who really fights for what he thinks is right, they call a demagogue. They do that because they have not any champion that can answer him. They have not any champion that can meet his lance in the arena and stand up before his sword point in battle, and they just denounce him as a demagogue and dismiss him.

Mr. President, it will be a sad day when this country is to be run by these few fellows over there. One New York editor is now on the pay roll of the Federal Reserve Board or bank in New York, I am told. He used to be on the pay roll of the Federal Reserve Board here in Washington. I wonder if you will see that in the papers to-morrow. He is now, so I am informed, one of the editors of a big New York paper. It is claimed that he is now on the pay roll of either the Federal Reserve Board or the Federal Reserve Bank of New York, writing editorials on a big daily in the city of New York. No wonder they can have these things done. They draw money out of the purse of the people, and when somebody stands up and says: "This is wrong; stop, thief!" they just reply that he is a demagogue.

Mr. President, there was no clamor to postpone action when the profiteers' bill was up, when they wanted to take off the excess-profits tax. Nothing was permitted to stand in the way of that. It went through under the driving power of the Republican side of this Chamber. Excess profits? Why, Senators, the name of it suggests that it is a just tax. I make a profit, a reasonable profit, a fair profit, and then on top of that an excess profit. That is above a fair and a reasonable profit, and we taxed that in the hands of the mighty rich. The Democratic Party made them pay a part of it to help pay the war debt and run the Government; and what did you do? You stood over there under whip and spur, sidetracked everything, and took off that tax, while the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill had to wait. When those contract measures came in, and these men were pressing for a settlement, it was said: "Why, you didn't get your material ready in time. The war had ended." "No; but I went and invested my money in this machinery, and I went to work, and I was getting it out when the war ended. I want my money"; and we paid him, while the soldiers' adjusted compensation had to wait.

Then I saw that bill on the calendar a year ago, and the President came down and urged you to sidetrack it, and it was carried back into the committee room and laid to rest while profiteers could get up a propaganda to kill it outright in the Senate. You said that it would be brought out sometime soon. One month went by, 3 months, 6 months, 9 months, 12 months, and it has not been brought out yet; and to-day the same party that promised these boys who are in need—and they are in dire need, many of them—that you would get quick action on it; to-day you voted to sidetrack it again in this Chamber—for what? To take up a tax bill, a bill not to tax the profiteer, because you have taken that off; but to tax what? To tax the necessities of life. One of the items, as I have mentioned heretofore, is salt, that goes into the people's bread. You put a tax on that. You raised the tax on that. You placed a tax on salt that amounts to 40 cents a 200-pound sack.

Mr. President, I am not going into that in detail, but every article of wearing apparel is taxed; farm implements, cooking utensils, are taxed; sewing outfits, needles, sewing machines, and all. You have taxed all the necessities of life, and you sidetracked the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill in order to take up that measure, to go on and tax these soldiers and tax their fathers and mothers and tax their loved ones to make the tariff barons even richer than they are. You sidetracked the bill that offered justice to the soldier in order to enrich these men at the expense of the American people.

Why did you do that? Why, they had a conference here last week, and you had a meeting down here in the nighttime, and it was understood, so it was suggested, that they were going to contribute to your campaign fund, and they mapped out the policy, and they told you that you had to put this tariff bill through before you got anything, and here you are jamming it through and the soldier must wait. You say to the soldiers, you who bared your breasts on the battle line 3,000 miles away and offered to die for us, stand back! These tariff barons have sent forth the edict, and this bill must go through and you must wait—wait while a propaganda is going on out of Wall Street in New York to kill the adjusted compensation bill altogether; wait until a ship subsidy bill can be passed, and the Ship Trust can take thirty-odd millions of money out of the Treasury and put it in their pockets, and squander the merchant marine that we built up, the greatest in the world except that of Great Britain.

Now we are going to have to sell these ships for practically nothing to the Ship Trust, and then pay them to run them, and all the while the soldier must wait.

Mr. President, the Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER], in reply to the Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. WALSH], said he did not think it would take more than a day or two to pass this bill. What do you think of that, Senators, and what does the country think? It would take only two days to dispose of this bill, that means so much to hundreds and thousands of soldiers who are out of employment and in need of food and clothes—only two days—and you will not give these boys two days! You are going to hold before this body a bill that will take six weeks and maybe longer and the soldier must wait.

Mr. President, the weather is warm and the temptation is to keep as cool as we can during these hot days; but when the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] was making his strong and splendid speech in behalf of these boys this hot day I thought of how many of these brave boys offered to give their all for us at a hotter place than this, and I said: "I can spend some time and endure the heat in letting them know that there are some of us who still remember them, who still appreciate their valor and heroism, and who will never cease to be mindful and grateful for the hardships and privations that they endured for us. We will always cherish in our heart of hearts their service to us and ours." The telegram read from the commander of these boys in my State speaks for a hundred thousand of them.

Humanity on the one hand and greed and avarice on the other. Choose ye this day which you will serve in the American Congress. Whose bidding will you do? Are you going to go to the rescue of these men, who are now in distress and who served and saved the Nation, or the men to whom you have turned over the instrumentalities of the Government?

Thank God, the day is not far distant when you must give an account of your conduct, when the conscientious men and women of this Nation must speak for themselves and their country. When they speak, I know what their verdict will be. I know that they will remember—well do they remember—when the boy walked out at the gate and his father and mother kissed him good-by when he went away, perhaps never to return. I know that they remember what happened in the millions of homes in our country as these boys came up from the peaceful pursuits of life, giving up good positions, many of them with their love and faith plighted to some splendid girl in the neighborhood, and bade their sweethearts good-by, to die, if need be, on a foreign battle field, a stranger among strangers.

When these boys gave up their business pursuits, walked out and left lucrative positions, many of them trying to get a start in the business world—stalwart, strong young Americans—when they went to the battle front, leaving all this behind, on every hand they heard "God bless you. There is nothing too good for you boys. Love, gratitude, and justice will always be yours at the hands of this great Government." And yet we are told that some of them since they returned, failing to find work, have died of hunger in the homeland. Out on Boston Common, in the State of Massachusetts, they stripped them to the waist and offered to sell them upon the block—the boys who had worn the uniform and offered to die for their country! What do you think of that, Senators? As one would mount the auction block there stood the auctioneer, saying: "Who will make a bid for this man? He will turn himself over to you like a slave. He was a brave soldier on the battle front in France. He stood four-square to every wind that blew over there. Over there he defied the German Army. Over there he was a terror to the Hun. Over there he broke the power of the German Army, snatched victory from defeat on the western front, and bore his flag back home victorious. Here he is. Who will offer a bid for him? Who will bid for this American youth? Who will buy this boy? He can not find employment and he is starving in the richest land in all the world. Who will buy him and give him a chance to live?"

That happened right here in the United States, and I hang my head with shame and humiliation when I see a majority in this body vote to-day to deny that boy adjusted compensation. Shame on you and the power that has such control over you.

What power is it? How long, God of our fathers, will it be before the American people wake up and do justice, full and complete justice, to the men who offered to die, and whose comrades did die, on the battle fields of France?

Mr. LENROOT obtained the floor.

Mr. CALDER. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. LENROOT. I yield.

CLAIM OF HOBOKEN, N. J.

Mr. CALDER. I ask permission to report back favorably, with an amendment, from the Committee to Audit and Control the Contingent Expenses of the Senate, Senate Resolution 254, a resolution introduced by the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] providing for the appointment of a committee of three Senators to inquire into and investigate the claims of the city of Hoboken in connection with the damage suffered by that city because of the Government taking over the piers of the North German Lloyd Steamship Co. and the Hamburg-American Line Terminal & Navigation Co. The resolution simply authorizes the Committee on Claims to appoint a subcommittee to go to the city of Hoboken and examine into the facts. I ask unanimous consent for its present consideration.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I would like to have the resolution read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the resolution.

The resolution, which had been reported from the committee on Claims with an amendment, on page 1, line 2, to strike out the word "Commerce" and to insert in lieu thereof the word "Claims," was read, as follows:

Resolved, That a committee composed of three Senators, of the Committee on Claims, to be appointed by the chairman of such committee, is authorized and directed to investigate the claims of the city of Hoboken, N. J., for losses and damage sustained by such city as a result of the acquisition and retention by the United States of certain docks, piers, warehouses, wharves, and terminal equipment and facilities, including all leaseholds, easements, rights of way, riparian rights, and other rights, estates, and interests therein or appurtenant thereto, on the Hudson River, formerly the property of the North German Lloyd Dock Co. and the Hamburg-American Line Terminal & Navigation Co., and to report its findings to the Senate, with such recommendations as it deems proper. Such committee is authorized to hold hearings and to sit during the recesses or sessions of the Sixty-seventh Congress, at such times and places as it may deem advisable, to send for persons and papers, to administer oaths, and to employ a stenographer to report such hearings and finding at a cost not exceeding $1.25 per printed page, the expenses of such investigation to be paid from the contingent fund of the Senate.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think before we consent to the resolution we ought to have some explanation from the Senator.

Mr. CALDER. Before the war the North German Lloyd Steamship Co. and the Hamburg-American Line Terminal & Navigation Co., two German-owned companies, operated a number of piers on the New Jersey side of the Hudson River, in the city of Hoboken. They paid a very large sum of money to the city of Hoboken in taxes—perhaps one-fourth of all the revenue collected by that city in taxation. The war came on and this property was taken over by the Government, the payment of taxes, of course, ceased, and the Government has not paid any taxes to the city of Hoboken.

Since the war, however, the Government, through the Shipping Board, leased these piers, rentals are being paid for those piers by private concerns, and the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] is desirous that this matter shall be investigated; that a committee of the Senate shall go to the ground, examine into the facts concerning the matter, and then make report to the Senate. The resolution does not commit the Senate to any action, I will say to the Senator from Nebraska, except an inquiry on the ground by three Senators. It will probably cost the Senate contingent fund $150 or $200 for the expenses of those Senators going there and making the investigation, and that is all.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I would like to ask the Senator whether this property is in any different condition from any other property controlled by the Alien Property Custodian?

Mr. CALDER. This property is not now in the control of the Alien Property Custodian. It is under the complete control of the Shipping Board, and the Shipping Board are leasing these piers to private operators and obtaining rentals for them. The Senator from New Jersey is anxious that that may be inquired into.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Is it still held in trust by the Alien Property Custodian?

Mr. CALDER. No; it is not.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Has the title been transferred to the Government?

Mr. CALDER. It has.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. And the interests of the German owners have been foreclosed?

Mr. CALDER. They have.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I did not know how that was.

Mr. CALDER. The only difference between this and any other resolution of the same character is that this permits a subcommittee of three to visit the premises and to inquire into the circumstances surrounding the matter.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I want to say to the Senator that all the property now held by the Alien Property Custodian belonging to citizens of the United States, in my opinion, ought to be returned now, without any further delay, and I do not see any reason why preference should be given to a community when there are thousands of people, resident in the United States, who are suffering as the result of the taking over of a lot of property which ought to have been returned before this time.

Mr. CALDER. I quite agree with the Senator. I am very much in favor of the return of the property, but this property was never in the possession of the Alien Property Custodian. It was taken over by the War Department, who took possession of it, then acquired title to it, and own it. They have recently transferred it, under the operation of the shipping act of a year or two ago, to the Shipping Board, and these piers are now under the complete control of the Shipping Board.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Wherein does the damage to the city of Hoboken consist?

Mr. CALDER. For a long time before the war the city of Hoboken taxed this property, the property of private institutions, and they paid very large sums of money in taxes to the city of Hoboken. The property is not paying any taxes now.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Does the Senator take the position that the Government is responsible for taxes—that it is not permitted to appropriate property in this way without assuming the burden of taxation?

Mr. CALDER. Of course, the Senator from New York knows that the Federal Government does not pay taxes to any municipality on any Government-owned property; but this seems to be so different from any other condition in the country that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN] is anxious to have the matter inquired into. It does not commit the Senate to any plan of action. It has been recommended unanimously by the Committee on Claims, and it was referred to my committee for its approval only because we have to recommend the payment of money from the contingent fund.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I think it would be rather a dangerous precedent to establish to hold that the Government of the United States should respond in damages to any locality in which it had acquired property by lawful means.

Mr. CALDER. That probably will be the final determination of the committee, and I have no desire to commit the Senate to any other action.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What is there for the committee to investigate, then?

Mr. CALDER. I will ask the Senator from New Jersey to answer that.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I think I know something about the resolution, inasmuch as I introduced it.

When this country entered the war the United States seized the Hoboken piers. They took over several million dollars' worth of property which was formerly taxed by the city of Hoboken. These piers are within the city. The municipality furnished certain facilities, such as fire protection, police protection, and so forth.

Mr. SIMMONS. A point of order, Mr. President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. SIMMONS. I want to inquire, How did this matter get before the Senate?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York asked leave to have the resolution which he reported considered by the Senate.

Mr. SIMMONS. I thought perhaps the Finance Committee had temporarily laid aside the tariff bill.

Mr. SMOOT. Not at all.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER] asked unanimous consent to have the resolution considered.

Mr. SMOOT. Unanimous consent has not yet been given, I will say to the Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I hope I may be allowed to explain it, and that the resolution may be passed.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I have the floor, and I would like to know if this is going to lead to extended debate.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If the Senate is not satisfied with my explanation, and will not decide to send the subcommittee of the Committee on Claims to investigate, I shall simply ask that the resolution lie on the table.

The city of Hoboken was deprived of some $160,000 to $170,000 in taxes, which resulted in a very heavy burden being placed on the taxpayers of that city, inasmuch as the city is small in area, about a mile square, and by reason of being deprived of this taxable property, the tax rate went up some 40 to 50 points.

There has been a certain question of fact raised in regard to the extent of the damages and the extent of the facilities furnished by the city to the Government, and I introduced the resolution to provide that a subcommittee of the Committee on Claims shall investigate the facts. It involves no action by the Congress. It is simply an investigation of the facts concerning the relation of the Government to the city of Hoboken, and whatever losses or damages may have been incurred by the seizure of this property, in order that Congress may determine, when the facts are before it, whether any reimbursement should or should not be made.

The city of Hoboken have asked that an investigation be made, I have introduced the resolution, and I understand a subcommittee at very small expense will visit the city and take testimony and ascertain the facts regarding it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Wherein does it differ from an ordinary claim which can be presented to the Committee on Claims, with the resultant evidence? It is just a mere matter of figures, is it not?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Twice the Senate has passed bills for reimbursement for such taxes, and each time some question of fact has come up as to the extent of the facilities afforded by the city. I have felt, and I still feel, that some investigation should be made, informally, in order that the true facts in relation to it might be the subject matter of a report.

Mr. SMOOT. Do I understand that there is a move on foot for the Government of the United States to pay for damage which may come to Hoboken through the purchase of property by the Government, which resulted in the cessation of the payment of taxes on that property to the city?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. There is no question of damages. The question is whether the city should be reimbursed by the Government, in view of the fact that the Government is now leasing this property as business property, or contemplates doing so, and intends to get a return. The question is one of determining whether the Government should or should not consider a claim for taxes.

Mr. SMOOT. We have nearly half of our State in that same condition to-day. The Government of the United States leases large areas of land to cattlemen and sheepmen, and keeps the title to that land. We can not tax a single foot of it, and we have to maintain our form of government on taxes paid on about 37 per cent of the area of the State. It seems to me it involves a question which would be far-reaching.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If the resolution contemplated any action by Congress, that would be different; but several times the War Department have asked for certain facts, which we have not been able to furnish by reason of the fact that the Government owns this great property in the city, is now leasing it, and is getting a return for it. The question is as to the nature of the facilities now afforded by the city of Hoboken to the Government—the fire protection and the police protection. It seems to be a matter for investigation and information. I hope the Senator will not object, in view of the fact that it is simply to procure the facts.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I do not like to object to a resolution of inquiry; but this resolution involves too much to let it go through without thorough consideration. I think I understand the situation in reference to this property, and what I understand carries out substantially what the Senator from New Jersey has said as to the facts. I do not think there is any dispute about the facts in the case.

This property belonged to the German steamship companies, and when we confiscated certain property belonging to the Germans in time of war, we took this property. Subsequently the Government transferred it to the Shipping Corporation as a piece of property. It now belongs to the Government of the United States, just as the forest reserves do, just as the fort sites, such as Fort Morgan, or Fort Myer, across the Potomac River, belong to the Government. I do not think there is any question in the world about the facts. The case has been discussed before committees of which I have been a member, and I have heard it discussed. This property did pay the State of New Jersey and the municipality of Hoboken large taxes when it belonged to German citizens. It does not pay any taxes now because it belongs to the Federal Government. However, this is no new question.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. EDGE. The Senator understands, I take it, if he has been on committees which have considered similar legislation, that the difference lies in this particular: That the Government took over the German property and after the war it was immediately used for ordinary business purposes; in other words, leased to private ship companies, and the Government thereby secured a large revenue. Then it became really a business in competition with any other docking or wharfage business along the river.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Does the Senator propose now to adopt the policy in the United States that all the ships owned by the Federal Government shall be taxed; that the shipyard at Hog Island in Pennsylvania shall pay taxes to the State of Pennsylvania; that the shipyards in my State shall pay taxes to the State of Alabama? It would be an entire reversal of our policy.

I have not any controversy with the Senator on the question involved. Of course, I realize that this property paid a large tax, and that it is unfortunate for his State and the city of Hoboken that the property does not now pay taxes. But if we consent that one piece of property which belongs to the Federal Government in one State shall be subjected to taxes, directly or indirectly, we must apply it to other States. This is the same proposition as a tax, as I see it. If we are going to compensate the municipalities in damages because they lose taxes which would have been collected if the property still belonged to the former German owners, it is the same thing as paying taxes.

The cry has come here for more than a quarter of a century from the great Western States that a great injury was being done to them by reason of the national forest reserves being that much property taken out of the State, because the land was not subject to settlement and was not subject to taxation, as it belonged to the Federal Government, and that it was thus a serious burden to the States in which the forest reserves existed. In some of the forest reserves, perhaps not to the extent that it happened in reference to the property now under discussion, they leased some of the land for the grazing of cattle and sheep and for the cutting of timber, and derived a revenue from it. Yet the Government of the United States has continually maintained the policy that the great Western States are not entitled to tax that Government property.

I do not think we can reverse that policy by the consideration of the resolution before us, a resolution not reported from the law committee of the Senate; and it is a law question, not a question of fact. The facts involved are not disputed. I have heard the question discussed before the committees to which I have belonged, and personally I am sure that as to the facts stated by the Senator from New Jersey there is no controversy, but there is a great legal question as to whether the Government of the United States is going to make an exception to the rule that its property shall be free from taxation.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I yield to the Senator from New Jersey.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Will not that question arise when the question of legislation is to be determined by this body? I am simply asking that the Claims Committee investigate the claim of the city of Hoboken to ascertain certain facts. The Government took this going concern, this property, and used it for war purposes. Now, I understand the Government contemplates leasing it to private parties, and they will transact business with it as a ship concern. If that is true and the Government is going to do that, is it not justice that some investigation should be made to ascertain the services of the city in the way of fire protection, police protection, schools for the children of the thousands of employees who will be there, and so forth? I simply ask that the Committee on Claims shall make an investigation and report its findings so that the Senate may have the information.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I will say to the Senator that I do not think anybody disputes the facts. Of course, I realize what the Senator is naturally trying to do. He is trying to give a position to this proposal. I think anyone in the Senate will admit all the Senator says about it, but the same is true with reference to Government property from the Pacific to the Atlantic. The public buildings in my home city do not pay any taxes to the city or the State, and yet they have fire protection and police protection. If one of them caught fire, the engines of Birmingham would go and try to put the fire out.

Mr. EDGE rose.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I must decline to yield further. It was understood that this matter would not lead to debate.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. If the Senator from Alabama will not permit it to be voted on——

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I dislike to object to the Senator's proposition, and I would not do so under ordinary circumstances, but the question is too vital to be settled in this way.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I am not asking that the policy be settled. I simply want to get information with reference to the facts.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think the resolution ought to go over until we can take it up at a time when we shall have a chance to discuss it fully.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Very well.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will go to the calendar.

ADJUSTED COMPENSATION FOR WORLD WAR VETERANS.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, I rose for the purpose of making one or two very brief observations concerning the debate that has gone on this morning with reference to the soldiers' compensation bill. The Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] occupied nearly an hour of the time of the Senate and the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] occupied almost another hour of the time of the Senate in a discussion of the question. Those two Senators in the time they have occupied, Mr. President, have delayed the disposition of the bonus bill by just the length of time of the Senate they have occupied. I, of course, understand, as the Senate understands and as the country will understand, that those hours have not been occupied by those Senators for the purpose of expediting the consideration of the bonus bill. Those hours have been occupied by those Senators for the purpose of making political capital for the Democratic Party out of the situation.

If this were all that we were to have with reference to the question, it might not be important; but we can look forward to-morrow and the next day and the next day after that to speeches similar to those which have been made this morning upon this question, when every speech that is made by these Senators will delay the legislation which they say they are so anxious to have immediately considered.

Now, what is the status of the proposed legislation? In the first place, as has been said, the bill was recommitted almost a year ago, on the 15th of last July. I was not present in the Senate nor was I in the city at the time that motion was made and voted upon. I find that at that time the following Democrats voted for the motion: The Senator from South Carolina [Mr. DIAL], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS], the Senator from Utah [Mr. KING], the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], the Senator from Montana [Mr. MYERS], the Senator from Virginia [Mr. SWANSON], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD], and the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. The Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS], the Senator from Ohio [Mr. POMERENE], and the Senator from South Carolina [Mr. SMITH] were announced as paired in favor of the recommittal of the bill. These Senators fall under the denunciation of the junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] this morning and the scathing condemnation that he has made of them. Of course, he may, if he sees fit, include his colleague in his charge that a conspiracy exists here. That will be for his people in Alabama to settle.

Mr. President, time went on. On the 18th day of April last at a Republican conference a motion was made and carried by a very large majority that the soldiers' compensation bill be passed at this session of Congress. The bill was reported on the 8th day of June. Yesterday a Republican conference was held, and the question arose and was voted upon as to whether the tariff bill should be temporarily laid aside and the soldiers' compensation bill taken up. I was one of a small minority who voted for setting aside the tariff bill, but we were voted down, and the Republican conference by a very large majority passed the resolution which has been placed in the RECORD this morning, pledging the Republican side of the Senate to make the bill the unfinished business as soon as the Senate votes upon the tariff bill.

That will be done, Mr. President. There is no doubt about it. There is not a Senator upon the other side of the aisle who doubts that it will be done. Indeed, I imagine that possibly some of them are afraid that it will be done, and they would rather not have any compensation bill passed at all, in order that they might have a political issue. They know that it is to be done, and yet we may look forward to hours and hours of time being consumed by these Senators, the only effect of which is to delay the legislation for which they are pleading.

It lies entirely with the Democratic side of the Senate how soon the soldiers' compensation bill shall be taken up and disposed of. If they continue their filibuster upon the tariff bill, it will take some weeks; but if they will confine discussion to legitimate debate upon the questions before the Senate and discuss only the amendments which are before the Senate, we can pass the tariff bill within the next three weeks, and we can get the bonus bill out of the way before the 1st of August. Whether we shall do so or not depends upon Senators on the other side of the aisle.

I do not ask that any legitimate discussion upon the tariff bill be curtailed for one single moment, but for every hour that has been consumed thus far upon the tariff bill in legitimate discussion, Senators on the other side of the aisle have wasted two hours in discussion that either had nothing to do with the bill or was not related to the specific question then before the Senate.

So I repeat that the delay of the soldiers' compensation bill rests with Democratic Senators. The junior Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN] has been responsible more than any other Senator in the past for delay, and I expect that the junior Senator from Alabama will continue to be responsible in the future. He has a right as a Senator to make just as many speeches as he sees fit and just as often and upon the same subject. That is his right as a Senator, but the effect of it will be further to delay the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill, as every Senator well knows.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I offer the motion that I send to the Secretary's desk to have read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the motion.

The Assistant Secretary read as follows:

I move that the bill (H. R. 10874) "to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes," be, and is hereby, made a special order for 12 o'clock meridian of the calendar day immediately following the calendar day upon which a vote is taken upon the third reading and passage of the tariff bill, so called, House bill 7456, and that said first-named bill (H. R. 10874) shall thereafter be kept before the Senate to the exclusion of all other business—save only such business as the Senate shall by a two-thirds vote declare to be of an urgent character—until it has passed through the regular parliamentary stages and has been finally disposed of.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I make the point of order against the consideration of that motion. It may be in order to make an order for the consideration of the bill therein referred to, but this portion of the resolution, it seems to me, is clearly not in order:

shall thereafter be kept before the Senate to the exclusion of all other business, save only such business as the Senate shall, by a two-thirds vote, declare to be of an urgent character.

Mr. President, that proposes an entire change of the rules of the Senate. An order of that kind would have to be referred to the Rules Committee of the Senate. One day's notice, at least, is required before the rules of the Senate may be changed. It is in the nature of a cloture rule, because it provides for the manner in which business may be disposed of. I therefore make the point of order that it is an effort to change the rules of the Senate. I am not referring to the first part of the motion, although, of course, I am not in favor of the first part of the motion, because I am not for the bonus bill; but that is neither here nor there. I think a bill may be made a special order at any given time; but an order can not be made which shall govern its consideration, under the rules of the Senate, and that is what the Senator from Indiana attempts to do.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I think the Senator's point is well taken, and, if he insists upon it, the portion of the motion to which he refers should be eliminated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Will the Senator from Alabama be kind enough to again state his point of order?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. The point of order was that the latter part of the resolution, to which I called attention, proposed a change of the rules of the Senate and sought to regulate the consideration of a question which, I think, under the rules of the Senate, may not be done.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. It requires a two-thirds vote to make the bill a special order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Certainly.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I think the point of the Senator from Alabama is well taken.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, so far as the resolution itself is concerned, I am opposed to it merely because I am not in favor of the bonus bill, and therefore I am not in favor of its consideration.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. If the portion of the motion to which the Senator from Alabama objects is eliminated, will the Senator then object to the phraseology of the motion?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. I think it is in order for the Senator from Indiana to move to make the bill a special order for consideration. Of course, I shall vote against the motion, but I am not raising any point of order against the other portion of the resolution.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I ask that the Secretary read the motion with the portion eliminated to which the Senator from Alabama raises the point of order.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Of course, the Senator understands that a two-thirds vote is required to make the order?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Certainly; I understand that.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana modify his motion in accordance with the suggestion of the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I so modify it, and ask that, as proposed to be modified, the motion be again stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will read the motion as now proposed to be modified by the Senator from Indiana.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from Indiana moves that the bill (H. R. 10874) "to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes," be, and is hereby, made a special order for 12 o'clock meridian of the calendar day immediately following the calendar day upon which the vote is taken upon the third reading and passage of the tariff bill, so called, House bill 7456.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. HEFLIN. I thought the Senator had concluded. I wish to make a few remarks on the motion which is pending.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. All I desire to say is that when we passed the resolution in the Republican conference on yesterday we thought that that was sufficiently definite to satisfy anybody and everybody as to just what the intention of the Republican Members of the Senate was. There never was a doubt as to what we intended to do, with reference at least to trying to pass the soldiers' bonus bill, all the time intending, as our resolution well recited, to put it upon its passage immediately after the tariff bill was voted on in this body, either voted up or voted down, whatever the result of that vote might be. That was what the resolution stated, and that was precisely what we intended to do, but inasmuch as speeches have been made on the other side of the Chamber denying our good faith and stating that we never intended to pass the bonus bill at all, and never intended that it should even be considered in this body, I have offered this motion in order to make clear the purpose by having it agreed to as a rule from which we may not escape.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. The object of the Senator is entirely worthy, but I am not without suspicions. I do not intend to reflect on anyone by that statement, but we have been tricked—I withdraw the word "tricked"; I beg the Senator's pardon for using the word "tricked"; I should not have done so—but this question has been postponed so often——

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Of course, the Senator from Arizona had no reference to me personally?

Mr. ASHURST. Oh, not at all. Now I must be satisfied on this point. The Senator has made his motion for a special order under Rule X; he has done pretty well toward coming under that rule.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ASHURST. I am not in accord with the esteemed leader on our side when he says that a part of the motion of the Senator from Indiana which has been stricken out should have been stricken out; I think it was a proper part of the motion. Now, in order that there may be no further opportunity for misconception on any side, let it now be understood that when the roll is called upon the tariff bill—not upon the conference report, but upon the tariff bill—we shall immediately proceed to the consideration of the soldiers' bonus bill——

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. That is what my motion provides.

Mr. ASHURST. Very good—and that under no contingency shall the subsidy bill, or any other bill, be put ahead of the bonus bill. Do I understand that?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. No; you do not understand that.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator shift aside the subsidy bill and let the next bill to be voted upon be the bonus bill? Now, do we understand that?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. That is all on earth we intend to do; that is all the motion means.

Mr. ASHURST. That is good. The Senator is frank. Now, we are to understand and the RECORD is to show and the world is to know that, as a matter of faith and honor, we are bound to put the subsidy bill behind and after the bonus bill. Do I understand aright? Am I correct?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ASHURST. Is there any Senator here who will disagree to that?

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. We understand, then, that just as soon as the roll is called for final vote on the tariff bill it is the bonus bill which will be considered, and that no Senator will move to proceed to the consideration of the subsidy bill? Are we all agreed?

Mr. BORAH. No; we are not.

Mr. ASHURST. We are not.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senate must be in order and the occupants of the galleries must be in order.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I understand I have the floor.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana further yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I thought I had the floor.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. No; but the Senator acts as if he thought he did. Mr. President, I do not think it is necessary to tear passion to tatters in connection with a matter of this kind. The motion is a simple one.

Mr. ASHURST. I did not hear the Senator's remarks.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I say, I do not think it necessary to become so passionate and indulge in such violent declamations about this matter.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, such talk is necessary at times. When you smite wrong, it is useless to tap it on the wrist; you want to hit it squarely between the eyes with the doubled fist. When you see men backing and twisting and squirming to avoid a vote on the bonus, it is time for the mailed fist to strike. We have struck with the velvet hand and accomplished nothing.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Alabama?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. UNDERWOOD. Mr. President, I always admire the earnestness of my colleague from Arizona, and I am always glad to join with him when I can, and, of course, so far as those who are in favor of the bonus are concerned, if the motion shall prevail, that is an obligation on their part, but there are a number of us who are just as earnestly opposed to the bonus as my friend from Arizona is in favor of it, and, of course, do not accept any committals of any kind.

Mr. ASHURST. If the Senator will yield, I am not finding fault with those who are for the bonus nor with those who are against the bonus. I am finding fault with those who say they are for it but who vote against it every time we have a roll call.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, we have gone just as far in the motion as we could go to make the adjusted compensation bill a special order. We can not tell what a majority of the Senate will do; but, so far as we are concerned, we propose to make the bill a special order so that it can not be set aside except by a change of the rules. I can not bind the distinguished Senator on my left, the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], or any other Senator. He has a right to make a motion to take up the subsidy bill if he wants to, and the Senator from Arizona can not possibly frame a rule that will close his mouth on that or any other proposition. All we can do is by a majority vote to make the compensation bill a special order, so that it shall be the order until overturned in accordance with the rules. If we undertake to change the rules, we shall have to do so in the regular way, and can not do so by a mere motion in the Senate. That is all there is to it; and there is no use multiplying words and spilling out language on a proposition of this kind.

Mr. ASHURST. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. ASHURST. Will not the Senator modify his request so that it will read as follows:

That immediately after the final vote on the pending tariff bill the soldiers' compensation bill shall be laid before the Senate, and shall be kept before the Senate until disposed of, to the exclusion of all other business of every nature and kind whatsoever.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. When we make the bill a special order that is what we do provide.

Mr. ASHURST. No; because the Senator has just said that the Senator from Idaho or the Senator from Alabama could move to take up the subsidy bill. I do not think either of them would make such a motion.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, may I interrupt the Senator for just a moment?

Mr. ASHURST. I have not the floor.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I yield.

Mr. BORAH. There is no danger of the Senator from Idaho moving to take up the subsidy bill.

Mr. ASHURST. I just said that.

Mr. BORAH. I am just as much opposed to it as I am to the other bill.

Mr. ASHURST. I know that.

Mr. BORAH. But I do not propose to be bound not to make any motion that I may see fit to make at that time.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Nor could any rule be provided which would bind the Senator.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Mississippi?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I yield to my friend from Mississippi.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I do not know whether there is any deliberate intent to bulldoze or intimidate Senators opposed to the bonus bill or not; but if there be any such intent in any Senator's mind, so far as I am concerned, it falls "hurtless from a shield of honest intent."

I am opposed to any bonus bill for able-bodied youths. I am opposed to commercializing and capitalizing patriotism. I was opposed to it when the Grand Army of the Republic was doing it. I was pretty nearly accused then of being opposed to it because I was a southerner. That pension list levied a tribute upon the South of about fifty millions a year in order to contribute to the pocketbooks of other parts of the country. Sometimes I almost doubted whether my enemies who said that I was influenced by sectional feeling were not quite right. I am very proud now, when I find an attack upon the United States Treasury of a similar character—the first charge to be followed by similar charges for the next 50 years—that I have discovered that it was not because I was a southerner or the son of a Confederate soldier but because I was opposed to capitalizing and commercializing patriotism.

I got a letter this morning from a man who said: "I heard you cheering the soldiers on; I heard you trying to vitalize the war; and now, here you are, opposing the bonus bill." I replied to him: "Yes; I cheered the soldiers on. I cheered them on because I thought they were fighting for an ideal. I thought they realized, as I did, that the object of that war was as far as possible to end war; that the object of it was to relieve the common people throughout the world of burdens which had been imposed by an autocracy prepared for war and waging war all the time. Now, if I am to learn, when I am getting old, that my boys and other boys did not fight for an ideal, that they fought merely because they had to fight, and that after they were through fighting they proposed to come back and put their hands into the United States Treasury up to their shoulders if they could, and to plead that because they had saved civilization and democracy and the English-speaking race from European continental usurpation and tyranny therefore they must be rewarded in vulgar dollars after it was all over, I would not have 'cheered them on.' If behind the late war there had lain in my mind the thought on the part of the soldiers of a selfish or a capitalistic purpose, I would not have 'cheered on' the soldiers."

I did cheer them on. I once said to my friend from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] there, when we were talking about our boys who were in France, that if mine died there I would not wear black; I would dress in white, like a bridegroom, not because he died but because of the thing for which I thought he was dying. If I am to learn now that one of the things for which he thought he was fighting was money, I would never have said that; I would never have thought it; I would never have felt it. On the contrary, I would have felt sorry that my boy was in the service.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a question?

Mr. WILLIAMS. No; not now.

Mr. President, there are, after all is said and done, two classes of people in this world—one class with ideals and with vision, seeking all the time, however sinful and weak they may individually be in their conduct, in their thoughts, at any rate, to aspire and reach in their feelings to an approach nearer to God—to "the God in history who controls the destinies of mankind," who controls them not so much by any arbitrary act of His, but by accepting men themselves—the common conscience and the common sense of common men—as His instrumentality to bring the world finally into accord with Himself. That is one class of men. The other class of men is the class of men who, whenever they confer a service upon anybody, or even upon their own country, begin to weigh in their minds as to how much it ought to be worth in dollars.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Mississippi yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. WILLIAMS. I do not at this moment. "How much it ought to be worth in dollars." Why, Mr. President, if we paid the boys who went to France and merely failed to die there because they were not shot and others were what their services were worth to America and to democracy and to the civilization of the world and to the ideals of mankind, you might give each one of them every dollar in the Treasury to-day and you would not have evened the account. This is one of the things that can not be measured in dollars. It must be measured in honor; and the man who is not willing to be rewarded in honor is not worthy to be rewarded at all.

I can not be intimidated. I can not be bulldozed. Something was said this morning about the intimidation exercised by the Executive. What is that in comparison with the intimidation being exercised by the propaganda of those who want to make money out of their past patriotism?

I am not going to say anything that I ought not to say, I hope. I am not going to try to say all that I feel. I am going to try, on the contrary, not to say all that I feel.

I remember once when William McKinley, in a burst of magnanimity and a world-wide sort of patriotism, said that he would be willing to pension the ex-Confederate soldiers. It was a beautiful sentiment from him, from his standpoint, because he was speaking as a man who fought for the Union, while our people fought against it; but what was the response on the other side? There were no Confederate soldiers that wanted to be pensioned by the Federal Government; and I voiced my objections to it at that time, and in voicing it I voiced the objection of Stephen D. Lee and hundreds of the bravest and the truest and the highest officers of the South, with the rank and file behind them. I said:

The ex-Union soldier, wherever he has been needy, and even where he has not been, may claim that there is something of compensation in a pension to him; but a man who has fought to overthrow the majority Government who would accept from that Government a mere charity—a mere largess—without even a pretext of compensation about it anywhere, was not worthy of having followed Stonewall Jackson, Robert E. Lee, or Sidney Johnston.

I remember another thing. I remember that a man came to my own step-grandmother—an honest, good, Scotch-Irish woman—and said: "Mrs. Sharp, you can get a pension as the widow of Captain Sharp, a Mexican War pension." The old lady almost shed her little slippers as she came to her feet and said: "Major Pickett, I will have you to understand, sir, that Captain Sharp did not fight for money." Major Pickett told me about it afterwards, and said: "John, I never was so completely nonplused and reduced to subjection in my life as I was when the old lady walked out of the room, in her own parlor, and left me sitting there."

I did not "give" any boys to this war. They gave themselves. I had nothing in God's world to do with it, except that I thanked God that they were worthy of their grandfather, who had fought under the Stars and Bars, and of their great-grandfather, who had fought on the fields of Mexico under the Stars and Stripes, and of their great-great-grandfather, who had fought against British tyranny in America as one of the Continental line. I did not "give" them. I would no more have attempted to encourage one of them to go than I would have attempted to restrain him; but I was proud that they had the old blood in them, and, as far as I know them, I believe that they fought for ideals and not for money.

Mr. President, I do not want to go over the history of the Grand Army of the Republic and how patriotism was commercialized and capitalized until even at this day we are paying about $140,000,000 a year for pensions to Union soldiers of the Civil War, so called—the War between the States—but these boys have begun earlier. The Grand Army of the Republic, even, did not begin in earnest until about 20 years after the war, I believe—quite a long while, at any rate—and their first request was to take care of the disabled, the sick, and the needy. These boys are beginning, with the very first request, to take care of the healthy and the able-bodied and the venturesome and the brave that ought to be able to take care of themselves; and if history repeats itself, as history sometimes does, what will be the history of the commercializing of patriotism in comparison with a Civil War record that even today amounts to $140,000,000 a year—a half century subsequent to the War between the States? How will this thing be a half century from now?

This first demand is for about three and a quarter or four billions of dollars, on the plea that "We saved civilization." The next demand will be something else. Do you imagine it is going to stop? Why, Mr. President, I stood right over there when I was advocating the war bill to make allowances to widows and children, insurance for the soldiers, and the balance of it, and made an ever-memorable ass of myself when I said that my chief object in advocating it was that it would "stop raids upon the Treasury for pensions." Here is the first effort to fill up, and where is it going to stop when it once begins? If there stand behind it from two to four million votes, and if the instrumentalities through which it shall be accomplished are politicians in the House and in the Senate here—and all of us are politicians, the best of us—with all the power that can be brought to bear when a man is engaged in a fight and wants to whip his antagonist and stay in office, even the best of us; if it starts with three billions and a half, where is it going to end?

If the Civil War still leaves us, a half century after the event, with $140,000,000 to be paid, where will this leave us in another 50 years, starting at a figure ten times as high?

Mr. President, I am almost tempted to tell an anecdote. I dislike to tell one on a very serious occasion, but Bob Broussard once told me a story, and I believe I will tell it, although it may be in bad taste.

He said there was a man in Shreveport, La., who went over to Bayou la Fourche fishing. Senators do not know those swamp bayous. Sometimes a steamboat can go down one drawing 8 feet and the willows will sweep the smokestack. They are narrow and deep. This man slipped and fell in and was very nearly drowned, when a man came up in a boat and pulled him out and rolled him over, got the water out of him, and got him straight. After awhile the man from Shreveport said, "My friend, you have saved my life. There is nothing I can do for you at any time I am not willing to do. My name is so-and-so, and I live at Shreveport. What is your name?"

He said, "My name to me? I am Jean Lebon."

The man from Shreveport said, "Mr. Lebon, if you ever come to Shreveport, if there is anything in the world I can do for you, let me know what it is."

He answered, "Oh, I am Jean Lebon. I live here. I have a little farm here, and my horses and my cows. I do not need anything from anybody."

But about three or four months after that this fellow saved from drowning went down the streets of Shreveport, and there was Jean Lebon. He stepped over, with both hands extended, rejoiced from the very center of his heart to see Jean Lebon, and he said, "Now, Mr. Lebon, I am glad you are in Shreveport. My house is open to you. Is there not something I can do for you?"

Jean Lebon took his hat off and looked at it. "Oh," he said, "I don't know."

The man whom he had saved said, "A hat! A hat! Let me go and get you a nice hat." So he went and bought him a great, big, broad-brimmed hat, which cost twenty-odd dollars. He put it on Jean Lebon, and Jean Lebon went down to his favorite wine place and had his dinner and drank his wine, and this fellow went with him and paid for it all. Then, the next day, when he came down, there was Jean Lebon standing at about the same place. He said, "Mr. Lebon, I thought you told me yesterday you were going home."

Jean Lebon said, "Well, I was; but after I took that fine dinner with you, I feel sort of lazy, and I stay over until this morning, and this morning I say to myself, 'I might meet my friend again.'"

The Shreveport man said, "I am glad you stayed. Now, is there something I can do for you?"

"Well, I don't know," and he stuck out his foot. His friend said, "Oh, yes; a pair of boots! Come right on with me," and he went and got a pair of boots with cork soles and steel insteps and Morocco tops, and he fixed Jean Lebon up. So the next day, to make a long story short, Jean Lebon was still there, and he needed a suit of clothes, and he got them.

Some time after that Jean Lebon went home, but he came back, and things started over again, and finally this Shreveport man said to him, "Now, Mr. Lebon, I owe you my life; I owe you all that I am and all that I possess. I am willing to give you everything I have, except just enough for me and my wife and children to live on, but I want to ask one favor of you, Mr. Lebon. If ever I come into that dadblamed country of yours again and fall into one of those black bayous and am about to drown and you see it, for God's sake and my sake you let me drown. That is my sole request of you." [Laughter.]

Mr. President, whenever a boy goes to fight for an ideal, to save the Union, to save his country, to save civilization, to save democracy, or to save anything worth while and invaluable, and then comes back and proceeds to collect every week as Jean Lebon did, my answer is, "The next time you find civilization in danger, let it sink. I will try to save it myself. At any rate, we will leave it to God, and if God has no instrument of a higher purpose than you, maybe God will let it sink, too. I do not know."

Now I yield to the Senator from Arizona. What did he wish to ask?

Mr. ASHURST. The time has gone by, but as long as the Senator has yielded, I will state that the Senator looked at me with not wholly an eye of kindness, and said that nobody could intimidate him. I hope the Senator did not think I intended or attempted to intimidate or bulldoze anybody, and if I were to attempt it the Senator from Mississippi would be the last man upon whom I would attempt it.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That last observation is a compliment to the Senator's good sense. [Laughter.] I will not say that I personally selected the Senator as one of the men I thought were trying to do the job; but still, when he says that he would select me as about the last one, or one of the last, he would like to try to intimidate, it shows he has wisdom becoming his day and his generation.

Mr. President, the attempt has been made. Talk about propaganda! It is being made in the newspapers, it is being made in resolutions, it is being made in letters to every one of you. I received six insulting letters this morning, some of them which could not be put into the RECORD because of their profanity, and one of them because of its obscenity, giving me notice that I was persona non grata because I was opposed to the bonus bill. One of them served notice on me that I should never get another office. I do not want any more; but if I did want any more, I would do as I have done several times in my life when men threatened and seemed to have the whip handle—I defied them; and I found that the common sense and common conscience of the common people did not always obey the whip.

My good friend from Arkansas, whom I love almost as if he were a brother, this morning said one thing that was very true. He said that this bill would receive fewer votes now than it would have received a year ago; that it will receive fewer votes a year hence than it would receive now. In that the Senator from Arkansas was right, and if it is postponed even six months it will receive fewer votes than it would receive now, because six months would "carry it over the election." Let us be brave and honest with one another. I am a politician, like all the balance of you, or have been for something like 30 years, and I know what a coward politics makes of all of us now and then. This bill would receive 20 per cent more votes before an election than it would after one, and you all know it just as well as I do, and the object of hurrying up its consideration is in order that it may be passed before November, and the idea in coming to that conclusion is that just before an election it will be at its maximum strength.

I received a letter this morning which was somewhat "personal," in a way. It said:

> I understand that the reason why you are against the bonus is that you are not going to run for office any more.

The fellow showed a great deal of knowledge of human nature, although he was very unjust to me. He said he knew the reason I was opposed to the bonus was that I had already said I would never run for another office.

If all of you were in the same fix I am, I do not know how many votes this bill would get. I see around me several men whom I absolutely love, and I would not openly and above board accuse them of surrendering to any influence in the world when they cast a vote, not because I believe they do not sometimes do it, but because I do not want to hurt their feelings.

Mr. President, I just rose to serve notice. Somebody said this morning we ought to "march up and register our votes and be brave enough to let the country know where we stood." I wanted to let you know where I stood without having a vote.

One word more. There has been a request for unanimous consent, made by the senior Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON], to take up the bonus bill immediately after the tariff bill, and make it the order of business. When I am opposed to a measure as being in itself immoral and wrong and contrary to good public policy, and oppressive of the common people, who, after all, pay the taxes under a system of indirect taxation, whenever unanimous consent is asked to expedite the passage of that bill I shall object, if I am the only man in this august body—and it is august, because it confesses it itself to be—who will object. So I serve notice now that the request must be made when I am temporarily out of the Chamber.

I do not care with what motives the request is made, whether it is to enable the divergent and clashing and conflicting Republican Members to get together on a given policy, or whether it has a higher motive; whenever my consent is asked for the consideration of something which I think is wrong, I shall not give it. When the parliamentary situation presents itself where it can be carried by a vote, that is all right, and I shall say nothing, and this probably is the last word I shall ever utter upon this matter. The only reason I have said what I have said was that it looked to me as if, from some quarter or other, inside or outside of the Chamber, there was some attempt being made to bulldoze and intimidate those of us who were going to stand pat in opposition to this bill. I hate to be called a standpatter—I would hate it even in heaven; but as regards this particular legislation I am a standpatter.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, the Senator from Mississippi yielded to me a moment ago, and I assured him that I appreciate the suggestion that he did not attribute to me any attempt to intimidate him. The Senator referred to his 30 years of public service. I believe I can speak for all Senators here when I say we regret that he is no longer to be with us after the 4th of next March.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am glad to hear that.

Mr. ASHURST. Whilst we regret that he will leave, because he has on many an occasion in this forum and in another forum rendered great service to the public, it so happens that the Senator and I have disagreed much, although both belonging to the same party; we have probably disagreed as much as any two Senators could disagree who belong to the same party; but I speak not the language of hypocrisy when I say we wish he could be with us hereafter in helping to solve some of these great questions.

But because of the Senator's experience and his commanding ability, does it mean that he speaks ex cathedra? Does it mean after he has spoken that all the wisdom has been expressed? Does it mean that because of a censoriousness that many able men employ in their attitude toward those who do not agree with them, that we must not reply?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, will the Senator pardon me?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I am a little tired and wish to retire. If the Senator thinks that I think I am a pope, he is mistaken.

Mr. ASHURST. The Senator took the view that whoever suggests adjusted compensation for the ex-soldiers is attempting thereby to capitalize patriotism—a nice large mouth-filling phrase—"whoever attempts to pass a soldiers' compensation bill is capitalizing patriotism."

In a war it becomes necessary to summon the growers of wheat, beef, wool, and so forth. Cotton must be woven into fabric. Leather goods, steel goods, copper goods, woolen goods must be manufactured. When we paid, as we should have paid, from the Federal Treasury for the wares and goods we used in prosecuting the war—steel, leather, iron, cotton, copper, lumber, concrete, lead, brass, corn, wheat, and oil—did anyone here rise and say, "We are capitalizing patriotism?" It is a happy circumstance that when we paid our farmers and manufacturers and merchants for their goods there was no one to cry out "capitalizing patriotism." We summoned and employed the man power, but as soon as it becomes necessary or even thought advisable to pay adequate adjusted compensation to those who composed or furnished that man power it is thrust into our faces that we are "capitalizing patriotism." When did such a brutal, stupid rule obtain control that makes it "capitalizing patriotism" to pay for the man power we employed in winning a great enterprise like the World War, but not capitalizing patriotism to pay for the beef and the mutton, the iron and the steel, the powder, the concrete, the copper, and the leather we used in winning the war?

If we pay for inanimate objects—arms, ammunition, leather, lead, corn, and wheat—used by man power in a war, why is it improper to pay the man power? If all else were furnished gratis, man power might be furnished gratis.

Is not such a rule or policy a discrimination, and an unjust discrimination, against the man power? The man power at least ought to be treated as well if not better or different than are the other potentialities that helped to win the war. I would like to have some Senator answer that proposition. If it be capitalizing patriotism to pay the man power, why is it not also capitalizing patriotism to pay for the woolen goods, for the guns, the powder, the ships, and for all of the other inanimate things that must be employed in winning a war? The barehanded soldier, no matter what his valor, could not win a war unless he had the instruments, weapons, medicines, clothing, food, and equipment, and the inanimate, inert, food, clothing, guns, powder, and instruments could not win a war unless wielded by man power.

What is this adjusted compensation bill? What does it propose to do? What is this enormous raid we are accused of attempting to make upon the Federal Treasury? One of the evil trains and results of war is that it brings upstart millionaires. This World War created 23,000 millionaires in the United States. It would be unjust to say that the man who honestly made a million dollars out of his country during war was wrong. But he should not have done it; it was not a handsome thing to do. He should not have taken advantage of his country's necessities. When our young men were in the trenches, in the air and on the sea, all at home should have used scrupulous care not to coin opportunity into money. We have, of course, some who hover in their vaults and in whose ears the clink of gold has drowned out the voice of patriotism, now crying—I do not mean Senators—against the ex-soldiers' compensation bill.

What is the compensation bill? The soldier was drafted or volunteered, as the case may be. His pay was $1 a day. He received his clothing, his food, his medicines, and his training, and those might reasonably be counted as another dollar per day. Hence, it is now proposed to pay him an additional dollar per day if he served here and an additional $1.25 per day if he served overseas, and it is proposed to do this in order that there may be an equitable equalization between him and the man or boy who remained at home and whose wages were raised and whose station was improved.

Mr. Xenophon was called to the colors. He left a position in a machine shop which was paying him $5 a day. As soon as he was enrolled the national or subject of some other country stepped into Mr. Xenophon's job and received $6 a day or $8 a day, while that soldier, the American boy, Mr. Xenophon, was absent in the Army or Navy. And yet, because we urge the passage of a bill to equalize the compensation or pay of Mr. Xenophon in a slight degree, insinuations about attempting to capitalize patriotism are arguments which we must meet.

Mr. President, we are more or less inclined to forget the days of far 1917. Let us consider the situation from which these young men were taken. I will read a poem drawn from Kipling through the circumstance that when the young English seamen were to be brought home from sea after the war ended it was proposed that they should be sent to college or the polytechnic institutes to resume their interrupted work that they might, notwithstanding their long service in the army or the navy, learn a trade or adopt a profession wherewith to subsist themselves in the future. In England there were profiteers, just as there were here. These profiteers urged that it would be too expensive to put these young men back in the colleges and schools, and one paragraphist said it was absurd to think of sending these young men back to Dartmouth or to Cambridge; that they were no longer buds; that the bud may be opened prematurely, but that we can not close the rose up and make a bud after it has once bloomed. That cynical remark drew from Kipling this poem, which I shall now read to the Senate. It is as follows:

"Oh, show me how a rose can shut and be a bud again!"
Nay, watch my Lords of the Admiralty, for they have the work in train.
They have taken the men that were careless lads at Dartmouth in fourteen And entered them in the landward schools as though no war had been.
They have piped the children off all the seas from the Falklands to the Bight
And quartered them on the colleges to learn to read and write.

Their books were rain and sleet and fog—the dry gale and the snow.
Their teachers were the horned mines and the humpbacked death below.
Their schools were walled by the walking mists and roofed by the watching skies,
When they conned their task in a new-sown field with the moonlight sacrifice.
They were not rated too young to teach, nor reckoned unfit to guide
When they formed their class on Helle's beach at the bows of the River Clyde.
Their eyes are sunk by the endless watch, their faces roughed by the spray,
Their feet are drawn by the wet sea boots they changed not night or day
When they guarded the 6-knot convoy's flank on the road to Narroway.
Their ears are stuffed with the week-long roar of the west Atlantic gale
When the sloops were watching the Irish shore from Galway to Kinsale.
Their hands are scarred where the life lines cut or the dripping funnel stays
When they followed their leader at 30 knots between the Skaw and the Naze.
Their mouths are filled with the magic words they learned at the collier's hatch
When they coaled in the foul December dawns and sailed in the forenoon watch,
Or measured the weight of a Pentland tide and the winds off Ronaldshay,
Till the target mastered the breathless tug and the hawser carried away.
They knew the price to be paid for a fault, for a gauge clock wrongly read,
Or a picket boat to the gangway brought bows on and full ahead,
Or the drowsy second's lack of thought that cost a dozen dead.
They have touched a knowledge outreaching speech, as when the cutters were sent
To harvest the dreadful mile of beach after the vanguard went.

They have learned great faith and little fear and a high heart in distress,
And how to suffer each sodden year of heaped-up weariness.
They have borne the bridle upon their lips and the yoke upon their neck
Since they went down to the sea in ships to save a world from wreck,
Since the chests were slung down the college stair at Dartmouth in fourteen,
And now they are quit of the sea affair as though no war had been.
Far have they gone and much have they known and most would they fain forget,
But now they have come to their joyous own with all the world in their debt.

* * * * * * *

Hallowed river, thrice reverend trees, chapel beyond compare,
Here by gentlemen tired of the seas—take them into your care.
Far have they come and much have they braved. Give them their hour of play,
While the hidden things their hands have saved work for them day by day,
Till the grateful past their youth redeemed return them their youth once more,
And the Soul of the Child at last lets fall the unjust burden it bore.

Let the United States never forget the service our American young men rendered to liberty's cause in the World War.

Let us not forget the environment, the circumstances from which these young men were drawn from civil life. The course of the river of life for many of them has been changed, diverted, interrupted. Some were just about to open from a bud into a rose. They were drawn and placed into their country's honorable service. The manufacturer was paid and should have been paid. The merchant was paid, as was right. The woolen men were paid and should have been paid. The copper men, the iron men, the cotton men, legal men, the steel men, the cattlemen, the leather men, the manufacturers of munitions were paid and should have been paid. Shall it happen that in an opulent, a proud, and puissant Republic we pay for steel, for iron, for concrete, for coal, for copper, for oil and leather, for wheat and oats, but that the moment we attempt to pay the man power, which must be subsisted—the moment we attempt to pay the soldier, the animated, living, breathing human who wins the battles, we are to be stigmatized as trying to capitalize patriotism? I would like to have an answer to that question.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. ASHURST. I yield with pleasure.

Mr. McCUMBER. There is but one answer to the Senator's question, and I think it is a definite and a certain answer to those who claim that this is an attempt to capitalize patriotism. The Senator knows that the boy who shouldered the gun, as he said, got about $2 a day, but we will give the benefit of another $1 a day and say that he got $3 a day. The Senator agrees with me and every man in the Senate agrees with me that the man who shoulders the gun and fights for his country is entitled to as great a compensation certainly as the man who stays at home, away from danger, to get material for the soldier to fight with. The Senator knows that the average wage ran from $6 to $10 a day after the soldier went to war. He knows further than this, that outside of that extra compensation to this class of people, just as he said, there are 2,000 more millionaires and the millionaires are many times more millionaires than they were before.

Now, the man who took the soldier's place, the man who took his place in the shop, realizes that he had an advantage over his brother who went to war and he is ready to share in that at the present time. He says, "I will give you a part as a taxpayer." He has finally to pay the taxes as well as the millionaire. He says, "I will share with you and pay you a portion of the extra amount that I earned." Two million signers of petitions have already come from that class of American laborers, men and women, and another million will be deposited here to-morrow. They are not complaining.

The people who are complaining and whining against this little payment of an extra $1 a day and an extra $1.25 a day are those contractors who made their millions and those who multiplied their millions in billions. They are objecting to it, not on the ground that it is capitalizing patriotism, but on the ground that it means taxes to them, and they want to escape it. I think the Senator takes the right position, and that is the theory on which we are supporting the bill—that the American people owe these soldiers that much. They ought to pay more. They are satisfied with that and, before God, we ought to pay that, and we ought not to whine about it either.

The Senator directed his remarks to the question of this particular motion. I think the motion is right. It takes two-thirds of the Senate to adopt it, but it is to make certain that by no possibility are we going to try to escape taking up this bill immediately after the tariff measure shall have been disposed of. I should have favored taking it up at the present time if it could have been done, but it takes votes to do that, and, not having the votes, I am in favor of the next best position to make its consideration dead certain. I see certainty of its consideration in the pending motion, and I hope that the Senator from Arizona will vote with us to make it absolutely certain.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. ASHURST. Certainly. I yield.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Why does the Senator from Arizona wish to discuss the merits of the question now? We shall have a long time in which to do that. Why not let us vote?

Mr. ASHURST. The suggestion is kindly made and I am not offended by it; but to a speech which has been made I feel that I ought to have the opportunity of making some reply. I shall conclude soon.

I wish to say that every time a Senator manifests activity in favor of the soldiers' compensation bill he is accused either of attempting to play politics or of being a demagogue, or the ex-soldier is accused of capitalizing patriotism. No one has ever heard me here or elsewhere object to the position which has been taken by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS]. He has always been opposed to the passage of the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill. I have not criticized him for it. My esteemed friend the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH], whom we all honor, is opposed to this legislation as a matter of principle. We do not impugn his motives because he is against the bill, and those who are opposed to this legislation must stop impugning the motives of Senators who are for the bonus bill. By what right in parliamentary procedure or of fairness between man and man, or otherwise, do you find ground to say that whilst you are honest in your opinion—and we concede your honesty in it—that we or some of us who favor the bill are moved by demagogy? We do not intend that without protest Senators opposed to this legislation shall continue to charge that it is capitalizing patriotism to pay the soldiers.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

Mr. ASHURST. I yield to the Senator from New Mexico.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I believe that the Senator from Arizona has made a very timely discussion of this situation.

Mr. ASHURST. I thank the Senator.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. I feel deeply that the difference of opinion in this country regarding this measure centers around the point which the Senator from Arizona has been discussing. I can understand how those who do not believe in capitalizing patriotism should undertake to apply that to this situation; but I want to say that we are all of that mind. We do not intend by this bill to capitalize patriotism, and the sooner that notion is gotten out of the mind of the people of this country the better.

Unfortunately, the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] to-day placed his opposition to the proposed legislation entirely upon that ground. Opposition upon the same ground arises in other quarters in the country. I listened to the address of the President of the United States when he came before us on the 12th of last July. I heard him use this language:

> Even were there not the threatened paralysis of our Treasury with its fatal reflexes on our activities which concern our prosperity, would it not be better to await the settlement of our foreign loans? At such a time it would be a bestowal upon the part of our Government when it is able to bestow.

Everybody understands what the word "bestow" means. It means to give, to offer, to impart a gratuity; and I am not surprised that people who look at this question in that way should oppose the soldiers' bonus bill; but I want them distintcly to understand, as does the Senator from Arizona, that we do not put it upon that ground; that we feel that there is an indebtedness from this Government to those men that should be paid. It should be paid in dollars and cents; it should be compensation. I grow impatient when Senators in this Chamber or people elsewhere talk about "capitalizing patriotism."

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from New Mexico. He has made my speech a valuable one.

Mr. President, when the Colonies were not opulent, when the French and Indian war was on, Braddock's expedition—and his troops camped out on the hills near here on the first day out of Alexandria—was equipped largely by Benjamin Franklin at a cost of 20,000 pounds sterling. The Colonies were poor; they were unable readily to pay, although they were at that time British colonies. The expedition marched to the fatal field of the Monongahela, where the red men poured a deadly fusillade of bullets and arrows and flaming faggots into the soldiers who were commanded by Braddock, who was slain, as were colonels and captains and private soldiers; the ammunition horses fled with the ammunition; the stores were destroyed. Panic and dismay came upon the British troops, but the gallant young colonel from Mount Vernon (Washington) took command and restored order. The expedition, however, was a disaster and a failure. The supplies were lost. Benjamin Franklin sent his bill for the payment of the sums of money he expended in outfitting the Braddock expedition. In all the Colonies there was not a man who said, "Benjamin Franklin is capitalizing patriotism, because he wants his pay, the money that he advanced and pledged for Braddock's expedition." Would Senators accuse Benjamin Franklin of having capitalized patriotism? It remained for an opulent people, it remained for the 23,000 millionaires, it remained for upstart parvenus to say that when you pay for the man power which is used in war then you are capitalizing patriotism. Do not be led into the belief that the only thing war means is the death and mutilation of soldiers. War leaves a deadly train, a lowering of the moral tone of the people; it leaves not only dead and wounded, it leaves debts to be paid and taxes to be levied. The American people are ready to meet that debt.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, the Republican Party is in the majority in the Senate and under the canons of good policy it has the right to direct the course of legislation; it has the right at least to attempt to bring up such measures as commend themselves to the judgment of the members of that party. The proposal I have made does not commit anybody to vote either for the bonus bill or against it; it leaves every Senator just as free to do as he pleases, as if we do not agree to it. It is not even an attempt to commit anybody to vote for the bonus bill or to vote against it, to vote it up or to vote it down; but is merely a proposition that has reference to procedure. That is all there is to it. The bonus bill has been before us for some time in different forms, and has come up in different ways. All in the world the motion I have made seeks to do is to fix a time when we shall consider it. I do not know why anyone should oppose the fixing of a time to consider the bill. It is a question with which we have to deal, for, like Banquo's ghost, it will not down; it rises on all possible occasions. We have got to make some disposition of it; and all in the world the motion seeks to do is fix a time when we shall consider it and either vote it up or vote it down. That is all it attempts to do.

In order that there may be no loophole about it, I wish to modify my motion so that it will read:

> I move that the bill (H. R. 10874) to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes, be, and is hereby, made the special order of business immediately following the vote upon the third reading and passage of the tariff bill, so called, H. R. 7456.

I modify the original motion for the reason that the original motion provided that the bonus bill should be a special order at 12 o'clock on the day following the vote on the tariff bill in the Senate. I have changed it, because there might be some unfinished business come up between the time of the passage of the tariff bill and the following day at 12 o'clock, which would set aside the special order. The modification I propose will leave the motion in such shape that nothing can intervene, so that the adjusted compensation bill must come up immediately after the vote on the tariff bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, the Republican caucus on yesterday——

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, does the Senator desire to ask me a question. I have the floor.

Mr. SIMMONS. If the Senator will permit, I was going to make a preliminary observation, and then I was going to make a statement to the Senator which I think he may care to consider, although I do not know as to that.

I was about to say that on yesterday the Republican caucus passed an unequivocal resolution providing that immediately upon the final vote upon the tariff bill by the Senate the bonus bill should be made the unfinished business of the Senate. I assume that that resolution was adopted in good faith and that at the time indicated the bonus will be taken up. Now, the Senator presents a motion which would preclude us, if it be adopted, from taking up the bonus bill at any time between now and the passage of the tariff bill. Does the Senator want to cut off the possible opportunity of acting upon the bonus bill before the tariff bill is passed?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. If the Senator asks me that question, I will say that I do, because I am not in favor of postponing the consideration of the tariff bill.

Mr. SIMMONS. The Senator's motion will undoubtedly accomplish that purpose.

Mr. President, the friends of this measure, while somewhat disheartened by the vote of to-day, may see an opportunity before the arrival of the time fixed in the motion of the Senator to call up this matter again in the hope of more favorable action; and I think the objection, if there be any, to the Senator's motion is in that particular—that it forecloses the friends of this measure from making a motion to take up this matter at any time until after the tariff bill is acted upon.

I do not know when the tariff bill is going to be acted upon. I hope it will be acted upon within the next six weeks. I think it probably will be. It may not be. It may be three months; and, Mr. President, I want to say right now that I believe two months' or three months' delay of action upon the bonus bill may result in its final defeat.

We all know that during the last few months one of the most persistent and intensive propagandas ever conducted in this country has been conducted against the bonus proposition. We all know that that propaganda has made dangerous headway in the country. If this matter is continued again for six weeks or two months or three months, those who have organized this drive and have pressed it with such vigor and such disastrous results to the fate of the bill will redouble their efforts, will redouble their propaganda, will redouble their drive; and I greatly fear, if these powerful influences and forces that are directed against this proposition and are operating now to pervert public sentiment are given two or three months more, at the end of that time the bonus bill will be dead. It will do very little good, two months from now, to take up the bonus bill if the bonus bill is dead at the time it is proposed to take it up.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, if the bonus bill is dead, then it is dead beyond resurrection; but the bonus bill is not dead, and this is simply a proposition to keep it from being killed by anybody, unless they want to kill it when the direct vote is taken on it. Certainly, if the bonus bill is going to die, and my friend from North Carolina wants it to survive, the best way on earth to prevent it from dying is to adopt this motion, because this gives it a fixed status—a thing it now has not—and I can not see why the Senator should want to object to it.

The Senator asks me whether or not as an individual, personally, I would be willing to set aside the tariff bill to take up the bonus bill. I would not, speaking my own personal sentiment about it; but I am not in control over here, and at any time a majority can set it aside and take it up, if the majority see fit to do so.

Mr. SIMMONS. Can they, if the Senator's motion is adopted?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I think so.

Mr. SIMMONS. Can they take it up at any time?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I think so, beyond any doubt. This is simply a motion to fix a time when it shall be considered in definite fashion. That is all in the world there is to it.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I do.

Mr. BORAH. I just want to ask, largely as a matter of information, in what respect does this motion change the situation at all? A majority may take up the bill at any time prior to the time fixed, and a majority may displace it on the day that it comes up. In what respect does this motion change the situation at all?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. This motion simply satisfies those Senators who want the bonus bill passed, that in good faith it will be taken up at a fixed time and at least considered, I will say to my good friend from Idaho; and that is all in the world there is to it.

Mr. BORAH. It is still in the hands of the majority of the Senate, as it is now.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Yes.

Mr. BORAH. It does not change the situation at all. If a majority wants to take it up to-morrow, the majority may do so. If a majority, upon the day that this order fixes for the hearing, wants to dispose of it without hearing, it may do so; so the situation is not changed, except in certain respects which I do not care to discuss.

Mr. LENROOT. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Indiana yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Yes; I yield to my friend.

Mr. LENROOT. I should like to suggest that the situation is really this—that when the tariff bill is passed, instead of a majority voting to take up this bill, it would require a majority to displace it.

Mr. BORAH. It is a majority just the same.

Mr. LENROOT. Oh, certainly; but the Senator knows that there is a very great difference between displacing a bill that is before the Senate and taking up a bill that is not before the Senate.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, I ask to have the motion that I proposed, as modified, stated from the desk.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Indiana, as modified, which will be stated.

The ASSISTANT SECRETARY. The Senator from Indiana moves that the bill (H. R. 10874) to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes, be, and is hereby, made the special order immediately following the vote upon the third reading and passage of the tariff bill, so-called, H. R. 7456.

Mr. HEFLIN obtained the floor.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry, if the Senator will permit it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Wisconsin?

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. If the resolution as now modified shall be adopted, would it be in order at any time while the tariff bill is still pending to move to proceed to the consideration of the adjusted compensation bill for soldiers?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is not well advised in regard to that matter, but in the opinion of the Chair it would not be in order.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. There is no doubt about it; there is not any question about it, in my judgment.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. There is no question about it which way?

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, the special order certainly does not cut off the right to make a motion in the intervening time. It simply provides that at that time the bill shall be taken up if it is still here.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. That is all.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And the only modification of this motion which would be prohibited would be to change that date when the time arrives?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. That is all.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. But at any time between now and the termination of the consideration of the tariff bill, if I understand the Senator from Massachusetts, a motion would be in order to proceed to the consideration of the adjusted compensation bill?

Mr. LODGE. I do not understand that this can cut off that motion or cut off a motion to take up any other bill.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I want to read again to the Senate the telegram that came to me from Anniston, Ala.:

> On behalf of the 100,000 ex-service men of this State, their wives, mothers, and dependents, the American Legion appeals to you to use your influence to set aside tariff bill and take up adjusted compensation bill instead. Similar action was taken in behalf of Army and Navy appropriation bills. We consider our bill of a more pressing nature than either of those measures.
> (Signed) HARRY M. AYRES, Commander.

In the name of this commander and the ex-service men that he represents and their loved ones, I repudiate the statement that these men are trying to capitalize their patriotism.

Mr. President, we have been told that England and France have paid their soldiers a bonus with the money they borrowed from us. This Congress refuses, under Republican control, to collect enough of the money that they owe us to give adjusted compensation to our soldiers.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] suggests that I have consumed nearly an hour here to-day. Mr. President, these boys are worthy of all the time I may consume and all that all the Senators here may consume and all the Members of the House may consume in asking for justice for them. They did not have any say when we issued the edict from Congress for them to go to the front on a foreign battle field. They did not have time to wait an hour when the ship was ready to sail. They responded to the call of duty, stood at attention, unfurled the flag, and went away. Now they are back. The danger is removed and the country is safe. All of these debts are paid off to contractors who remained at home during the war, and the soldier is standing out yonder asking that simple justice be done to him and asking that an accounting be had with him. He is asking you to see whether or not you owe him anything, and, if you do owe him anything, to pay it. Then Senators come in here and say that they are trying to capitalize patriotism; that they are showing that they were fighting for money. Think of it. How ridiculous and absurd!

Why, Mr. President, these pompous, big bay-window fellows up in Wall Street, with dollar marks all over them, who are opposing this bonus and who are sending out propaganda to help kill this measure, and who are using their influence upon their agents in every walk in public life, even here in Washington, to fight this thing, are ridiculous; and they talk about fighting for money! Why, not one of them would have taken the place of an American soldier and gone out on the battle front in France for a million dollars a minute. Fighting for money! These boys that went out from my State—God bless them; as brave men as ever battled and covered themselves all over with glory—were not fighting for money. I resent and repudiate the statement that they were fighting for money, and I heap contempt and scorn upon the statement that they are now capitalizing patriotism. I have observed that those who are so eloquent here in denouncing soldiers' adjusted compensation as capitalizing patriotism never had any of their blood shed on the battle front, and they are men of large means, too, most of them. And some of them, I fear, are close friends of Wall Street. But they stand up and throw out their chests and say, "Capitalizing patriotism! Fighting for money!" Thirty dollars a month, and maybe some of them a little more; walking out there on the battle front, where shot and shell and danger and death were. Money was not the consideration.

If money had been the consideration, many and many a day these brave boys, if they had had the money, would have given a hundred dollars an hour to have stayed off of that battle front. Money did not figure in it at all with those brave boys. Love of country, love of justice and right principle, belief in the greatest Government in all the world, faith in it, that it could never be controlled by hog men filled with greed and avarice, where the people would be robbed and the soldiers deprived of an honest livelihood—that is what inspired them to do and, if need be, die for their country. The ideals inspired and fostered in every home in the Republic—that is what made them fight. Inherent heroism, courage, valor—that is what made them fight so heroically on a foreign battle field.

Now, when they come back home these men, made in God's image, starving many of them in the large cities—I told you to-day that they stripped them to the waist in Boston and sold them on the block—and then you talk about capitalizing patriotism. These men in Wall Street and elsewhere in the East who have got their plans laid to kill the soldiers' bill care nothing for the soldier or the country, except for the purpose of plundering them.

We are going to have a show-down in this Republic, and I am going to assist in bringing on the show-down. I, as does every Senator here, owe a duty to these boys, God bless them. I will stand by them now, just as I stood by them on the battle front, and I do not intend that anybody shall stand here and cast reflections upon them and say they were fighting for money and capitalizing patriotism without rising in my place and letting the RECORD show to-morrow and to posterity that there was somebody here who resented and repudiated the statement. These big profiteers denounce the poor soldier, who is saying: "Am I not entitled to live? I am a young man. I offered all I had. I left my home. I offered to die for the country. I shed my blood over yonder, and now I am back here, and all I want is something to live on. Hear my statement and see if the Government owes me anything." Five hundred thousand of them are out of employment; and you say that boy who wants food for his body is capitalizing patriotism. He did not bring himself into the world. He is entitled to have food. He is entitled to have clothing and he is entitled to have shelter. In this great country everybody is entitled to a living. That is not socialism; that is democracy, simple justice, and Americanism; and, so help us God, we are going to wrench the instrumentalities of this Government out of your hands and unloose the supply of money and credits, so that everybody can make an honest living and have something to do. Yet they come in here and stand up with a sneering and cynical look on their faces, saying to do justice by the American soldier would put him in the attitude of "capitalizing patriotism and fighting for money."

That is utterly ridiculous. Fighting for money? I want these brave soldier boys of our country to know that the men who speak that way do not speak for the right-thinking, justice-loving, and red-blooded Americans of to-day.

Mr. President, if one man should say to another, "You owe me a certain amount of money," and the other should say, "No; I do not owe you anything," and the first man should then say, "Well, one of us is right and the other is wrong. Let us have the matter investigated and adjusted." Would you not think that he wanted to do the fair thing, and would you not think that he was entitled to have the matter decided? That is the situation in a way with the American soldier. In varying amounts they claim that the Government owes them money. They are asking Congress to hear them and decide whether or not they are right in their contention, and I ask you, Senators, if you do not think that a man who was willing to die for his country is entitled to that much consideration at the hands of Congress?

How do these brave boys feel about it? The telegram from Commander Ayres, of Alabama, gives us an idea when he reminds us that the tariff bill can be sidetracked and other bills taken up and considered here while the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill must wait and be kept in the background. Senators, these boys are entitled to know just what is going to be done with this matter. But the big profiteers of Wall Street want it delayed and postponed so that they can carry on their propaganda against it. They are afraid that we will take some of the millions that they got from the Government during the war and use them in settling with the soldier.

Mr. President, it is difficult for many of these boys to make a living under the conditions that exist to-day. There is real distress in many quarters. Right here in this city the other day a brave Belgian boy, who had fought through the World War, was found unconscious and said to be starving. I do not know whether he is dead yet or not. He wandered about in this land of plenty, in the Capital of the greatest Republic in all the world. I wonder if there are any men and women now in Washington who recall that he came and asked them for bread, and they refused him. I wonder if there are any who saw the newspaper picture of that young man in bed in the hospital, delirious, while his physical being battled for life, who recalled that he came to them for assistance and they drove him away hungry. I wonder if there are those who when they saw his face said, "There he is, nearly gone," and recalled that they refused him shelter.

I wonder if there are those who when they saw his face had to admit that he came to them and they turned him away empty handed. Do you know what happens to these boys? They are proud, upstanding American citizens. They offered their lives and their all. They have so much pride that they nearly die before they will beg, and as their physical strength wanes and as they mope about, with spirit broken, in the land they saved, they reach the point where they had rather die than to live, we are told. Disease seizes them, and they are being swept away; yet you postpone action upon this bill, which would give to them bread and meat and shelter and something to wear.

Oh, Senators, there is a judgment day coming beyond the confines of this Chamber. There is a God of love and justice who is going to pass judgment upon the acts of men and nations. The Christ of God, when He was here, said:

> I was naked, and ye clothed me not; I was hungry, and ye gave me not to eat; I was athirst, and ye gave me not to drink. And inasmuch as ye did it unto one of the least of these, ye did it unto me.

Did ever these boys who went abroad to fight for their country dream that when they came home, dire distress looking them in the face, starvation threatening, they could say, "I offered my life for the flag; and I was hungry, and ye would not give me to eat; I was naked, and ye would not clothe me?"

I have stated before and will relate it again, since these gentlemen harp about capitalizing patriotism, that ex-Congressman Crosser, of Ohio, told me that he was in a theater in Cleveland where they had a collection of old clothing taken up for ex-service men—boys who had been in uniform—here in this rich country gathering up old clothes from God only knows where to give to these boys, these proud, upstanding youths who marched away to the drumbeat carrying the flag to preserve liberty. He said a soldier would get up before that audience and walk down to the platform and get an old suit of clothes. Crosser said that the tears ran down his face as he beheld that awful and humiliating sight.

Here we are in the Capital of the Nation denying them an hour, two hours, or a day in which to consider a bill which would give them justice—simple justice, that is all. They are saying, "Give me adjusted compensation. I am willing to present my cause, my claim, my proof; hear me." And you will not even set apart one day to hear his statement and pass upon his claim. He showed us every consideration on the battle field. Have we forgotten that?

You turn a deaf ear to it, and then, when he is starving, and is found unconscious in a park, or walks down the aisle in a theater, my God, how heart-rending the scene! How humiliated he looks with his head hanging down; his very spirit is broken within him.

What feelings must he have for a Republic that denies him work and that will permit him to take an old suit of clothes off the stage at a theater and walk away hungry and disconsolate into the night. Then you stand here and chide me, as the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LENROOT] did, for consuming an hour in pleading for simple justice for these boys. Am I filibustering when I speak for the men who offered their lives for their country, when I resent the insult that they are capitalizing their patriotism and fighting for money, when they ask for nothing but justice, simple justice?

Mr. President, I am responsible for the time I consume. I do not have to consult the Senator from Wisconsin when I speak and what I shall speak about. I am responsible to my constituents and to my God; and, so help me God, just as long as I hold a commission from the bravest and best State in all the sisterhood of States, I will continue to fight for what I believe is just and right. The people of that State sent me here because they thought I would do that. I have no ill feeling and criticism for those who in their hearts really oppose adjusted compensation for the soldier. I can not understand their position and I dare to disagree with them. I am criticized by Wall Street agents for the position I take. There never has been a time they could dictate a vote of mine in the House or in the Senate, and I do not propose that anybody shall stand here and say that these boys are capitalizing their patriotism when they ask justice at the hands of the Government. It is not so. It is a mean and dirty reflection upon those boys who offered to die, and whose comrades did die fighting for their country. I resent it. I repudiate it.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Arizona?

Mr. HEFLIN. I gladly yield.

Mr. ASHURST. When Horatius stood at the bridge on the Tiber and assisted, if he did not lead, the fight in hurling back the invading hordes, Rome was so grateful that they concluded, in the language of Macaulay—

> To give him of the corn land, which was the public right,
> As much as two strong oxen could plow from morn to night.

If Horatius had been at the bridge in these days and had helped hurl back the invading foe, and it had been proposed to give him as much of the corn land as two oxen could plow from morning to night, it would have been said that he was capitalizing patriotism.

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly, according to the standard of these suddenly awakened and inspired gentlemen. Lincoln once said, "The crisis that I see approaching unnerves me, and I tremble for the safety of my country." Senators, when manhood and simple right and justice are put beneath the foot and the dollar lifted high above them the country is indeed on the danger line. Millionaires are increasing while millions of people are denied the necessities of life.

> Ill fares the land, to hastening ills a prey,
> Where wealth accumulates, and men decay.

What is going on in this country? You are crushing the spirit out of as brave young warriors as ever shouldered gun or drew a battle blade. That is what you are doing. Then you talk about creating Bolsheviks. You are making Bolsheviks. What will make a Bolshevik as quickly as a strong young man seeing justice murdered before his eyes, right trampled under foot, injustice enthroned, and right cast down while wrong is flaunted in his face? What will make a Bolshevik quicker than that? They can not give us a day, not 24 hours, to consider a bill which affects vitally the soldier who won the great World War.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, after the old French and Indian War, in which George Washington played such a conspicuous part, he spent a whole winter in Williamsburg, where the capital then was, in working on the legislature to pass a bonus bill to give him and his soldiers a land bonus, and he succeeded in getting it. Some of the titles to the finest Virginia estates relate back to those land grants, and Washington himself got 70,000 acres of that land.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, that was patriotism then, but when you tread upon the toes of these millionaires of Wall Street, who multiplied and increased during the war, who charged their Government all sorts of profits and made themselves richer than Croesus, they fight these boys who want to live, and make light of them, and have sentiments voiced on this floor to the effect that they are capitalizing patriotism and fighting for money.

Mr. ASHURST. Mr. President, it is said that republics are not grateful. They are grateful. When we were poor, Lafayette revisited our country. He was introduced in the House of Representatives, and Henry Clay made a superb oration, which is taught to schoolboys to this day. But they were not content with mere speeches. They voted Lafayette $200,000 from our poor Treasury, and a township, 36 sections, of 640 acres each, in Louisiana or Florida—36 sections of land and $200,000 in cash—and not a man in all the length and breadth of the land ever said that Lafayette was capitalizing patriotism.

It only remains in this opulent day, when we have grown rich and great, that the suggestion is made that to pay the private soldier an adjusted compensation is capitalizing patriotism.

Mr. HEFLIN. Why, certainly that is their contention. I saw the statement some time ago, and it emanated from Wall Street, that it was capitalizing patriotism and that they would be put in the attitude of having fought for money. I never thought that it would be repeated on this floor, but it has been repeated here—that these brave boys were capitalizing patriotism and fighting for money. Mr. President, I wish that the American people had a right to vote on some of these busy gentlemen now, these gentlemen who flaunt their very insults in the faces of as brave an army as ever marched to battle in all the tide of time. Capitalizing patriotism! What an insult!

"Who knocks at that door?" "An American soldier." "What do you want?" "I want a job; I want something to do; I am starving." "Have not you got a job?" "No, sir." "Can not you find work to do?" "I have walked for days seeking it and I can not find it." "Are you hungry?" "I have not had a meal this day; I am hungry and I want something to eat. It almost kills me to have to beg for bread, but I am starving. I am so weak I can hardly stand on my feet."

We come into the Congress and say to Senators, "Let us judge that man's case. He is starving. He is a patriotic youth. He served and saved his country, and he wants to live. He is entitled to live and he is entitled to fair treatment at our hands." Let us pass this measure and decide his case. Oh, no; you pigeonhole it. You take the excess-profits tax off of the big millionaire in Wall Street, you relieve the profiteer, you pass the Army and Navy appropriation bills, and you drive on with your tax bill to-day in the interest of the tariff barons; but you pigeonhole the bill for this boy who is in want and dire distress.

Senators, the American people are fair when they can get the truth, and they are going to get the truth about this case. We are going to give it to them somehow. We are going to let the honest, upstanding men and women of America pass judgment on the case. You are not going to get away with your propaganda and say, "That was capitalizing patriotism, and that is the reason why I voted against it." You will have to meet the issue squarely and fairly at the judgment bar of the American people when they have a chance to speak with their ballots in their hands.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to yield to my friend from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. When the French people overturned the throne and had beheaded the king and had thrown his head as a gage of battle at the feet of other kings, and six or eight armies were marching upon Republican France, it was necessary to have a levy en masse; that is, the people had to rise as a man, all those who were able to bear arms, to defend the fatherland. One of the measures which the French assembly adopted was to provide $3,000,000,000 as a bonus in advance, so that those who fought knew that if they returned to their homes their old age would be provided for; that they would not have to beg their bread from door to door as our boys are doing now; that they would not have to beg for work; and if they fell in battle their dependents, the mother or the wife or the daughter or the son, would be provided for by this bonus. That so inspired the French Army of the Republic that no enemy which they met resisted them, and so inspired them that they immortalized history with such names as Hohenlinden, Marengo, Austerlitz, and a dozen others I might name.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I thank the able Senator from Georgia. When these boys of ours went off to battle they never thought about money. They had faith in the Government. They loved the Government well enough to die for it, and no man loves a government better than that. The big profiteers who are trying to deny justice to the soldier boys do not love the Government; they do not love the flag except as they see in it a passport for them into the powers of government which will enable them to increase their fortunes. They care nothing for the flag except as it serves the purpose of predatory interests.

But the boys who marched out were willing to fight and die for their country. They came back home never dreaming that the civic situation would be so changed that the instrumentalities of the Government which, when they went away, were in the hands of the people would be so tied up and controlled as they are to-day; that the volume of money would not be flowing freely in every line of business, with credit conditions agreeable everywhere to everybody who needed credit and had a going business. They never dreamed that when they got back all this contraction and all this deflation would have taken place. They never had an idea that the time would come when prosperity would not flow like a river and they could not obtain something to do. They never dreamed that time would come. But it came.

After they had reached home they saw these contractors marching to Congress in droves to get their checks for all the materials they had used and some that they never produced, their checks for investments which they made and the Government guaranteeing their investments; and when they saw all that being paid, they said, "Well, let us get to work." They were told, "There is no work here. This industry is closed." They said, "Let us go over here." And they were told, "We have shut down. Business is dead." "What am I to do? I have to live. Must I beg my bread?"

Many of them begged at first and would not tell that they were soldiers. I do not believe anybody would turn a soldier away hungry if they knew he was a soldier, unless it was one of these holier-than-thou fellows who now charges him with capitalizing his patriotism. I believe they would turn the soldier away hungry.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. I understood the Senator in the beginning of his address to refer to a petition from the commander of the American Legion Post of Alabama claiming to represent 100,000 ex-service men. Other Senators have received similar petitions. I have one from my own State claiming to represent 240,000 ex-service men. I would like to ask the Senator from Alabama if any speeches were made to those young men when they went forth to camp to prepare to fight for their country, accusing them of commercializing their patriotism because they were going to fight for their country for $30 a month?

Mr. HEFLIN. Oh, no, Mr. President. Those fellows who were talking about capitalizing their patriotism were then telling them to go, go. "The Government is just and fair and grateful. The Government will never forget your services. It will always love and honor you." Money never entered into the consideration with them then. They would not have cared whether they got a dollar a day or not if the Government was giving them food and raiment and stuff with which to fight. They went as their forbears have gone, to do battle and to win victory in the cause of right. Of course, the commercial idea never entered into it; but now since they have come home and are asking from the Government, for which they offered to die, an adjusted compensation such as we are discussing they are told that they are fighting for money and that they are capitalizing patriotism.

Now, Mr. President, I want to say in conclusion——

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I would like to ask the Senator a question.

Mr. HEFLIN. I am glad to yield to my friend from North Carolina.

Mr. SIMMONS. A very nearly unanimous vote has been cast on the other side of the Chamber to-day to postpone the consideration of the bonus bill until after the tariff bill has been passed. The friends of the bonus bill on the other side of the Chamber have voted for that proposition. I want to ask the Senator if the friends on the other side of the Chamber, who have declared their willingness to vote finally for the proposition, have not in that way admitted that the soldiers who fought and won the war are entitled to this additional dollar a day?

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly.

Mr. SIMMONS. Now, I want to ask the Senator how he thinks the friends of the bonus bill on the other side of the Chamber, who have made that admission, who have declared their ultimate purpose to vote for the bill upon the ground that it is a just debt and due the soldiers, propose to justify themselves for laying aside the measure to pay the soldiers of the war the $1 a day which they admit the Government owes them until after they have had an opportunity to pass a bill to give to the profiteers of the last war millions and hundreds of millions and billions of dollars? How can they justify it?

Mr. HEFLIN. They can not justify it.

Mr. SIMMONS. And that is exactly what they are doing.

Mr. HEFLIN. Certainly it is.

Mr. SIMMONS. They are admitting the debt on the part of the Government to the soldier. They say, "We want to postpone the bill to pay that debt until we can pass the bill to give to the profiteers of the war billions of dollars of the people's money." How do they justify it?

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, the Senator is absolutely right. Nothing they have said justifies their efforts to postpone action on this measure. Word has come from the White House. We are told to put this bill to sleep. But this action has been taken, and we must apply the old Bible standard again, "By their fruits ye shall know them." We know what they intended to do by what they have done. What did they intend to do? They intended to sidetrack the bonus, the adjusted compensation, and to do what? To continue the tariff tax bill that will give billions of dollars to the tax barons of the United States and that will take billions of dollars out of the pockets of the American consumers, including the soldiers. That is what it will do.

What have we done about it? The issue has been drawn in this body. There were those of us who said, "Let us take the soldiers' bill up. They are human beings; they need food and shelter and raiment now, every hour and every day and night, and they must have care and consideration now. Shall we consider them or shall we consider those interests which are pressing you to hurry the other bill through? That bill can wait. Let us take up the soldiers' bill. They are human beings."

Who are these human beings? They are the soldiers of the great World War. We ordered them to go abroad and battle. Now they have won the victory, let us show this consideration for them and consider the bonus bill now. But what did you do? You voted on a roll call to defer action upon it and to put through this bargain counter tariff bill, this tariff tax measure, to drive it through, because the tariff barons have ordered that it be done. Those who fight the bonus have decreed it, because they want to pass the one and kill the other, and you have done what they want you to do. Then you stand up here and talk about being in favor of the bonus. You postpone action on this thing for six weeks.

Some Senators now opposing the soldiers' adjusted compensation measure are going into the States of other Senators making it a point to speak against the bonus when the Senators of those States are pledged to the enactment of such a measure. There has never been anything like this propaganda you are carrying on. You come in and instead of being able to answer our argument you stand up and say it is an attempt to capitalize patriotism and that they were fighting for money. Shame on you. Oh, Mr. President, there are occasions here when those who do love their country have reason to do some very serious thinking; they have reason to have some very disturbing thoughts along lines suggested by occurrences in and around this body.

Mr. President, I want to say a word in conclusion. I did not intend to speak as long as I have upon this subject, but my blood fairly boiled at the suggestion that the boy who went out on that battle line in "no man's land," where death was raining all around him, fighting for me and for my country, was fighting for a money consideration, was capitalizing his patriotism. I resent the base insinuation.

I know that Wall Street feels as though it owned this body; I know that we have got some millionaires in it. I do not object to wealth if a man achieves it properly and honestly; I am for personal rights; I am for property rights; I am for capital; I am for labor; I am for the common man; I am for justice for everybody. That is what every Senator here should stand for. I believe in doing that which will bring about the greatest good to the greatest number. I believe in the enforcement of the laws of justice. That is the American standard. Those who stand for that, those who want to see justice done to the boy who offered to pour out his lifeblood for his country, are accused of wanting to encourage the capitalization of patriotism. Some Senators come in here with their sickly and cynical stuff and say that the demand for the compensation bill shows that our soldiers were fighting for money.

Mr. President, I do not want to take any more time now, although the soldier boys are entitled to all the time that I have and all the physical strength I have to give them; but I know that I am tied and that they are gagged and tied. Senators, they are waiting on us; they can not enter their protests except through us and through some periodicals, thank God, which are for them whole-heartedly. They can write letters and send telegrams to their Senators and Representatives; they can have their State and National meetings and make known their wishes and continue to fight for justice. We will continue to fight for justice for them here; we will keep the fires of recollection, of appreciation, and of gratitude burning at the altar place in this temple of liberty until justice is done to them.

These sneers will not deter us.

I know the effort to prevent this legislation is being made through the columns of certain members of the subsidized press. The newspapers that are not subsidized need not take any offense at what I say; I do not refer to them; I mean the newspaper that is bought; I mean the newspaper that does absolutely the bidding of the greedy and soulless money trust in the United States. I am not talking about the honest newspaper man or the honest newspaper that is not for sale, that can not be bought outright, bribed, or bulldozed; I am not talking about that class of newspapers, but I am talking about the other class.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President——

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to my friend from Georgia.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. The Senator from Alabama, no doubt, remembers the career of George Rogers Clark, whom John Randolph, of Roanoke, called "the Hannibal of the West." He added more territory to this Union than did any other one man who ever lived in it. His march over the flooded lands of the Wabash, his capture of Fort Kaskaskia, his march on Fort Vincennes, his conquest of that great territory, forms one of the most brilliant chapters in our history. George Rogers Clark was of the very highest type of manhood; but yet the Senator from Alabama knows that George Rogers Clark accepted a bonus of land, part of the land that he and his soldiers had fought for and bled for, and he died on it. That land included the present site of the city of Louisville, Ky., in which city, my friend, the senior Senator from Kentucky [Mr. STANLEY], tells me, George Rogers Clark is buried. If George Rogers Clark, if George Washington, if General Greene, if Lafayette, and if other men like them could accept bonuses without disgrace, where comes the shame of accepting a bonus of any kind, either land or money?

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Alabama yield to the Senator from Idaho?

Mr. HEFLIN. I yield to the Senator from Idaho.

Mr. BORAH. I want to ask the able Senator from Georgia a question. I know he is a historian. He has stated that George Washington accepted land as a bonus. Was that from the State of Virginia or from the Colony of Virginia?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. First, it was from the Colony of Virginia, and afterwards there was a bonus granted as a result of the Revolutionary War; there was a land grant from the Federal Government.

Mr. BORAH. But Washington declined to receive that for himself, did he not?

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Washington declined to receive a salary for his services during the Revolutionary War; he received only his expenses; but he received his share of the land bonus which was allotted to the soldiers of the Revolutionary War after the war.

Mr. BORAH. I do not want to detain the Senate or the Senator from Alabama, and I am not going to detain him now by reading from authorities on this subject. My understanding, however, is that Washington positively refused to receive any land for his personal benefit or his personal use, but that he did receive land, with the understanding that it would be dedicated to a public use, and that in his will it was so dedicated.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. That may have been true, but Washington not only received land but he bought up the land warrants of his companions in arms to a very large extent.

Mr. BORAH. Washington might have purchased land warrants—I do not know about that—but that was a business transaction.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. But that was certainly an indorsement of the principle.

Mr. BORAH. But I think if the Senator from Georgia will refresh his memory he will find that Washington positively refused to receive a bonus in the way of land. I think I can demonstrate that a little later.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. I shall be very glad to be corrected on that subject if I am wrong.

Mr. BORAH. I know how thoroughly the Senator from Georgia is informed upon such subjects, and when I heard him make that statement in the first instance, of course I hesitated to disagree with him; but I felt, if my memory served me correctly, that he was in error. I do not say now that he is, but my opinion is that the record will bear out my statement that Washington declined to receive any land in the way of a bonus.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, my recollection is that in the French and Indian war Washington spent a whole session of the legislature lobbying, as we would call it, using his influence with the legislature to have them pass a land bonus for the soldiers. They passed such a law, and under that law the soldiers received their bonus. That committed him to the principle, surely, whether he received any of the land for himself or not. My recollection is further, though I have not refreshed it, and I may be wrong, that a large part of his landed estate consisted of land warrants which he bought up, those warrants being bonuses granted by the then Federal Government for services during the Revolutionary War. That again committed him to the principle, even if he did not receive a bonus himself.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I want to state again that it has been said time and time again in this country and in this Chamber that England and France have both paid their soldiers a bonus or adjusted compensation.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. And Canada.

Mr. HEFLIN. Yes; and Canada; and that England and France paid theirs with the money they borrowed from us.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Italy did so, too.

Mr. HEFLIN. And Italy did likewise, I understand. Mr. President, how can any honest man stand here and refuse to order the collection of enough money which they owe us to pay adjusted compensation to our soldiers? Have you any right to take money out of the pockets of the American people and loan it to France and England and Italy to pay adjusted compensation to their soldiers and deny it to our soldiers here at home? The Christian religion teaches us that charity should begin at home; that we must be just to our own before we are generous to others. What right have you to take this money and let them use it in paying off their obligations to their soldiers and then make fun of our soldier—criticize and belittle him and say that he is capitalizing his patriotism when he asks for the same thing that our allies have considered just and have given to their soldiers who fought by his side in the great World War?

Senators, you can not answer these arguments; you can not begin to answer them; and you do not try to answer them. You are using the papers that you have bought back yonder to carry on the propaganda and to denounce those of us here who dare to speak for these poor boys, hundreds and hundreds of whom have not got a dollar to-day.

Have we reached the time in this country, Mr. President, when a man has no standing unless he has got great wealth? Have we reached the time when manhood and womanhood no longer count? Have we reached the time when merit in men and women no longer decides the contest? Is money to be placed above manhood and is money to be the passport to places of power, and must these places that were once bestowed upon able, strong men who could neither be bought nor bulldozed now go to men who have back of them the biggest purse, when seats in the Senate are put up for sale to the highest bidder? Is money to become the corrupting and controlling power in Congress? There are 96 Senators, all told, and all they have to do is to influence or control the votes of 49 Senators. They have moved their battle ground to this body. They say, "If we can get a majority in the Senate, let the House pass what it will. We will choke it to death in the Senate. Away with your bonuses; up with your subsidies; up with the power of taxation to enrich one class and impoverish another; with your legislative power to kick the soldier out at the back door and enthrone those who pillaged and plundered his country in time of war." Is that your standard of patriotism? Is that your standard of statesmanship? If it is, the sooner the American people lash that standard and you out of this Chamber the better it will be for the Government.

Mr. President, the time has come now that when a man runs for the Senate they want to know how much money he has. Has he got a big campaign fund? How does he stand toward big business? Can we control him? No. Then fight him; let loose the dogs of war on him; just like they are fighting my friend from Tennessee [Mr. McKELLAR]. He had a solution for this bonus question, under which it could be settled without taxing the American people a dollar. His plan, that of the Senator from North Carolina, and my plan, and the plans of others could have settled this question without taxing the American people a cent; but do you know why they will not let you do that? Wall Street held your hands off of the collection of this debt while they paid to Wall Street a private obligation of billions of dollars. Are they to be permitted to punish and drive from public life men who dare to demand justice for the soldier who offered to die for his country? Why, I reminded you here six months ago that they have collected already out of England and France alone $1,750,000,000; and then they were saying they were not able to pay us; just stay the debt.

Who told you to do that? What interest was it that was strong enough to put aside the claim of a hundred millions of people while you collected the debt due 21 men in Wall Street? What power is it in the Government that boys from my State and from your States fought for and died for that can come down here and run things like that? Who is it that is back of such a performance? Who is it that is controlling this Government through this mysterious power in Wall Street? What power is it that will not permit you to collect this foreign debt? What is it, I ask again, in the name of every soldier who wore the uniform—I repeat the question—what is it that is causing this meeting of certain editors now in Europe, aye, in London, we are told, to frame up a policy for the Government of the United States regarding the cancellation or collection of a foreign debt? Who is it that is saying we can not collect this money, principal and interest, of $12,000,000,000 due the Government of the United States? What power was it that made you appoint five Republican commissioners, so that no Democrat would know what was said with reference to handling this foreign debt? Who was it that did that? It was never done before in the history of the country. You should have named three Republicans and two Democrats. You named five partisan Republicans. You voted it through this body. Your President appointed them. Who is it that will not let us collect this money to pay these soldier boys what is due them? Who is it? What power is it that sidetracks this adjusted compensation bill for weeks and weeks and weeks in a country where the boys who wore the uniform are in distress? Who is it, Mr. President?

Thank God for the day when the people can express their judgment at the polls and say for themselves whether they indorse this high-handed conduct, when graft and corruption are rampant in the Republic and profiteers are fattened upon the substance of the people, and tariff barons are preferred and placed on the front seat in a Republican Senate, while the American soldier, neglected and seemingly forgotten, drifts back and back in despondency to the rear.

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, I desire to submit a parliamentary inquiry. I understand, in substance, that some parliamentary inquiry was submitted, and I was absent from the Chamber at the time. To my mind the matter is very important.

The pending motion, as I understand, provides that upon the final disposition of the tariff bill we will take up the bonus bill. The uncertainty of the ending of this tariff debate makes it important, I think, that we should have an understanding. It may be, if we do not get along any faster than we have been doing, that that would mean two or three years from now; but I want to submit a parliamentary inquiry to the Chair, so that we will have an understanding when we vote on this motion. Will the adoption of the pending motion prohibit the making of a motion at any time when it would otherwise be in order to take up the so-called adjusted compensation bill?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair answered that inquiry in response to the Senator from Wisconsin. It is obvious, however, that upon that question each Senator must be his own judge of the interpretation to be given to the rules and to parliamentary law. The present occupant of the chair could not and would not attempt to bind the Presiding Officer at the time the question might arise with regard to the proper interpretation or construction of the motion.

Mr. NORRIS. If the Chair will permit me, I am anxious to have it determined, so that, as far as I am concerned—and I should think the same thing would apply to all other Senators—we may vote intelligently on the pending motion; and I think if the Chair would decide it, unappealed from, it would be the same as an agreement, it would be an understanding, that that was going to be the course. If the Chair says that the adoption of the pending motion would make such a motion out of order, so far as I am concerned I shall vote against the pending motion. I do not want to bind myself in any way not to vote for a motion to take up that bill.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair feels that he would be usurping the functions of the then Presiding Officer if he should attempt to make a ruling that would bind the Senate or bind the Presiding Officer who may be in the chair at that time. The Chair has an opinion with respect to the matter. He has been advised by several of the most accomplished parliamentarians of the body that he is wrong, but he is of the same opinion still.

Mr. JONES of New Mexico. Mr. President——

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Chair, for my own guidance and also for that of others who like myself were not present when the Chair ruled on the question, say now what his decision was?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair stated, in substance—and the Chair again declares that he is not attempting to bind the Presiding Officer when the question arises—that, in his opinion, if the motion presented by the Senator from Indiana is adopted, it will not be in order at any time prior to the date mentioned in that motion to move to take up the bonus bill with the idea that it can be adopted by a majority vote. In other words, the present occupant of the chair is of the opinion that the Senate can not adopt to-day a special order requiring a two-thirds vote and then to-morrow rescind it by a majority vote.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. Mr. President, can not the Senator from Indiana modify his motion so as to provide that a motion can be made at any time to take up the adjusted compensation bill?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That would settle it.

Mr. WALSH of Massachusetts. That would remove the difficulty.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, I want to ask the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] if it was his intent, in presenting this motion, to cut off the possibility of having the adjusted compensation bill taken up until the tariff measure is out of the way? If it is his intent, as a matter of course that will go far toward determining the attitude of those who are of like mind with himself; or, on the other hand, does the Senator simply propose that whether it is taken up or not, so long as it is not disposed of, when the tariff bill is out of the way it will automatically become the unfinished business?

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President——

Mr. SMITH. I ask the Senator that question, if the Senator from Nebraska will allow me?

Mr. NORRIS. Before I conclude—and then I will yield the floor—I want to submit a proposition to the Senator from Indiana. If he has the motion there, may I have it?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I have not the motion. It is at the desk.

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to have in my hands a copy of the motion, and then I want to submit a proposition to the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. JOHNSON. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for just an instant?

Mr. NORRIS. I should like to suggest to the Senator a modification of the suggested motion. The motion reads:

I move that the bill—

So and so—

providing adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes, be, and is hereby, made the special order immediately following—

And so forth. Now, why not say this:

I move that the bill—

And so forth—

unless sooner taken up on motion, be, and is hereby, made the special order—

And so forth.

Mr. LENROOT. "And disposed of."

Mr. LODGE. "Unless otherwise disposed of."

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. "Unless sooner disposed of."

Mr. SMITH. That was the question that I asked the Senator from Indiana—if that was his object?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. "Unless sooner taken up and disposed of."

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; let me suggest again to the Senator from Indiana to put in a few words there, "unless sooner taken up and disposed of." Would the Senator have any objection to that modification?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Now, may I answer the question?

Mr. NORRIS. Yes; I have asked it because I want it answered.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] was addressing me at the time, and I failed to hear the question.

Mr. NORRIS. I will repeat it, then. The motion says:

I move that the bill—

And so forth—

be and is hereby made the special order—

Just in front of the word "be" I suggest putting in the words "unless sooner taken up and disposed of," so that it would read like this:

I move that the bill—

And so forth—

to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes, unless sooner taken up and disposed of, be, and is hereby, made the special order—

And so forth.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, if I may have an opportunity now to explain my position, it is simply that what the Senator from Nebraska asks is the rule anyhow.

Mr. NORRIS. I admit that, if the Senator will permit me. I believe that is right. I do not agree with the Chair.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Neither do I. I take the liberty of disagreeing with the Chair.

Mr. NORRIS. But the Chair has expressed an opinion, and we feel in honor bound to obey it and follow it unless we appeal from it, and I do not know how we can appeal from a decision that has not yet been made.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Oh, yes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It can be cured by the Senator's suggestion.

Mr. NORRIS. It can all be cured by this amendment.

Mr. LODGE. Certainly; it is perfectly obvious. The ruling was stated by the Chair when the Senator was absent from the Chamber.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I have taken the liberty of disagreeing with my friend the distinguished Presiding Officer, notwithstanding his great knowledge of parliamentary law, because I have believed, and have so asserted on the floor this afternoon, that even though this motion were adopted, at any time a majority could set it aside and take up the bonus bill. Personally, I have not any doubt about that. That is particularly true after 24 hours, at all events; but, be that as it may, that having been my understanding of the rule from the beginning, I am entirely willing to clear it up by accepting the proposition of the Senator from Nebraska. That is to say, I do not think it changes the existing rule one iota.

Mr. SMITH. If the Senator will allow me, it does modify it in view of the ruling that the present occupant of the chair has made.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Of course, I did not understand that the present occupant of the chair had made a ruling——

Mr. SMITH. No; he expressed his opinion.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Because he was not called on to rule. There was not anything to rule on.

Mr. SMITH. But he expressed an opinion as to what he would do if he were called on to rule.

Mr. BORAH. Mr. President, if everybody is satisfied, let us vote on it.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I agree with my friend from Idaho. If everybody is satisfied, let us vote.

Mr. SMITH. With the modification written in that the Senator from Nebraska has presented?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I accept that modification.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the Senator from Nebraska.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

Mr. NORRIS. Will the Senator accept it?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I will accept it if I understand it.

Mr. NORRIS. I have interlined it here.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry. Do I understand that the Senator from Nebraska presents an amendment to a request for unanimous consent?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. No; it is a motion, I will say to the Senator.

Mr. LODGE. There is no request for unanimous consent about it.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. There is no request for unanimous consent. This is a motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Very well.

Mr. NORRIS. This is the way it would read:

I move that the bill (H. R. 10874) to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes, unless sooner taken up and disposed of, be, and it is hereby, made the special order immediately following the vote upon the third reading and passage of the tariff bill, so called, H. R. 7456.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator offer an amendment or does the Senator from Indiana modify his motion?

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I modify the motion.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I am not aware of any rule of the Senate under which the mover of a resolution may accept an amendment binding the entire Senate.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. There is no such rule. There is a rule of the Senate which allows one who moves an amendment to modify it and present it in its modified form.

Mr. LODGE. Mr. President, a special order, if agreed upon, can not be rescinded except by a two-thirds vote, obviously, but I venture to differ with the Chair in his recent opinion. I think it is perfectly lawful to dispose of the special order prior to the time when the special order would come into effect. It is not setting it aside; the order remains. The subject is disposed of in other ways. Therefore I have no objection to the amendment.

Mr. BORAH. Under this procedure, if a subject is taken up prior to the day upon which it is made a special order, immediately after it becomes a special order anyone can make a motion to supplant it with another subject.

Mr. LODGE. No.

Mr. BORAH. Yes; after it is taken up on that day. It then becomes the unfinished business and anyone can make a motion to supplant it, and a majority can supplant it.

Mr. LODGE. After twenty-four hours.

Mr. BORAH. Exactly.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, before that motion is agreed to I desire to state that my insistence upon a ruling or a modification of the proposed motion rests upon my belief that this soldiers' adjusted compensation bill ought to be taken up before the tariff bill is disposed of. For that reason I was unwilling that the Senate should proceed to vote upon the motion of the Senator from Indiana without a definite understanding that with the adoption of the resolution offered by that Senator it would nevertheless be in order for any Senator at any time during the pendency of the tariff bill to move to proceed to the consideration of the bill for adjusted compensation for soldiers.

I believe that the people of the State I have the honor to represent in part, and I am confident that the members of the American Legion of that State, are opposed to any postponement of the consideration of this bill for the adjusted compensation of the pay of soldiers of the Great War. This morning I received, too late to be offered when the first motion was under consideration, a telegram from the commander of the Wisconsin department of the American Legion. That telegram is as follows:

ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.:

The question of temporarily laying aside the tariff bill for the purpose of considering the adjusted compensation bill will come up to-day. The adjusted compensation bill has already been before Congress for two years and should be passed at once. It will be months before the tariff bill is completed, and it has already been laid aside on two occasions. Knowing that you are in favor of the adjusted compensation bill, I request that you use your utmost influence to lay aside the tariff bill for a short time and secure the consideration of the adjusted compensation measure. I make this request in behalf of the 125,000 ex-service men and women in Wisconsin and the several hundred thousand mothers, wives, and dependents of ex-service men, who can not understand the inexcusable delay in this matter, and who can not see any reason why the tariff bill can be held up for legislation benefiting the Regular Army and Navy and not be held up for nearly 5,000,000 men and women who actually served their country in time of danger and who are to-day suffering greater economic disadvantage.

EDWARD J. BARRETT,
Commander the American Legion, Department of Wisconsin.

I also received a telegram from Mrs. Frank E. Wilson, department president American Legion Auxiliary, Department of Wisconsin, which I now read:

Senator ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
Washington, D. C.:

In the name of the mothers, wives, and families of ex-service men I request that you use every effort in your power to secure immediate consideration for the adjusted compensation bill. Having been before Congress for the past two years, it deserves attention even at the cost of postponing action on the tariff. For the sake of the 4,800,000 men and women who actually did the fighting during the World War and who are to-day suffering serious economic disadvantages I am sure you will comply with this earnest request, as I know you are in favor of the bill.

Mrs. FRANK E. WILSON,
Department President American Legion Auxiliary, Department of Wisconsin.

And this further telegram from a former Wisconsin man, now a resident of Michigan, who urges the prompt passage of the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill. It is dated Bellevue, Mich., is addressed to me, and reads as follows:

ROBERT M. LA FOLLETTE,
United States Senate Chamber, Washington, D. C.:

Majority of Michigan soldiers heartily indorse your action regarding adjusted compensation bill. We have been sidetracked and fooled by promises made only to be broken too often. Conditions warrant immediate passage of bill.

D. W. KYLE,
Formerly of Darlington, Wis.

Mr. President, I do not wish to detain the Senate with any extended discussion upon the motion now pending. I believe we are inflicting a great wrong upon the men who were called into service in the World War, by the manner in which we are treating this bill. I do not propose at this hour to review the history of it. It is sufficient to say that for two or three years it has been shilly-shallied with until the sincerity of those who are responsible for the legislation is most seriously questioned not only by the ex-service men but by the people of the whole country. Not only the men who are to be benefited by this legislation demand its passage, but the great body of the citizenship of this country believe that the enactment of this legislation is the discharge of an obligation of this Government to these men. It is not a gratuity, it is not charity; it is the payment of a debt, and I believe that an overwhelming majority of the people of this country want to see the debt to these soldiers discharged by the Federal Government.

Mr. President, the States were under no obligation to provide additional compensation for the soldiers of the National Army. But, sir, the shameful delay on the part of the responsible officials of the Federal Government forced the States to pass bills for the relief of these ex-service men. I do not know how many States passed such bills, but I do know that a substantial number of the States of the Union have enacted such legislation.

I want to express my disapproval of the action of my Republican colleagues in calling caucuses or conferences to control the action of Members upon this side upon matters of legislation. I have always been opposed to taking legislative measures off this floor and making them the subject of caucus action, otherwise called conference action. The purpose of that sort of proceeding is to bind the consciences of Members who attend upon those conferences. That such is its purpose was evidenced very recently, when certain Senators withdrew from one of these conferences, held upon the call of the Republican organization, as a protest against an attempt to control their action upon proceedings in the Senate.

Many years ago one of the great statesmen, one of the great leaders of the Republican Party, Charles Sumner, denounced the policy of taking legislative subjects from the floor of the Senate and determining the proceeding upon them by party caucuses, hampering and trammeling the freedom of action and seeking to control the judgment and conscience of Members upon legislation. I deprecate it, and I hope that it will be discontinued.

Mr. President, I have not taken any part in the tariff debate up to the present time, except by an occasional question. I am much interested in the tariff bill and I purpose to participate in the debate on it. I think it has been foreshadowed in the course of the discussion here to-day that when Senators from this time on undertake to debate the tariff bill in a thoroughgoing way they are going to be charged with seeking to delay the bill for the soldiers. I think it has been made very plain that this scheme of putting the soldiers' bonus bill behind the tariff bill and making its consideration dependent upon the disposition of the tariff is, first of all, to limit and restrict debate upon the tariff bill and to delay and, if possible, defeat the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill. Debate upon the tariff will be charged up from day to day hereafter as a manifestation of hostility to the ex-service man.

Mr. President, I stand for a protective tariff measured strictly and limited to the difference in the cost of production at home and abroad. I propose, before we have disposed of the tariff bill, to discuss it, with such thoroughness as I am capable of, upon that principle. I do not purpose, sir, to be deterred from debating the tariff bill by any charge that I am delaying the passage of the soldiers' bill.

I deprecate that word "bonus." It should never be called a bonus bill. It is not a bonus. That term has been fastened upon it by those who do not want to fairly compensate the soldiers of the country for the sacrifices they made. It is a soldiers' adjusted compensation. I do not know whether it is fully adjusted or not. I doubt very much that it is.

Mr. President, I purpose to debate the tariff bill, and to debate it with such thoroughness as I am able to, but I say here and now that I am for taking up the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill and disposing of it. The tariff bill can well afford to wait. The people of the country can well afford to have it wait, for they will pay in tribute to the selfish interests of the country far more than the soldiers' adjusted compensation will cost the country.

Mr. President, from time to time as we proceed with the tariff bill, if I shall see an opportunity to get the soldiers' adjusted compensation bill up for consideration, I shall not hesitate to submit to the Senate a motion to vote upon it. I shall not be deterred by the large vote cast in the Senate to-day in favor of delaying action until the tariff bill is disposed of. When Senators hear from their constituents I think they will change their views upon the subject. At least I shall be in favor of giving Senators the opportunity of so doing from time to time in the weeks to come.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from Nevada?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. PITTMAN. There are, of course, on our side Senators who are violently opposed to the soldiers' bonus bill, but nevertheless I would ask unanimous consent that we vote on the proposition. I do not think even the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] or the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] would filibuster against a thing like that. I ask unanimous consent that we take up the so-called bonus bill—I apologize for using that term—and vote upon it at or before 6 o'clock this afternoon. Is there any objection to that request?

Mr. WADSWORTH. Mr. President, do I understand the Senator from Nevada has submitted a unanimous-consent request?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada asks unanimous consent that the bonus bill be taken up for consideration, and that a vote thereon be had by 6 o'clock this afternoon. Upon that suggestion it will be necessary to call the roll to develop the presence of a quorum.

Mr. PITTMAN. If the Senator from New York is willing to object, there is no use of having a roll call.

Mr. WADSWORTH. I shall obviate the necessity for calling a quorum or anything of that sort by announcing an objection now.

Mr. PITTMAN. That explains the whole situation.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Now, Mr. President, I have said all I care to say upon the pending resolution.

I now address myself to a question of personal privilege.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Mr. President, will the Senator permit me to inquire whether or not it has reference to the question before us?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. It has not.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Will the Senator allow a vote to be taken before he proceeds?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I would very much like to conclude what I have to say to-night upon the question of personal privilege, as some matter appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of this morning that I think should be answered to-day.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. I was wondering whether or not——

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I would be very glad, except for that fact. I have been here for the greater part of the day awaiting an opportunity for recognition and was not able to secure it before and therefore I wish to avail myself of my privilege at this time. The pending resolution, if it should not be voted upon this evening, can be voted upon to-morrow.

Mr. WATSON of Indiana. Very well.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I note by the RECORD of this morning that the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] yesterday obtained unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an address by Nicholas Murray Butler, in which that gentleman charges me with preaching doctrines anti-American and inimical to liberty and justice.

The practice has grown up here in the Senate under which——

Mr. NORRIS. Mr. President, will the Senator permit an interruption?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Of course. I yield.

Mr. NORRIS. I have read what was placed in the RECORD by the Senator from New Jersey, a synopsis of an address by Nicholas Murray Butler, in which, it seems to me, an attack is made upon the Senator from Wisconsin which would come very near to a violation of the rule if it were made by a Senator on the floor. The Senator from Wisconsin is taken to task in this address for a speech which he delivered at Cincinnati the other day.

The request I am about to make ought to have been submitted yesterday, of course, but I suppose no one except the Senator from New Jersey knew just what was contained in what he had inserted in the RECORD, because it was not read on the floor of the Senate. Since Mr. Butler's speech has been printed in the RECORD in 8-point type, as I think it is called, it seems to me that the speech delivered by the Senator from Wisconsin at Cincinnati ought likewise, as a matter to self-defense, to be printed in the RECORD in 8-point type. If the Senator from Wisconsin has that speech, I would like, if he will yield for the purpose, to submit a unanimous-consent request now to print the speech in the RECORD.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska asks unanimous consent that a speech delivered by the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] at Cincinnati, on a date which will be supplied, be printed in the RECORD. Is there objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, what is the request?

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nebraska has asked unanimous consent that a speech delivered by the Senator from Wisconsin in Cincinnati, on a date which the Chair has not confirmed, shall be printed in the RECORD. The inquiry of the Chair now is if there is objection?

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent, in conjunction with that request, that a couple of lectures of mine delivered in Port Gibson, Miss., one upon the League of Nations and the other upon International Nagging, shall receive the same treatment, and that I shall be permitted to insert them in the RECORD. Otherwise I shall object to the request of the Senator from Nebraska.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair is inclined to think that a request for unanimous consent may not be amended. However, if there be no objection, the Chair will state the request as it is now before the Chair. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] has asked unanimous consent for the printing in the RECORD of a speech of the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] delivered at Cincinnati. The Senator from Mississippi [Mr. WILLIAMS] has asked that to that consent there be added the privilege of printing at the same time two speeches of his own in the RECORD, and the Chair supposes in connection with the speech of the Senator from Wisconsin.

Mr. WILLIAMS. At any time. I should not want to be bound by the time.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from North Dakota?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I thought, from a suggestion that the Senator made a short time ago, he would be just as willing to go on in the morning as to finish to-night.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Entirely so.

Mr. MCCUMBER. I do not know that there is to be any further discussion upon the motion that was made by the Senator from Indiana; and I hope we may take a vote upon that motion, and then take a recess until to-morrow morning. In that case the Senator from Wisconsin can finish his remarks, which, he intimates, are of some length, if that is agreeable to the Senator.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. That is entirely agreeable to me, Mr. President. I am willing to yield upon that understanding.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, before that is granted, the Senator from Wisconsin said some things that ought to be replied to before the present session of the Senate adjourns, because it would be too late afterwards to reply to them. I do not think I would take over seven or eight minutes in what I want to say.

Mr. McCUMBER. Would not the Senator be willing to defer that until the morning? The Senator from Wisconsin desires to discuss more fully what he stated on a former occasion, and there would be plenty of time in the morning, and I should like to accommodate the Senate and take a recess in a short time.

Mr. WILLIAMS. What I want to reply to is not the question of personal privilege to which the Senator rose, but I want to make about five or six minutes' remarks in reply to what I conceive to be his doctrine of majority rule regardless of constitutional restrictions. It will not take over five minutes.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I am going to decline to yield at all for any interruption until I have concluded unless it be for a suggestion to adjourn or to dispose of the motion that is pending. I want the address to follow what I have said without interruption, if possible, and then, of course, Senators are at liberty to make such comment as they desire to make.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I did not intend to ask the Senator from Wisconsin to yield to me for an interruption at all. I simply meant to say that before his speech goes into the RECORD there ought to be a reply to that part of the speech which is in advocacy of unlimited majority rule, as against written constitutional restrictions. I imagine it will go into the RECORD in that way, and I wanted to spend about six or eight minutes——

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator will have a full opportunity to-morrow.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Yes; I will have it when the matter is cold, but I will not have it when I have in mind what the Senator has said.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin has the floor, and he may yield to whomsoever he wishes.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, inasmuch as the Senator from Wisconsin, in opening his remarks, referred to me——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I must decline to yield unless it be for a vote upon the resolution or for a motion to adjourn at this time. Should we adjourn now I will conclude what I have to say in the morning, and then Senators would have an ample opportunity to reply to it. If we adjourn now I shall withhold all matter bearing upon the address and the address as well and let it all appear together in the RECORD.

Mr. McCUMBER. Let me ask the Senator from Mississippi if he will not let us have a vote on the motion of the Senator from Indiana and then let us take a recess?

Mr. WILLIAMS. With the understanding that no part of the remarks of the Senator from Wisconsin shall be published in to-morrow morning's RECORD, I am perfectly willing to let the Senator from North Dakota take his course; but I do not want the remarks about the veto of the Supreme Court—which is foolish, for it never had any veto—published without a reply.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I decline to yield any further for comment at this time. I will either conclude what I have to say now, or I will yield for a motion to dispose of the pending question.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator declines to yield.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I have no objection to a disposition of the pending question.

Mr. WILLIAMS. With the understanding, which I understand is a gentleman's agreement, that these remarks about the majority rule against the written Constitution do not go into to-morrow morning's RECORD——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin has the floor and will proceed.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield to the Senator from North Dakota if he desires to make some motion with respect to the disposition of the resolution before the Senate. I have no objection to that.

Mr. McCUMBER. I merely ask unanimous consent that we may vote on it, and if there is any objection to that, then I will yield to the Senator to go on.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. And I shall exercise my privilege to withhold from the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD all of the remarks which I have made here touching this subject, although I should have been glad to have them go into the RECORD of to-day, since the matter which the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] put into the RECORD of yesterday has gone broadcast over the country, and I should like to overtake it as soon as possible.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. EDGE. I am not going to interpose any objection——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Senators, nothing will be done until there is order in the Chamber. Senators will take their seats.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, a question of parliamentary procedure.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. Does the Senator from Wisconsin yield to the Senator from New Jersey?

Mr. EDGE. A question of parliamentary procedure. As I understand, the Senator from North Dakota has asked unanimous consent to proceed to vote on the pending motion. The Chair in the ordinary course would ask whether unanimous consent is to be granted. I, in answering that suggestion from the Chair, simply wish to say that——

Mr. LODGE. That does not open the door to debate.

Mr. EDGE. I have not any intention of interposing an objection, but I want to be in a position to reply to the Senator from Wisconsin when he concludes his remarks, whether it is to-night or to-morrow.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from North Dakota will state again his request for unanimous consent.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, we do not need a request, I think, if the Senator will just withhold his remarks sufficiently for us to get a vote.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I purpose to withhold all the remarks I have made to-day relative to the speech I delivered in Cincinnati and my answer to Butler's criticism, because I want the whole matter to go out at one time in the RECORD. I regret that I can not conclude to-night without inconveniencing Senators, but I am willing to make that concession in order that we may dispose of this question and get an adjournment.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is upon the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. I yield the floor for the purpose of allowing the Senator to have a vote upon that motion.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The question is on the motion of the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON].

Mr. ASHURST. Let it be stated.

Mr. WILLIS. I call for the yeas and nays.

Mr. PITTMAN. I ask that the pending question be stated.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will state the pending question.

The READING CLERK. The Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] makes the following motion:

I move that the bill (H. R. 10874) to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes, unless sooner taken up and disposed of, be, and it is hereby, made the special order of the Senate immediately following the vote upon the third reading and passage of the tariff bill, so called, H. R. 7456.

Mr. PITTMAN. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Nevada.

Mr. PITTMAN. The Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] has suggested that this motion means nothing.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from Wisconsin has declined to yield, save for a vote upon this motion, as the Chair understands.

Mr. PITTMAN. As a matter of fact, it means that it comes after the tariff bill; does it not?

Mr. LODGE. Let us vote.

Mr. PITTMAN. I do not raise any objection.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President——

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays have been demanded. Is the demand seconded?

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask before we vote that the motion may be read once more.

Mr. LODGE. It has just been read.

Mr. LENROOT. I object. It has just been read.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Secretary will again read the pending motion.

The reading clerk read as follows:

I move that the bill (H. R. 10874) to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes, unless sooner taken up and disposed of, be, and it is hereby, made the special order of the Senate immediately following the vote upon the third reading and passage of the tariff bill, so called, H. R. 7456.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I think this is entirely too important a matter to be taken up at this hour of the afternoon, with about half the Senate absent.

Mr. LODGE. It has been debated all day long.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I know it has been pending all day long, but it has been kept off until the shank of the afternoon, when a great many Senators are absent. I do not mean, by being kept off, that somebody purposely kept it off. I mean merely that it happened that way.

Mr. President, this is a very important matter. It involves an expenditure of a great deal of money out of the United States Treasury, because if this vote is taken before the election the appropriation is going to pass, and it will mean an ultimate expense of at least three and one-half billion dollars. Everybody with common sense knows that. If it shall be taken later, it will not pass. Nearly everybody suspects that much. I am not willing to vote to bring up this measure at 12 minutes to 6 o'clock, with a scant attendance of the Senate—a very important measure—involving a great deal of quarrel even upon the other side of the Chamber and some degree of quarrel on this side. I rather imagine that if it were brought to a vote right now the motion would be defeated, but I do not think it is a square thing, I do not think it is a fair thing, to bring it up now. I think there ought to be a consent in the Senate, or a general understanding, at any rate, so that every Senator might be present to hear what was said and to take part in the vote, and I think it would be very wise upon the part of the Senator from North Dakota to move to adjourn now, and let this matter go over until to-morrow. If the Senator will make that motion, I will yield to him for that purpose.

The Senator shakes his head and says he will not. Then, Mr. President, I want to make a few remarks in partial reply to what the Senator from Wisconsin has just said. The Senator from Wisconsin is at this particular moment the most pronounced advocate of patriotism and the rights of the American soldier who fought in the late war who has thus far been disclosed upon the floor. Regardless of all past history of every description, including his St. Paul speech, the Senator from Wisconsin stands forward now as the man who represents the American soldier and the American soldier's allegations of right.

A little bit later on the Senator from Wisconsin stands for another thing equally paradoxical, if anything equally paradoxical could be imagined.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I rise to a point of order.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator will state his point of order.

Mr. McCUMBER. I think I am in honor bound to make the point of order. The Senator from Wisconsin yielded with the understanding simply that we would have a vote upon the motion of the Senator from Indiana, and it is taking advantage of that understanding, and in contradiction of it, to go on and discuss some other matter.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, as far as I know, there was no unanimous consent to that effect.

Mr. McCUMBER. He yielded for a vote or a recess.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If I had understood that the Senator was seeking unanimous consent, I would not have agreed to it.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair understands there was a unanimous-consent agreement that the speech of the Senator from Wisconsin should appear connectedly, and he declined to yield save for a vote upon this motion; but the unanimous consent for a vote upon the motion was not put to the Senate. There has been no unanimous consent entered into for a vote at this time upon the motion. That is the opinion of the Chair.

Mr. McCUMBER. That is true.

Mr. LENROOT. I make a point of order that the Senator from Mississippi has already addressed the Senate twice upon the question before the Senate.

Mr. WILLIAMS. That happens not to be the fact, Mr. President.

Mr. LENROOT. I will let the RECORD speak for itself.

Mr. WILLIAMS. If it were the fact, there might be something in it. I am now making my second speech, and not my third.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Chair does not recall a second speech by the Senator from Mississippi prior to the one he is now making.

Mr. LENROOT. It might have been all one speech, but certainly there were many interventions, and the Senator from Mississippi no later than 10 minutes ago held the floor and addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. It would be rather dangerous, however, to hold that a Senator had addressed the Senate more than once just because there were interruptions.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I want to say just one thing, in all deadly earnestness, and I want it to go to the country, independently of this situation. There are two schools of politicians, or statesmen, or legalists, or lawyers, whichever you happen to call them—and they are composed of all classes—with regard to one question. One class believes in a written constitution which is a limitation upon the power of the majority. The other class believes in the absolute, arbitrary right of the majority to govern the community in which the majority happens to reside.

It just happens that these United States, early in their history, became the protagonists of the idea of a written constitution which should limit the power of the judiciary, of the Executive, of the legislative, as agencies of the people, and that should also limit the power of the majority of the people themselves.

Our forefathers took the position that probably the worst tyranny that could exist in the world was the tyranny of the majority, and therefore they provided by a written constitution as a check upon the government of the majority, and as constituting checks and safeguards of the rights of the minority.

The Senator from Wisconsin belongs to one school upon that question; I belong to the other. I contend that there are rights inalienable—human and individual—which no government has a right, by howsoever great a majority, to interfere with when I assert them.

When I say, for example, that I believe in God the Father, God the Son, and God the Holy Ghost, or when I say I do not believe in them, I do not admit the right of 99,000,000 of the people of the United States to tell me that I shall or shall not believe in them. Therefore, under the Constitution of the United States, we believe there shall be freedom of religion. We said there should be freedom of religion. We not only said that but we said there should be freedom of a dozen other things. We outlined, in the first 10 amendments, a Bill of Rights, and we have asserted that a majority, no matter how large, has no right under our form of government to do any of the things forbidden to be done by this "Bill of Rights."

When a man tells us that the United States are a government of the majority, he argues that he is absolutely ignorant of the foundations and the history and the development of these United States. The very valuable and new thing which these United States put into the political philosophy of the world was that neither king nor emperor nor pope nor majority had a right to interfere with certain original and inalienable individual rights.

The Senator tells us that the Supreme Court is exercising "a veto," and he tells us in the next breath that it was proposed in the Constitutional Convention that they should be granted a veto, and that it was denied. His first statement was not correct; his last statement is correct. There was a proposition made in the Constitutional Convention that before a bill should become a law the Supreme Court should be consulted about it. There was a proposition made to give the Supreme Court a veto; but our ancestors, with their wonderful wisdom, superior to mine, superior to that of the Senator from Wisconsin, although we have come 100 years after and in an improved world, said, "No; we will grant to no supreme court, to no judge, a veto." But! "We will put this language into the Constitution, that 'the Constitution of the United States and all laws passed in pursuance thereof shall be the supreme law of the land.'" Then it became a part of the duty of a court to determine whether a particular litigant was affected by a law of Congress which was not in pursuance of the Constitution of the United States, and in that way, and in that way only, has the Supreme Court ever interfered with acts of Congress. No Supreme Court has ever presumed that it had a right to "veto" an act of Congress. It argues absolutely crass ignorance to say that any Supreme Court ever did that, or ever pretended to have a right to do it.

There are radicals in America who want to govern without a written constitution. There are still more superradicals who want to govern without any written law. In Russia they have originated a government without either constitution or written laws, and they are now reaping their harvest of bitter regret.

I contend, being an individual human being, that whether a citizen of the United States or a citizen of any other country, I am entitled to certain rights which nobody has a right to circumscribe or limit. Of course, the written law of my country and the written Constitution of my country must be the judge of the limitations of those rights, and not I myself, because if I myself were left the sole judge that would mean anarchy.

I do not want the utterances of the Senator from Wisconsin to go to the country without the utterances of time-honored

American policy and legality and constitutionalism to counterbalance it. He talked about a government "of the people, by the people, and for the people." That is right, but the people express their ideas of right government in a written instrument, and they do not express their government through the Senator from Wisconsin, or the Senator from Kentucky, or the Senator from Connecticut, or me. The people adopted the Constitution of the United States, speaking by States, each State acting for itself, and when they said to Congress—the Senate and the House—"No law passed by you which is not in pursuance" of this fundamental, organic law, which we, the people of the several States adopt, shall be valid for one moment. We erect a court of impartial lawyers to say whether or not in litigation between two citizens that principle has been violated. That is all.

Let every man in America who wants the unlimited rule of the majority—the worst tyranny that God has ever permitted on the surface of the earth—proceed to sympathize with the Senator from Wisconsin. Let every man who believes that there are natural rights and inalienable rights, or "unalienable" rights, as old Thomas Jefferson called them, with which no government under the sun has a right to interfere, stand with me and those who are opposed to his position.

Now, Mr. President, I would rather, quoting the language of an old Protestant martyr, "burn in hell a thousand years" than to be subject to the arbitrary commands of the pope, and I would go through the same punishment than to be subject to the arbitrary commands of a majority in my town, in my county, in my State, or in the United States. I am tired of this talk about the "rights of the majority." We had better talk about "the power of the majority" and the "rights of the minority." The majority has all the rights that anybody would contend it was entitled to, but a minority also has rights. That is not all, Mr. President. One single, solitary man, with nothing between him and God, has some rights that no Government and no majority and no consensus of opinion has a right to obstruct.

Our American forefathers recognized that principle when they recognized the freedom of religion, when they adopted the first 10 amendments to the Constitution, and when they said that the individual should have certain rights against which neither State nor National Government had a right to protest. The highest form of sovereignty in the world is the individual sovereignty of a man alone in the sight of God—acting within his own rights, within his "reserved rights." We talk about the reserved rights of the State. They are not as sacred as the reserved rights of the individual. He can not be quelled, intimidated, subjected by politicians, demagogues, majorities, temporary or permanent, as long as he and God understand each other and work together for progress and civilization.

Mr. President, I did not want this talk about a "veto" power of the Supreme Court to go to the country unanswered. The Supreme Court has never undertaken to exercise a "veto" power. The Constitutional Convention declined to give that power to it. But the Constitutional Convention said that the Constitution itself, the fundamental, organic voice of the people, expressed by them through their several States, should be "the supreme law of the land," regardless of any act of Congress or of any State legislature or anything else, and that any act of any State legislature or of this Congress or of any other Congress passed not "in pursuance of" the organic, fundamental voice of the people as expressed in the Constitution, should be null and void as between WATSON of Indiana and WILLIAMS of Mississippi or between any other litigants.

The Supreme Court has never undertaken to pronounce an abstract opinion upon constitutionality of any description. It has no right to do so. It has known from John Marshall's day down—if I may say down—to the present Supreme Court, that it had no right to do that. The Constitutional Convention refused to give them the right to say it, and they never say it, but they say, when STANLEY sues WATSON and bases his right upon an act of Congress or of a State legislature, that the court has the right to inquire whether that act of Congress or that act of the State legislature upon which he bases his alleged right is or is not in pursuance or not in pursuance, and therefore is in violation of the voice of the people as expressed in the organic fundamental law, which we have chosen to call "the Constitution."

I want to warn the American people, so far as my somewhat aged voice may go, that every disputation of that proposition is absolute anarchy. What have we seen in our times? We have seen act after act of the Congress of the United States, not to mention many acts of the legislatures of the several States, that were wrong in every particular, that were tyrannical, and some of which were set aside by the Supreme Court. I heard not long ago a southern Senator talking about the "tyrannical power of the Supreme Court," its "veto power" over legislation, disclosing his ignorance as the Senator from Wisconsin a moment ago disclosed his ignorance. I said to him, "Do you remember that the Congress of the United States passed a civil rights bill, which gave the right to every nigger in the whole country to go to any hotel he chose to go to, to enter any restaurant that he chose to enter, and to do a thousand other things, upon the ground that he was a two-footed, biped human animal and equal with you and me, notwithstanding the difference in color, because we were also nothing but 'two-footed bipeds'? Do you remember that attempted law was set aside by the Supreme Court of the United States as being unconstitutional? And are you aware of the fact that Congress has never repealed that act yet, and that you could not get a Republican Congress to repeal it to-day? Yet you, a southerner, talk to me about the tyranny of the Supreme Court. You would have had the other race with full asserted social rights of equality in every hotel, every sleeping car, every theater, every circus, and everything else, and here you stand, an ultra southerner, talking to me about the tyranny of the Supreme Court. Do you know that if the civil rights bill had had full sway, the South would have been in war—guerilla warfare and not general warfare—with niggers and white people killing one another from behind ambush, from that time down to now?"

Mr. President, the unwritten constitution of England is the common law of England, but it, too, is a written constitution in a certain way, because it has all been reduced to decisions and all published, approved by statutes or not disapproved. But we for the first time in the history of the world said, not only to our citizens, but to the entire world, that the power of the majority shall be curbed in at least one country. In religion, in politics, in industry and anywhere else, we deny the right of the majority to rule arbitrarily regardless of minority or individual rights. As long as we stick to that principle we are the forerunners of the civilization of the world, and the moment we desert it we sink to the level of Russia, or to the level of France during the French Revolution, or to the level of any country that thinks that 10,000 asses may overpower the judgment and will, with regard to individual affairs, of 100 wise and brave men.

Outside of God himself there is nothing so sacred in this world as the well-proved conscience of the individual man indorsed by written agreement amongst his fellow citizens to protect him in so far as any individual question goes. That does not mean that he can run a country. That does not mean that he can go out and do whatever he pleases. But it does mean that the difference between anarchy and law is the difference between the protection of the rights of the minority by fundamental and organic law and the failure to protect those rights and leaving a majority to do whatever in the world it pleases.

Now, what the Senator from Wisconsin has said is very good Russian doctrine; it is very good French sans-culotte doctrine in a certain way; it is very good South American doctrine, except that there the fellow with the most guns makes the majority quit the game at just about the right time. But it is not good United States doctrine.

Before I sat down I wanted to deny, first, that the Supreme Court ever had exercised any "veto" power upon Congress; and, secondly, that any blind assertion of the right of the majority to rule, regardless of fundamental principles and restrictions and limitations, spells anarchy, ruin, and chaos.

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The yeas and nays having been ordered, the Secretary will call the roll on agreeing to the motion of the Senator from Indiana.

The reading clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. EDGE (when his name was called). I have a pair with the senior Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. OWEN]. I understand that if present he would vote as I am about to vote. I therefore feel at liberty to vote, and vote "nay."

Mr. KELLOGG (when his name was called). I am paired with the senior Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS], but I am informed that if present he would vote as I am about to vote. I therefore feel at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. LODGE (when his name was called). I have a pair with the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD]. If permitted to vote, I should vote "yea." On this question the Senator from Alabama stands paired with the Senator from North Carolina [Mr. SIMMONS] and myself. If present, the Senator from Alabama would vote "nay."

Mr. McKELLAR (when his name was called). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Indiana [Mr. NEW]. I understand that upon this question he would vote as I am about to vote. I therefore feel at liberty to vote, and vote "yea."

Mr. TRAMMELL (when his name was called). I transfer my pair with the senior Senator from Rhode Island [Mr. COLT] to the senior Senator from Missouri [Mr. REED] and vote "yea."

The roll call was concluded.

Mr. WILLIAMS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Alabama [Mr. UNDERWOOD] had to take a train to meet an appointment to which he was indissolubly tied. If he were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. SUTHERLAND. I transfer my general pair with the senior Senator from Arkansas [Mr. ROBINSON] to the junior Senator from Vermont [Mr. PAGE] and vote "yea."

Mr. CAMERON (after having voted in the affirmative). I have a general pair with the junior Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON]. I understand that if present he would vote as I have voted. Therefore I will let my vote stand.

Mr. GERRY. I desire to announce that the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON] is paired with the Senator from West Virginia [Mr. ELKINS]. If present the Senator from Mississippi would vote "yea."

The Senator from Georgia [Mr. HARRIS] is paired with the Senator from New York [Mr. CALDER], and if present the Senator from Georgia would also vote "yea."

Mr. POMERENE. The junior Senator from Virginia [Mr. GLASS] is paired with the senior Senator from Vermont [Mr. DILLINGHAM]. If the junior Senator from Virginia were present he would vote "nay."

Mr. JONES of New Mexico (after having voted in the affirmative). I transfer my pair with the Senator from Maine [Mr. FERNALD] to the Senator from Louisiana [Mr. RANSDELL] and permit my vote to stand.

Mr. TRAMMELL. I desire to announce the unavoidable absence of my colleague [Mr. FLETCHER] on account of illness. If present he would vote "yea."

Mr. McNARY. My colleague [Mr. STANFIELD] is absent from the city. If present he would vote "yea."

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce the following pairs:

The Senator from Maine [Mr. HALE] with the Senator from Tennessee [Mr. SHIELDS]; and

The Senator from Delaware [Mr. BALL] with the Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER].

The roll call resulted—yeas 52, nays 8, as follows:

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. On this question the yeas are 52 and the nays 8. More than two-thirds of the Senators present and voting, constituting a quorum, having voted in the affirmative, the motion of the Senator from Indiana as modified is agreed to.

RECESS.

Mr. McCUMBER. I move that the Senate take a recess until to-morrow at 11 o'clock.

The motion was agreed to; and (at 6 o'clock and 20 minutes p. m.) the Senate took a recess until to-morrow, Wednesday, June 21, 1922, at 11 o'clock a. m.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

TUESDAY, June 20, 1922.

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. James Shera Montgomery, D. D., offered the following prayer:

Holy Spirit, heavenly Guide, we thank Thee for life and all that it yields of joy and hope. Any voice that leads toward God, help us to follow it; any emotion of the heart that directs toward duty, may we obey it. Where the best thoughts are; where the best influences work, let us dwell there. Bless every loyal American heart and keep open their minds, which is the wisest attitude for all. O scatter error that is poisonous and establish the truth that saves. Correct false estimates of life and make clear the outlook and the way. In every situation help all men to discharge the obligations of their citizenship with integrity, humanity, and composure. Through Christ. Amen.

The Journal of the proceedings of yesterday was read and approved.

NATURALIZATION AND CITIZENSHIP OF MARRIED WOMEN.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, I submit a privileged report from the Committee on Rules.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Kansas submits a privileged report from the Committee on Rules, which the Clerk will report.

The Clerk read as follows:

House Resolution 370 (Rept. No. 1118).

Resolved, That immediately on the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of H. R. 12022, a bill relative to the naturalization and citizenship of married women. General debate on said bill shall be limited to two hours, one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Colorado, Mr. VAILE, and one-half by the gentleman from California, Mr. RAKER. At the conclusion of the debate the bill shall be read for amendment, after which it shall be reported to the House and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Mr. Speaker, may I ask the gentleman from North Carolina or the gentleman from Tennessee if he desires time on the rule?

Mr. GARRETT of Tennessee. I have no request for time.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Then, Mr. Speaker, I shall content myself with a statement as to the general purposes of the bill and the rule for its consideration.

Mr. LONDON. Will the gentleman yield me five minutes?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Not now. The law as it now stands is that when a woman marries an alien she takes the citizenship of her husband. No matter what her property interest, her citizenship goes with her alien husband.

The difficulty growing out of this marital relation with respect to citizenship and property was not seriously felt until during the war and immediately following it. A great many cases of serious complication grew out of the rights of women who married alien husbands. Vast property rights have been affected and native-born American women are to-day under the trying circumstances of having their property in the hands of the Alien Property Custodian all because some 20, 30, or perhaps 40 years ago they married a German subject who had not perfected his American citizenship. This bill seeks to correct that very grave situation with respect to our citizenship, and provides the means by which women may be restored to their American citizenship, and other provisions of the bill provide that a woman may retain her American citizenship notwithstanding her marital relations with the subject of another country. It seems to me that this bill accomplishes the purpose that was had in mind when the two national conventions met two years ago, because in both conventions the serious situation in which many of our people born in our own country found themselves caused the adoption of resolutions in both the Republican and Democratic conventions declaring that it was the purpose of each of the great parties to correct this very great wrong that was done to many people born in the United States.

Mr. WALSH. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. WALSH. Are any of the women's organizations supporting this proposed legislation that the gentleman knows?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I should assume they all would. I am not sure, but I should think that the women's organizations would follow the example of the Republican and Democratic Parties in support of a great measure of this kind.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I will.

Mr. RAMSEYER. The gentleman has called special attention to the distress during the late war in reference to property rights affected. Assume this law had been in existence before the late war. An American woman married a German or an American man married a German woman. They were here at the time. One, of course, is an American citizen and the other German. When the proclamations were issued ordering the Germans out of the District of Columbia, what would have been the status, then, separating husband and wife, interning one and leaving the other at large?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Well, that is one of the reasons, I assume, that Sherman properly designated what war is. That is one of the conditions that inevitably goes with war.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Is it greater hell to be discommoded in reference to property rights than it is to have a husband and wife separated under the circumstances?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Both conditions arise in case of war.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Which is the greater evil?

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. I am not an expert on that subject. If a man had to give up his wife's property or his wife, I assume he would give up the property.

Mr. RAMSEYER. If this law had been in effect and a man's wife had been a German subject, he would have had no choice between his wife and her jewelry. The gentleman would have had to give up his wife.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It depends upon whether American or German.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Assuming the wife was a German.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The gentleman assumes also that an opportunity exists for the making of an election. The wife might have something to say whether she elects to be a German or decides to be an American.

Mr. RAMSEYER. We are assuming there was no such election before the war.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. That is a matter I do not care to go into, a matter that will be discussed when the bill comes up on its merits, and the gentleman from Iowa will have ample opportunity to discuss it, I assume, when the bill is considered. The bill was of such importance that the Committee on Rules thought it proper at this time that provision should be made for its consideration, and this rule provides for that.

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on agreeing to the resolution.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" seemed to have it.

Mr. VOIGT. Division, Mr. Speaker.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 68, noes 3.

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of no quorum on the vote just had.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of no quorum. Evidently no quorum is present.

The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in absentees; those in favor of the adoption of the rule will, when their names are called, answer "yea," those opposed will answer "nay," and the Clerk will call the roll.

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 265, nays 3, answered "present" 1, not voting 161, as follows:

Mr. Webster with Mr. Goldsborough.
Mr. Burton with Mr. Taylor of Arkansas.
Mr. Connell with Mr. Rainey of Alabama.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I voted "yea." I have a general pair with the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER], and I wish to withdraw that vote and answer "present."

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

THIRD DEFICIENCY BILL.

Mr. MADDEN, from the Committee on Appropriations, presented the bill (H. R. 12090; Rept. No. 1119) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and prior fiscal years, supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union and ordered printed.

Mr. BYRNES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I reserve all points of order.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12022, relative to the naturalization and citizenship of married women; and, pending that——

The SPEAKER. If the gentleman will wait a moment, the Chair will submit a privileged report from the Committee on Enrolled Bills.

Mr. VAILE. Very well.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE.

A message from the Senate by Mr. Crockett, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed with amendments the bill (H. R. 11228) making appropriations for the Navy Department and the naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes, had insisted upon its amendments, had asked a conference with the House, and had appointed Mr. POINDEXTER, Mr. HALE, Mr. NEWBERRY, Mr. SWANSON, and Mr. GLASS as the conferees on the part of the Senate.

SENATE ENROLLED BILLS SIGNED.

The SPEAKER announced his signature to enrolled bills of the following titles:

S. 156. An act for the relief of the heirs of Julio Carrazco, deceased;

S. 154. An act for the relief of Arthur E. Rump;

S. 777. An act for the relief of John M. Green;

S. 1087. An act for the relief of H. L. McFarlin;

S. 1730. An act for the relief of Philip S. Everest;

S. 1784. An act for the relief of John B. Elliott;

S. 1880. An act providing for the appointment of Warrant Officer Herbert Warren Hardman as captain in the Quartermaster Corps, United States Army; and

S. 3291. An act for the relief of Henry Cordes.

NATURALIZATION AND CITIZENSHIP OF MARRIED WOMEN.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. VAILE] moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12022; and, pending that——

Mr. VAILE. Pending that, I would like to get an idea, if possible, as to what amount of time is desired by Members opposing this bill. I will state, Mr. Speaker and Members of the House, that both the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] and myself are in favor of the bill. We desire to accommodate, as far as we can, those who wish to oppose the bill, and we would like to know what amount of time they will require.

The SPEAKER. Under the rule the time is limited to two hours—one-half to be controlled by the gentleman from Colorado and one-half by the gentleman from California.

Mr. VAILE. Very well. I renew my motion, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado moves that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12022. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" appeared to have it.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, I wish to object to the vote on the ground that there is not a quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and eighty-nine gentlemen are present—not a quorum.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Colorado moves a call of the House. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. As many as favor the motion that the House resolve itself into Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union will, when their names are called, answer "aye"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 253, nays 3, answered "present" 1, not voting 173, as follows:

So the motion was agreed to.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Mr. Cramton with Mr. Carter.

Mr. Dallinger with Mr. Bankhead.

Mr. Strong of Pennsylvania with Mr. Tucker.

Mr. Hardy of Colorado with Mr. Kindred.

Mr. Kline of New York with Mr. Mead.

Mr. Robsion with Mr. Wright.

Mr. Taylor of Tennessee with Mr. McSwain.

Mr. Winslow with Mr. Bland of Virginia.

Mr. Clarke of New York with Mr. Goldsborough.

Mr. Bowers with Mr. Taylor of Colorado.

Mr. CRAMTON. Mr. Speaker, on this vote I wish to answer "Present." I have a general pair with the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. CARTER]. I would vote "aye" if he were present.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. A quorum is present. The Doorkeeper will open the doors.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H. R. 12022) relative to the naturalization and citizenship of married women, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to dispense with the first reading of the bill. Is there objection?

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin objects. The Clerk will read the bill.

The Clerk read the bill.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I should like to be notified when I have consumed five minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. In the division of the time the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. VAILE] controls one hour and the gentleman from California [Mr. RAKER] one hour.

Mr. VAILE. Yes.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair understands that both the gentleman from Colorado and the gentleman from California are in favor of the bill.

Mr. VAILE. That is correct.

The CHAIRMAN. What arrangements have been made for those who are opposed to the bill?

Mr. VAILE. No requests have been made of me for time in opposition.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado has control of one hour.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, two recent events have demonstrated quite clearly the inadequacy and injustice of our present laws with relation to the citizenship of women. These events have brought the country to the very definite conviction that woman's citizenship is not something that is unimportant or casual, not something merely incidental to the marriage status, but that woman's citizenship is as important, as individual, and should be endowed with the same dignity and responsibility as man's citizenship.

One of these events was the World War and its effect upon the rights and obligations of American women who had married aliens, and who consequently under existing law had lost the citizenship which was theirs by birth and acquired the citizenship and allegiance of their husbands. This resulted in many cases of injustice to the United States and in even more cases of injustice to these women.

In the first class of cases were women who, married to alien enemies, had lost their sympathy with and their loyalty to the United States and acquired the hostile attitude of their husbands. These women, being aliens by reason of their marriage, were to a large extent beyond the control of our laws, could not be punished for treason or charged with the duties or responsibilities of American citizenship. We have long recognized the undesirability of permitting American citizens to escape the responsibilities of that status in time of national crisis by providing that no American citizen shall be allowed to expatriate himself (or herself) in time of war. There has never been any doubt as to the sound policy of a country continuing its jurisdiction in such a period over those who originally owed it their allegiance. But these women had expatriated themselves by their marriage, and even if the marriage occurred after the commencement of war the same result would obtain under our existing laws.

Thus it will be seen that our present laws involve an inconsistency on a matter which is of the very utmost importance, namely, the allegiance of the citizen in time of war, one statute declaring that at such a time no citizen shall expatriate himself (or herself) and another automatically creating expatriation as an incident of marriage. It is part of the purpose of the pending legislation to remove this inconsistency.

But be it said to the everlasting credit of American womanhood that cases of the sort which I have mentioned, cases that is of the woman's transfer of her moral allegiance, while individually important, were not very numerous. Far more numerous were the second class of cases, namely, those of the American-born woman who having never lost one particle of her own loyalty to our flag and our country, often, indeed, inspired by the loftiest patriotic fervor, found herself legally an alien enemy because her husband was a subject of the German Kaiser. These women, and there were thousands of them, where there were tens of the class previously mentioned, would have cut off their right hands sooner than aid the enemies of the United States in a war against the country of their birth. Yet their property was sequestered, and they were subject to the legal duress and restrictions and the social suspicion and ostracism which attached to the status of alien enemies.

We have all individually known of such cases. A girl who went to school with me at home and whose noble old father had lost an arm in the Civil War married while she was studying music in Germany a young German officer. The marriage was not a happy one, and she returned after a very few years to the United States and lived with her parents. She had been living with them in the United States for at least 10 years before the war broke out, but being of a religious faith which frowns upon divorce she never obtained a legal separation. This splendid young woman took an active part in Red Cross and other military relief work, and was broken-hearted when she was required to stop on the ground that she was an "alien enemy." Of course, aside from her purely technical legal status she was no more an enemy of the United States than any one of us.

In the preceding Congress we extended individual relief in several similar cases, one of which was perhaps an extreme one, but which nevertheless illustrates the natural result of such a situation.

Mrs. De Haven Alten was the daughter of an admiral in the American Navy, and all of her male ancestors from Revolutionary times had served in the armies of the United States. She was wealthy in property acquired entirely by her family residing in the United States. In the World War she had one brother in the American Army and one brother who had enlisted in the French Army before America entered the war. This woman while she was a mere schoolgirl in Switzerland married a little German baron, who proved to be entirely worthless. He frittered away all of her property that he could get his hands on. He gave her abundant cause for divorce in other ways, and prior to the war she took up a separate abode in Switzerland and instituted divorce proceedings against her husband. Because he was an officer in the German Army, these proceedings were stayed during the entire period of the war, under German law. During the war she went to Hungary and there busied herself in relief work for the wounded prisoners of the allied armies.

Our Alien Property Custodian, as was his duty, seized and held the remainder of her property, consisting of a trust fund in the United States. Reduced from wealth and luxury to absolute poverty, this woman, who had never ceased to be an American at heart, came here penniless to appeal to the chivalry of the American Congress to restore her citizenship, which, since she was not divorced, she could not get except by special act. The Alien Property Custodian vigorously supported her plea, and the Congress, quite properly, granted it.

The class of cases which I am now discussing—American women who, though loyal at heart, became alien enemies by their marriage to Germans—of course, includes many thousands of instances where the husband was a resident here, and many cases where the husband, desirous of becoming an American citizen, had taken out his first papers before the war broke out, leaving both him and his wife in the legal status of alien enemies.

Let me state right here that I believe in the vast majority of cases these husbands were loyal to the land of their adoption, even though the adoption was not yet complete. There could not have been a very great difference between them and the many thousands of fully naturalized citizens who served in our armies. A few weeks ago I heard Mr. David Jayne Hill, at a luncheon of the English-speaking Union, make the statement that more than 40 per cent of our soldiers who fell in the battles of the Argonne Forest bore German names. I never had an opportunity to check these figures, but undoubtedly the percentage was very large. I repeatedly noticed during the war that there would be at least three or four German names among the first dozen in our daily casualty lists, and I want to say here and now that on the whole the very great majority of our citizens of German blood displayed a magnificent loyalty and patriotism under very trying circumstances. The surprising thing is not that there were a few malodorous exceptions but that they were so few. For that matter, if you examine the roster of the present House of Representatives, you will find at least 35 distinctively German names.

Now, Congress recognized the unfairness of retaining the property of American-born women whose status was technically that of alien enemies by reason of their marriage by providing for its release—act of February 27, 1921 (41 Stat. 1147). The necessity of such corrections will be avoided in future by the passage of this bill.

The second event which has demonstrated the need for a change in our present laws was the nation-wide adoption of woman suffrage, putting at once into the exercise of the elective franchise many thousands of women who were citizens merely because of the citizenship of their husbands. Since women vote universally now, the woman's citizenship should obviously be determined by her own qualifications and not by the qualifications of some one else. If she is qualified she should be able to become a citizen; if she is not qualified she should not become a citizen and should not have the right to vote. In other words, the exercise of elective franchise should depend upon the qualifications of the voter and not upon the fortuitous circumstance of whether the voter is married or single.

Woman's citizenship should stand on its own merits. She asks no special privilege. She is entitled to none. Her citizenship should be tested as is the man's citizenship. It should be preserved as her most priceless possession, just as the man's citizenship is so preserved. She is now in name, as well as in fact, an equal partner in the business of conducting the American Government. She should have the privileges of an equal partner, and as a condition of those privileges she should bear, and be qualified to bear, the duties and responsibility of that partnership.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used five minutes.

Mr. VAILE. I will yield to myself five minutes more.

A great many American women were married to aliens who had just missed becoming citizens or who had not yet become citizens who at heart were loyal to the United States, but who nevertheless technically occupied the position of alien enemies. Some were married to Germans who lived abroad. We recognized the great hardship which arose in such cases, recognized it in several specific instances in the last Congress.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAILE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. What would be the status of an American woman who married an alien and moved to Germany or some European country?

Mr. VAILE. Under the present law the woman takes the status of her husband. Under the pending bill she does not lose her American citizenship unless she expressly renounces it or lives for two years in the country of her husband's allegiance or for five years in any other foreign country.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Then she would change her citizenship?

Mr. VAILE. In that case the same presumption applies to her as to naturalized citizens of the United States, who are presumed to have lost their citizenship under those circumstances.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. How is that presumption rebutted?

Mr. VAILE. The statute provides a way, namely, by registering with the American consular officer, and this presumption will be subject to rebuttal in the same way.

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAILE. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. Under existing law, when an American woman marries a foreigner she loses her American citizenship and becomes of his nationality.

Mr. VAILE. That is correct.

Mr. DENISON. If a foreign woman marries an American——

Mr. VAILE. I am about to discuss that phase of the matter.

Mr. DENISON. Does she become an American?

Mr. VAILE. Under existing law, where a foreign woman marries an American, she becomes instantly an American citizen, and that emphasizes the results of the second event to which I have referred. The second event was the universal application in this country of woman suffrage. That was the admission instantly to the exercise of the full rights of citizenship of many hundred thousands of women, who may or may not have been qualified, but whose right to vote was dependent not upon their qualification but upon the fact that they were married to American citizens. The whole point of our bill, on that end of it, is that the citizenship of a woman should stand upon its own merits, as does citizenship of a man; that woman is now an equal partner with man in the business of running the Government; that while she is entitled to no special privileges, while she asks for none, she should be permitted to share equally in that partnership and should be required to bear its burdens and responsibilities.

Mr. DENISON. This is the question that I have in my mind: I am wondering whether this bill is going to get us into any complication. If an American woman marries a foreigner she remains an American citizen, but her husband is an alien.

Mr. VAILE. That is correct.

Mr. DENISON. Under whose flag do the children fly?

Mr. VAILE. They would not be changed in one particle from the situation that exists to-day. If a child is born here, no matter whether of American or alien parents, that child is an American citizen under our Constitution. Under existing law the child who is born abroad takes the nationality of its father, and that is not changed by the pending bill.

Mr. DENISON. Then an American woman who marries an alien in Europe still remains an American citizen?

Mr. VAILE. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. And yet her children are foreigners?

Mr. VAILE. Very true; but under existing law, if she marries an alien, not only her children but she herself would be a foreigner, and we prefer that she should retain her citizenship if she wants to, if she does not expressly renounce it.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAILE. Yes.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Where the husband and wife are of different nationalities do we not have hyphenated or dual citizenship on the part of the children?

Mr. VAILE. Not on the part of the children.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Why not?

Mr. VAILE. If they are born here, they are American citizens; and if born abroad, they are of the nationality of their father.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Not necessarily. Supposing an American woman marries an Englishman in this country and temporarily visits his folks abroad, when a child is born there that child under British law would be a British subject.

Mr. VAILE. Correct.

Mr. LEHLBACH. Born of a British father, but being the son of an American citizen, that mother temporarily sojourning abroad, the child would be an American citizen.

Mr. VAILE. I think the gentleman is in error. It takes the citizenship of the father.

Mr. ROSE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAILE. Yes.

Mr. ROSE. Either I failed to understand the reply made to the gentleman from Illinois or else the gentleman did not answer it fully. The question was asked, supposing a foreign woman marries an American in this country, what her rights are under this law. Is she an American citizen or not?

Mr. VAILE. Not at all, until she qualifies for naturalization and becomes naturalized according to the process provided in this bill.

Mr. ROSE. In other words, she would have to make application for citizenship the same as any other foreigner?

Mr. VAILE. Except that but one year's residence is required.

Mr. ROSE. She has to make application.

Mr. VAILE. She has to show that she is loyal to our institutions and understands the English language.

Mr. ROSE. The point I am going to bring out is that marriage of a foreign woman to an American citizen does not of itself make her an American citizen.

Mr. VAILE. That is correct.

Mr. McKENZIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAILE. Yes.

Mr. McKENZIE. Is this legislation demanded, or does it grow out of some real hardship or wrongs that have been suffered, or is it more or less theoretical?

Mr. VAILE. It is very real. Let me call the gentleman's attention to the fact that in the last Congress we passed a remedial act for the benefit of one woman under these circumstances. It is true that there were two or three, but this was the one particular case of an American-born woman, her father an admiral in the Navy, coming of revolutionary stock, and at the outbreak of the World War she had one brother in the American Army, and before we got into the war she had one brother in the French Army. Let me repeat this instance for the gentleman's consideration, since it is typical of the very thing we want to avoid. While in Switzerland years ago this woman married a worthless German baron, who wasted her property.

Before the war she started divorce proceedings, but divorce proceedings were stayed on account of the fact that he was a German officer. She was penniless. She had always been an American at heart, and was devoting herself to relief work among our soldiers. Of course the Alien Property Custodian took hold of her property, and she came here penniless to the American Congress and asked that her citizenship be restored. That was done, and I think properly so.

Both political parties have indorsed specifically the principle of this bill. There are many associations, some of which may seem to be more or less theoretical, but which the gentleman will find are quite practical, which are also asking for the passage of this measure.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAILE. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Let us take the question propounded by the gentleman from New Jersey [Mr. LEHLBACH]. A Britisher marries an American woman. They are sojourning in Great Britain when a child is born. It will be a British subject, because it will take the nationality of its father.

Mr. VAILE. Yes.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Suppose two children were born over there under those circumstances. Both would be Britishers. They come back here and two children are born here. Then in the same family you would have two British children and two American children.

Mr. VAILE. That happens now in many cases. It happens in this way, where children are born here with both parents aliens. They are both American citizens. But if the other brother is born in England, that brother is an English subject.

Mr. RAMSEYER. We have cases where a married couple comes here with children and more children are born in this country, but here you add to the difficulties, creating conditions where you have a different citizenship for the husband and the wife and the children.

Mr. VAILE. We could not take care of all the cases of dual citizenship, but I think we have done it as far as we can.

Mr. RAMSEYER. Complications will arise in case of war under this bill. For instance, if this law had been in effect during the World War, you might have had the mother a German citizen, the children all American citizens because born here, and the father an American. Carrying out one of the proclamations of the President during the war you might have interned the mother and separated her from her children and husband.

Mr. VAILE. The gentleman must remember that under the provisions of the bill the mother has the opportunity of becoming an American citizen.

Mr. RAMSEYER. It is not the mother only that you are punishing, but you are punishing the children. You are disrupting the ties of the family.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I will yield to the gentleman if he wants to debate that phase of the case.

Mr. RAMSEYER. I am simply seeking information at this time.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman——

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California is recognized for one hour.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I ask to be notified when I have consumed 15 minutes. Gentlemen of the committee, your Committee on Immigration and Naturalization have for the last eight years, if not longer, at various times, had this subject before it for its consideration. We have had distinguished Members of this House and others not Members in various hearings before the committee before the nineteenth amendment to the United States Constitution became operative and since. So that, so far as the questions are involved, the committee have tried to give their best attention and consideration to the matter and to bring it before the House in as clear and as concise a manner as it was possible, in order to present the concrete question to the House and to the Congress.

There can be no question now so far as opposition to this legislation is concerned, for both parties at their last convention indorsed it. The Republican Party indorsed this principle unanimously and the legislation that is sought to be enacted into law by this bill. The platform declaration on this question by the Republicans, adopted in their platform at their convention of 1920 at Chicago, Ill., June 8–12, reads as follows:

NATURALIZATION.

There is urgent need of improvement in our naturalization law. No alien should become a citizen until he has become genuinely American, and adequate tests for determining the alien's fitness for American citizenship should be provided for by law.

We advocate in addition the independent naturalization of married women. An American woman, resident in the United States, should not lose her citizenship by marriage to an alien.

And on woman suffrage the platform declaration is as follows:

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

We welcome women into full participation in affairs of government and the activities of the Republican Party. We earnestly hope that Republican legislatures in States which have not yet acted on the suffrage amendment will ratify the amendment, to the end that all of the women of the Nation of voting age may participate in the election of 1920, which is so important to the welfare of our country.

The Democratic platform, adopted at the Democratic convention at San Francisco, Calif., June 28–July 6, in 1920, on the naturalization and woman suffrage reads as follows:

WOMAN SUFFRAGE.

We indorse the proposed nineteenth amendment of the Constitution of the United States granting equal suffrage to women. We congratulate the legislatures of the 35 States which have already ratified said amendment, and we urge the Democratic governors and legislatures of Tennessee, North Carolina, and Florida and such States as have not yet ratified the Federal suffrage amendment to unite in an effort to complete the process of ratification and secure the thirty-sixth State in time for all the women of the United States to participate in the fall election. We commend the effective advocacy of the measure by President Wilson.

WELFARE OF WOMEN AND CHILDREN.

We urge cooperation with the States for the protection of child life through infancy and maternity care; in the prohibition of child labor and by adequate appropriations for the Children's Bureau and the Woman's Bureau in the Department of Labor.

WOMEN IN INDUSTRY.

We advocate full representation of women on all commissions dealing with women's work or women's interests and a reclassification of the Federal civil service free from discrimination on the ground of sex; a continuance of appropriations for education in sex hygiene; Federal legislation which shall insure that American women resident in the United States, but married to aliens, shall retain their American citizenship, and that the same process of naturalization shall be required for women as for men.

They unanimously indorsed the principles of this bill, so that every Member of the House, Democrat and Republican, if the legislation carries out those two platform declarations, can have no squeamish conscience relative to the propriety or necessity or advisability of this legislation. It is only a question whether the committee has presented to you the legislation carrying out those principles.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I would like to complete my statement first, and then I will yield. Since that time, and in addition to the two platform declarations of these two great parties, practically every woman's organization in the United States has indorsed in substance and effect the proposed legislation. Let me read:

INDEPENDENT CITIZENSHIP SUBCOMMITTEE,
July 19, 1922.

DEAR MR. REPRESENTATIVE: We earnestly ask your consideration of the Cable bill (H. R. 12022), which we expect will come before the House for a vote this week, and we trust that you will give it your active support.

This is a bill relative to the naturalization and citizenship of married women, and provides that a woman's citizenship shall not be depended upon her marital status.

The organizations that we represent have all indorsed the principles found in this measure.

Very truly yours,
AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF UNIVERSITY WOMEN,
MRS. RAYMOND MORGAN.
NATIONAL FEDERATION OF BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL WOMEN,
MARY STEUART.
COUNCIL OF JEWISH WOMEN,
MRS. SIMON OPPENHEIMER.
GENERAL FEDERATION OF WOMEN'S CLUBS,
LIDA M. HAFFORD.
NATIONAL LEAGUE OF WOMEN VOTERS,
MAUD WOOD PARK.
NATIONAL WOMEN'S TRADE UNION LEAGUE,
ETHEL M. SMITH.
WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION,
SENNA LOWE YOST.

Mr. VOIGT. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Let me first complete my statement and then I will yield. Under the present law an American woman, citizen of the United States, who marries an alien loses her citizenship and becomes of the nationality and of the citizenship of that of her husband. This question was fully discussed and settled in the case of MacKenzie against Hare, volume 239, pages 299 to 231, of the Supreme Court of the United States. The court discusses the question of expatriation as it existed under the common law, and discusses the revision originally adopted by this country, and then says it was brought about beyond all question by the Revolutionary War. Then the acts of Congress in relation to naturalization, the specific statute that a woman who marries an alien takes the nationality of her husband.

Further, under the present law no married woman, an alien, can be naturalized or file her petition for naturalization, and therefore if the husband fails to naturalize she must remain an alien under the law as it now stands. Third, with five minutes' residence in the United States an alien woman who marries a citizen of the United States, or who marries one who has been naturalized as a citizen of the United States, upon her arrival becomes a full-fledged citizen, with all the rights and privileges of an American citizen who has been compelled to live here 21 years or an American boy or an alien who has complied with the naturalization laws. So that under the present law, by virtue of allowing a woman to have the same civil rights as a man, it becomes important whether or not an alien woman who marries an American citizen should instanter become an American citizen, with all the rights and privileges of an American citizen. That is charged by this law.

Now, under the present law an alien married woman can not be naturalized as such independent of her husband. This bill in paragraph 1 allows her to become naturalized without the naturalization of her husband. Under the present law when an alien woman marries a citizen she automatically becomes a citizen. This bill requires her to be naturalized under the provision in section 2 which requires a year's residence and for taking the oath of allegiance and otherwise complying with the naturalization laws. Third, the present law, when an alien man is naturalized the wife becomes automatically a citizen. This bill requires her to be naturalized, and a short process is provided in section 2. Hereafter all women now married at the present time, married to aliens—and there may be a million of them residing in the United States—the husband becomes naturalized, that woman under this law will not become naturalized, but she must come within a year and file her application, become naturalized, take the oath of allegiance, which she ought to take to become a full-fledged citizen, with all the rights and privileges of an American citizen.

Fourth. Under the present law an American woman citizen who marries an alien automatically takes the citizenship of her husband and loses her American citizenship. This bill permits her to retain such American citizenship unless she renounces that citizenship, or unless she goes abroad and remains there two years in the country of the nativity of her husband; and the presumption is that she then loses her residence, or that if she resides for five years generally in a foreign country she loses her citizenship. The presumption is the same as the law now applies to a naturalized citizen who goes abroad and lives two years and loses citizenship if he remains in the country of his nativity for two years, or five years elsewhere.

Fifth. The bill provides that an American woman citizen who heretofore by her marriage to an alien loses her American citizenship may regain the same as provided by section 2 of the bill. If the marital relation is dissolved by death or divorce she can come back to this country and living here become an American citizen; or if she declares before the proper officer abroad she will retain her citizenship, and if under present conditions she wants to retain the citizenship she has to take the oath of allegiance. Her citizenship amounts to something. While we have made some small distinctions we are trying to place the American woman upon the same base as the American man and require her to take the oath of allegiance so as to show it is worth something.

Sixth. An alien woman not eligible to American citizenship can not be naturalized. That is as it ought to be.

Seventh. An American woman citizen who marries an alien not eligible to citizenship loses her American citizenship. Of course, after the death or the dissolution of the marriage she can comply with the provisions of the act and become an American citizen and resume her status.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. In just a moment.

Eighth. And no woman whose husband is not eligible to citizenship shall be naturalized during the continuance of the marital status. In other words, if a woman marries a man who is ineligible to citizenship of the United States, while the first provision of the bill says that this married woman may be naturalized, she by virtue of her voluntary act—as was held in the case to which I referred—if she expatriates herself voluntarily and knowingly, she has no complaint; she can not be naturalized because of the reasons suggested. I yield for a short question.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I do not like the qualification, but I would like to ask the gentleman—on page 2, line 15, this bill says:

If at the termination of the marital status she is a citizen of the United States, she shall retain her citizenship regardless of her residence.

Now, what does that mean? It simply says if she is a citizen after the marriage has terminated she shall continue to be a citizen. Of course she would, if she is a citizen. How does she become a citizen if——

Mr. RAKER. Now I will discuss that and yield further. This bill as presented to the House does not make any distinct——

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Will the gentleman answer later on the floor or in his extension?

Mr. RAKER. On the floor. I like to answer on the floor. But this bill does not make any distinction in regard to where the American woman lived originally. The committee thought an American woman residing abroad, who married an alien, should not retain her citizenship, and it was impressed on me very strongly, but the Department of State says from their experience in a good many years the question of residence, whether permanent or not, is somewhat complicated, and creates a good deal of difficulty, so we have said that the American woman anywhere marrying an alien retains her citizenship, provided now that if she resides abroad two years in the country of her husband's allegiance the presumption of law is that she thereby renounces her American citizenship and is expatriated. Second, that if she resides anywhere else than in the country of her husband's nativity or the country to which he owes allegiance for five years, she would by that act lose her citizenship.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has used 15 minutes.

Mr. RAKER. I will take two minutes more. So that the bill as presented with the amendments which will be offered by the chairman for the purpose of clarification and one to cover the question of a woman who marries a man ineligible to become a citizen that during that time she can not herself apply for citizenship, the committee are unanimous, both Democrats and Republicans, in presenting this bill to the House, and hope and believe that it should receive a unanimous vote. We have extended suffrage to women, and all the dire troubles and complications which were predicted, the question of the division of the family and the want of their attendance upon the polls and their interest in Government affairs, have all been wiped away and everything of the kind proven to be a myth.

Mr. DENISON. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will.

Mr. DENISON. I would like to know what the views of the committee were for causing an American citizen to lose her citizenship in two years. Under this bill if an American woman marries a foreign man she retains her citizenship for two years. Is that right?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. If she goes abroad to live with her husband she remains an American citizen two years. What was the reason for limiting her to that two years?

Mr. RAKER. I will answer it as best I can. Under the present law an American woman who marries an alien automatically loses her citizenship. If she remains in the United States she ought to have it, and that is the purpose and object of this bill. If she goes abroad and permanently resides for two years she ought to by that act, voluntary on her part, lose the right granted to her by this law, because she has, in the first place, married an alien. She has determined by her own motion and her act and her conduct that she is not thinking of the United States and therefore ought not to be an American citizen.

Mr. DENISON. Does that begin after two consecutive years or two years altogether?

Mr. RAKER. I think beyond all question that if the woman went over and stayed six months and came back she would not lose it. It must be a consecutive two years' residence, two years' residence abroad, and the presumption would be that she lost her citizenship.

Mr. DENISON. If a foreign man's family under the present law comes to the United States and the man is naturalized the wife also becomes an American citizen. Do the children also become citizens?

Mr. RAKER. No. They stand just as they do under the law now. There has been no change.

Mr. DENISON. Do they still remain foreign?

Mr. RAKER. If they are under a certain age and the father becomes naturalized, they become citizens. If they are over that certain age, they must be independently naturalized, under the present law.

Mr. DENISON. I will ask the gentleman if little babies, under 6 years old, become American citizens?

Mr. RAKER. If the father is naturalized the little baby will be a citizen after he becomes of age. But the mother's naturalization does not affect in any way, shape, or form the naturalization of the children.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California has expired.

Mr. GRIFFIN. Will the gentleman take two minutes more in order to elucidate this bill?

Mr. RAKER. I will yield myself two minutes more.

Mr. GRIFFIN. I have in mind the status of the children under this act.

Mr. RAKER. What is the question?

Mr. GRIFFIN. My attention is directed to this: Under the existing law the child will vote upon its father's papers. Now, what will be the situation where an alien woman secures naturalization and the father does not become naturalized?

Mr. RAKER. I will answer that: Under the law as it now stands, all those who are minors when the father becomes naturalized will become American citizens by reason of that naturalization. Those above a certain age are not naturalized by reason of the naturalization of the father, and must become naturalized. Under this bill, if the father is not naturalized, and does not care enough to go and do it, we have said that the mother ought to have some opportunity to advance educationally and otherwise. She can under this bill become naturalized, but it does not in the slightest degree affect the status of the children one way or another.

Mr. STAFFORD. Will the gentleman permit me in that connection——

Mr. RAKER. I yield for a question.

Mr. STAFFORD. Following the gentleman's conclusion just stated, the committee does not repeal section 5 of the expatriation act of 1907?

Mr. RAKER. It does not.

Mr. STAFFORD. May I call to the attention of the gentleman the phraseology of that act?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

Mr. RAKER. I yield myself two minutes more.

Mr. STAFFORD. I would like to quote from the act, which I hold in my hand, the case of a child born abroad whose mother would become naturalized but the father would not. The child would take the citizenship of the mother. May I read it?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. STAFFORD. Section 5 says, and I think it must be changed if the committee wishes to have it conform to the statement made by the gentleman from California, that—a child born without the United States of alien parents shall be deemed a citizen of the United States by virtue of the naturalization of or resumption of American citizenship by the parent.

It does not state which parent.

Provided, That such naturalization or resumption takes place during the minority of such child: And provided further, That the citizenship of such minor child shall begin at the time such minor child begins to reside permanently in the United States.

Now, you have not attempted to amend section 5, so that if the mother becomes naturalized during the minority of the foreign-born child, and the husband and father does not, the child under this law will take the citizenship of the mother.

Mr. GRIFFIN. That is the point I wanted explained.

Mr. RAKER. I will say unhesitatingly that under this bill the naturalization of the mother does not naturalize the child, and it will have to wait until it becomes of age and is independently naturalized. Under the law the father wants to do something. He has not done it in the past.

Mr. GRIFFIN. The child is undoubtedly naturalized under the certificate of its parent. Is that not so? It does not say "father."

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Chairman, I desire to make the motion that the committee do now rise.

Mr. RAKER. Does the gentleman from Colorado wish to proceed now?

Mr. VAILE. If you want to use more time, go ahead.

Mr. RAKER. You had best proceed, and then I will yield 10 minutes. I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] Eighty-four Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. VAILE. I move a call of the House.

Thereupon the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having under consideration the bill (H. R. 12022) relative to the naturalization and citizenship of married women, and finding itself without a quorum, he had directed the roll to be called, whereupon 239 Members responded to their names—a quorum—and he submitted a list of absentees for entry in the Journal.

Mr. HARDY of Texas. Mr. Speaker, before the committee resumes, by consent of the representatives of the majority I wish to ask leave to extend——

The SPEAKER. The Chair has no right to consider any such request. The committee has risen temporarily, and the Speaker has resumed the chair only to receive a report. The Chair has no right to recognize the gentleman. The committee will resume its session.

The committee resumed its session.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado [Mr. VAILE] is recognized.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CABLE].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for five minutes.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

Mr. CABLE. Mr. Chairman, a woman's citizenship should not be determined by her marital status. Justice and common sense should permit a married woman to act upon her own wishes and qualifications for naturalization rather than those of her husband. The principle of independent citizenship for married women is not a new proposition. It has been indorsed by both the Republican and Democratic Parties and incorporated in their 1920 platforms. My bill itself has been indorsed by various national women's organizations of the United States in a statement issued to Members of the House to-day, which reads as follows:

We earnestly ask your consideration of the Cable bill (H. R. 12022), which we expect will come before the House for a vote this week, and we trust that you will give it your active support.

This is a bill relative to the naturalization and citizenship of married women, and provides that a woman's citizenship shall not be dependent upon her marital status.

The organizations that we represent have all indorsed the principles found in this measure.

Very truly yours,

AMERICAN ASSOCIATION OF UNIVERSITY WOMEN,
Mrs. RAYMOND MORGAN.

NATIONAL FEDERATION OF BUSINESS AND PROFESSIONAL WOMEN,
MARY STEUART.

COUNCIL OF JEWISH WOMEN,
Mrs. L. OPPENHEIMER.

GENERAL FEDERATION OF WOMEN'S CLUBS,
LIDA M. HAFFORD.

NATIONAL LEAGUE OF WOMEN VOTERS,
MAUD WOOD PARK.

NATIONAL WOMEN'S TRADE UNION LEAGUE,
ETHEL M. SMITH.

WOMEN'S CHRISTIAN TEMPERANCE UNION,
LENNA LOWE YOST.

The Carnegie Foundation made a special investigation to determine the attitude of various judges exercising jurisdiction in naturalization cases, and in that study replies from 350 judges were 2 to 1 in favor of naturalizing women as individuals, and practically 2 to 1 in favor of allowing an American woman to retain her citizenship regardless of marriage to an alien.

The conviction that the citizenship of married women ought to be a genuine right which can not be taken away from her or granted to her without her full knowledge, consent, or wish is not confined to legislative proceedings or resolutions in this country. The International Suffrage News for June, this year, reports that early in April, 1922, a bill was introduced in the French Senate seeking to revise the provisions in regard to nationality, and especially in regard to the citizenship of married women. In England a bill, which 59 women's organizations of the British Empire heartily indorse, dealing with independent citizenship of married women has lately been brought before the House of Commons. The International Council of Women, the largest of the international organizations of women in representing the greatest number of countries, at its meeting at Copenhagen two years ago expressed in a resolution the belief of women of many countries that the citizenship of married women should be upon an independent basis and their sincere conviction that legislative bodies will soon come to recognize the justice and common sense of the women's stand in the matter.

A natural-born American must wait 21 years before she or he is permitted to participate in the government of this country. A foreign-born man or single woman who comes to this country and resides here continuously for five years, if he qualifies before the courts, may become naturalized and acquire the right of suffrage. But a foreign-born woman who comes to this country one day automatically becomes an American citizen the next if she marries an American citizen or if her husband becomes naturalized. With one day's period of residence, as compared to the natural-born American's 21 years of residence, she acquires the same rights, privileges, and benefits in and to our Government. She is not required to be able to speak the English language, to know of our customs and laws, our Constitution, and to be attached to the principles of our Government; she does not even have to renounce allegiance to her foreign ruler and take the oath of allegiance to Uncle Sam.

Citizenship in this country should not depend on the marriage status, but should be based upon loyalty to our country and a knowledge of its language and laws, as well as a wish or desire to become an American citizen. On the other hand, under our present law a married alien woman who may have resided in this country for many years and who has learned to love America, who knows our language, our customs, our laws, can not become an American citizen except by the naturalization of her husband. Why should her citizenship depend upon the will of her husband?

The bill under consideration repeals that section of the present law which provides "Any woman who is now or who may hereafter be married to a citizen of the United States and who might herself be lawfully naturalized shall be deemed a citizen," and in its place provides that when an alien woman marries an American, or when her husband becomes naturalized, she does not automatically become an American citizen, but if she also desires to become an American citizen she may do so by being naturalized through a shortened process.

The present law permitting the naturalization of foreign born deals directly with the husband and father and gives the wife and mother but secondary consideration. The husband is the one who is educated. He is the one who must learn to speak the English language, to know our country, its Constitution, and laws. He is the one who must be attached to the principles of our Nation. He only renounces allegiance to his foreign ruler, and in most cases he only appears in open court and declares on oath that he will support and defend the Constitution. The husband is the one who must be fitted and prepared for his part as an American citizen. Even the children are sent to public schools, but what of the wife? The true process of naturalization should include the education of the mother of this immigrant family. The mother's influence and guidance would be lost to the family without the education that naturalization proceedings provide and require. My bill is intended to permit this wife and mother to learn something about the country. She is the one who should guide these children and ought to have the same privileges of an education as the father.

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman permit a question there?

Mr. CABLE. I yield.

Mr. VOIGT. Under this bill you are casting the same mental requirements upon the wife as you are on the husband?

Mr. CABLE. Yes. That is intended so as to permit her to learn something about this country, and not be entirely disregarded when her husband is going through the naturalization proceedings.

Mr. VOIGT. Let us take the case of the average alien family coming to this country. Usually that family consists of a husband and wife and anywhere from two to half a dozen children.

Mr. CABLE. Yes; and when they proceed with their naturalization they devote all their time to the husband and to the education of the children in the public schools, and give the wife and mother but little attention.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio has expired.

Mr. VAILE. I yield two more minutes to the gentleman from Ohio.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio is recognized for two minutes more.

Mr. VOIGT. Now, when that family comes to this country, the wife is generally required to do all the family work. She has to work from early in the morning until late at night to take care of those children.

Mr. CABLE. Yes. Let us educate her and give her a chance.

Mr. VOIGT. Do you think it is a fair proposition to throw the same burden, the same mental requirement upon that wife, when she is busy with her family and her household duties from morning until night, that is cast on the husband?

Mr. CABLE. Under my bill the wife would receive the same education as the father and the children, and thus she would have the same opportunities as the husband and children.

Mr. VOIGT. Does the gentleman believe that the wife is able to get away from her household duties and her children so as to acquire these attainments?

Mr. CABLE. In various States the Americanization proceeding is carried on by going into the home and educating the wife there. We seek to give these foreign-born women a chance to be educated, and we are opposed to keeping the mother and wife in ignorance of our language and laws, as you do in many cases under the present naturalization law.

Mr. LINEBERGER. I will ask the gentleman if it is not true, further, that the inspiration that the children get is more from the mother than from the father?

Mr. CABLE. That is right.

Mr. LINEBERGER. Is it not right, therefore, that the mother who guides these children and has constant association with them ought to have the same privilege of an education as the father, if not more?

Mr. CABLE. The mother should be given the opportunity of learning the English language and our customs and method of government for her benefit as well as her children.

Mr. CHALMERS. First I want to congratulate the gentleman from Ohio upon his bill. [Applause.] I want to say in answer to the gentleman from Wisconsin that I do not consider it any hardship upon a wife to relieve her temporarily from household duties and educate her and give her some education in American citizenship.

Mr. CABLE. Under the present law "any American woman who marries a foreigner shall take the nationality of her husband." This bill repeals that provision of law in line with the Republican and Democratic national platforms. The Republican platform in part provides:

An American woman resident in the United States shall not lose her citizenship by marriage to an alien.

And the Democratic platform dealing with this subject advocates—

Federal legislation which shall insure that American women resident in the United States, but married to aliens, shall retain their American citizenship.

The principle of permitting a woman to retain her nationality, even though she marries a person of another nation, is not confined to this country alone. In April of this year the bill introduced in the French Senate dealing with citizenship of married women provided in article 19 that—

The French woman who marries an alien retains her French citizenship, unless she makes formal declaration that she prefers to take the nationality of her husband.

And in England the bill recently brought before the House of Commons provides for the restoration to British women who have married aliens of their British citizenship.

In my opinion the rich American woman who marries a title and lives abroad should cease to have the privileges and benefits of an American citizen, and under my bill special provision is made that if she resides continuously for two years in the country of which her husband is a citizen or subject, or resides continuously for five years abroad, she is presumed to have ceased to be an American citizen. But there are many American girls who marry foreign born and who continue to reside in this country. Their loyalty and fidelity is with the United States. Since the nineteenth amendment grants equal suffrage to women, so also should they have equal rights with reference to citizenship. An American citizen who marries an alien girl still retains his citizenship; so also should the American girl who marries the alien man. We should not relinquish our rights to legislate or withdraw our country's protection from these natural-born American women; their personal and property rights should be determined by our laws; and we should not by legislative action surrender this right to any foreign nation.

The purpose of the bill is to place citizenship on the highest plane possible. It is a privilege and not a right. Participation in our Government and the protection by our country should not be determined in the case of married women solely by a marriage ceremony.

Mr. RAKER. I yield one minute to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. WARD].

Mr. WARD of North Carolina. Mr. Chairman, I hold in my hand 3,500 names of citizens from my own and Mr. KITCHIN's district asking this Congress to act before its adjournment, and as quickly as possible, upon the Muscle Shoals proposition. I am going to lay the petition in the basket, and I want the House to know it so that you can all read it if you want to, provided you do not all read it at one time; and if you all want to read it at one time, I will read it to you. [Applause.]

Mr. RAKER. I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Virginia [Mr. MOORE].

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Mr. Chairman, I shall hardly use 10 minutes. I wish to discuss a matter that is not connected with the pending bill, but a matter that has been discussed somewhat heretofore.

According to recent newspaper statements, there is to be further delay in giving the public information as to the reason for the Executive order of March 30, which led to the removal of the director and other responsible officials of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing and the substitution of others in their places. Meanwhile there continue to be intimations that the bureau was being mismanaged and that the officials were guilty of misconduct. I propose this morning to briefly restate the case which I have heretofore more than once discussed, and I do not believe that any facts have been, or will be, developed to disprove the propositions I now submit.

The officials who were removed were rendering faithful service, and there was no good reason for the President's order. The President was the victim of those whose advice he trusted, chief among whom, I have no doubt, were the Attorney General and Assistant Secretary of the Treasury Dover, who seem to be the chief patronage pilots of the administration ship. The action which was taken, besides disregarding the spirit, if not the letter, of the civil-service law, was a gross injustice to competent and honest officials, men and women, who, so far as we are up to this time advised, are beyond reproach.

The Government has suffered a real loss by the removal of some of the officials, who, in their special line, were among the most conspicuous and useful experts in this country, and evidence of this is found in the fact that their services are now being sought by private enterprises. Let me give some instances. I am reliably informed that Mr. Rose, who was chief of the Engraving Division at a salary of $5,000 a year, has been offered by an English engraving concern a salary of $20,000 a year; that Mr. Smilley, who is regarded as the master vignette engraver of this country, if not of the world, and who was receiving a salary of $7,500, is now employed by the American Bank Note Co. at a salary of $10,000; that Mr. Slattery, who was chief of the Electrolytic Division, and Mr. Dean, who was chief of the Surface Division, have been employed at increased salaries by concerns in Bridgeport, Conn., and New Haven, Conn. Of course, there are some of those removed who, in a time like this, find difficulty in securing employment, however well equipped and meritorious they may be, but they must, as best they can, yield to the consequences of an order which was made suddenly, without hearing, without notice, and which is apparently sought to be justified by an investigation that is now already supposed to have gone on for two months and a half.

I do not mean to say that all of the newly appointed officials are unworthy or disreputable. I would be most unhappy to think that such is the case, and would be the last man to assume it to be the fact without definite proof. But what I do mean to say is that some of them are liable to that criticism. What I am saying now I hope will reach the President. I do not know whether he reads the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD or is kept posted as to its contents. I do know that any President would profit by keeping in close touch with the proceedings in Congress in that way. However much the RECORD may be derided by some, it should be consulted by those who hold great positions in the Federal Government, for with reference to the activities of the Federal Government it shows "the very age and body of the times, its form and substance." I wish the President to know that the Chief of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing, appointed by his order, is a man who, at the time of his appointment, was, and is now, under very serious charges made in a divorce case pending in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, the case of Evelyn D. Hill against Louis A. Hill, which was filed April 20, 1920. The charges can not be lightly brushed aside, since the complainant is vouched for by those who know her well as of the highest standing and credibility. There is more that would have been adduced relative to the new chief of the bureau that would make the President gravely doubt whether he measures up to the standards of public and private conduct which the President so often advocates in his public addresses had the resolution for an investigation which I proposed, but which the Committee on Rules has ignored, been adopted. The President, I suppose, understands that the man now at the head of the bureau supervises the work of a Government agency which perhaps has a larger percentage of young women among its employees than any other Government agency. It is for the President to determine whether, in view of the conditions I have briefly outlined, he is content, and expects the women of this country to be content, with what he has done. Had the investigation been permitted it would have shown that the new assistant director is simply a fit associate of his superior. There is something else that the President should know. His order became effective at 6.30 p. m., March 30. Two hours in advance of that a committee of the Treasury Department had made an altogether favorable report of the work of Mr. Ashworth, who was custodian of the dies. That is a very important office, and, as I understand, there is an annual report on its condition. Not only was Mr. Ashworth officially approved, but no one will venture to challenge his capacity or character. The President should know that there was placed in that position a man who was then, and is now, the defendant in a divorce case pending in the Supreme Court of the District of Columbia, the case of Caroline D. McCauley against Joseph D. McCauley, filed February 28, 1922, which contains more serious charges than have probably been presented to that court in any other similar case, charges that are so established by letters written by the defendant himself that there is no escape for him. If one of the shocking charges made in that suit, and evidenced by a prurient and apparently criminal letter written by the defendant, is not barred by the statute of limitations, it could apparently be made the basis of an indictment for felony. It may be noted as a significant coincidence that while the suit was filed on February 28, 1922, the defendant made no answer until March 30, which was the very date of the Executive order. It is for the President to determine whether he is content, in respect to this particular feature of the Bureau of Engraving and Printing episode, with what has resulted from his order, and as to whether he expects the public, and particularly the women of this country, to be content with it. [Applause.]

Mr. VOIGT. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Wisconsin makes the point of order that there is no quorum present. The Chair will count. [After counting.] One hundred and five Members present, a quorum.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I yield two minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HILL].

Mr. HILL. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, this bill, relative to the naturalization and citizenship of married women, has been indorsed in its principles by the platforms of both the great political parties. Our own Republican platform which we adopted at the last national convention provided in reference to naturalization:

> We advocate the independent naturalization of married women. An American woman, resident in the United States, should not lose her citizenship by marriage to an alien.

The Democratic platform followed us in that particular. Furthermore this bill has been indorsed in its principles by the American Association of University Women, the Business and Professional Women's Clubs, the Council of Jewish Women, the Daughters of the American Revolution, the General Federation of Women's Clubs, the National League of Women Voters, the National Women's Trade Union League, and the Woman's Christian Temperance Union. The bill has also been indorsed by the women in my district.

I have gone over the hearings on this bill very carefully. It is essentially the bill introduced by the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS]. I desire to say to the House that I am entirely for this bill and shall vote for it. [Applause.]

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, how much time is there remaining?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado has 32 minutes remaining?

Mr. VAILE. I yield five minutes to the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS].

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, reference has already been made to the decision of the United States Supreme Court in 1907 in the case of McKenzie against Hare. The opinion of Mr. Justice McKenna contained this phrase:

> The identity of husband and wife is an ancient principle of our jurisprudence.

There is no doubt that that is true. The identity of the husband and wife is, beyond question, an ancient principle of our jurisprudence. So is the doctrine that a wife has no property rights. So is the doctrine that the wife has no control over her own children. So is the doctrine that the woman has no rights in the matter of the franchise. But in the last years the viewpoint of the country and the world has changed in that regard. The tendency has been constantly toward extending the rights of women so as to bring them more and more nearly on an equality with man. In my judgment there was no particular force in the demand for this bill until the nineteenth amendment became a part of the organic law of the land. But when women were given civil equality with men, the right to vote, it seems to me that that moment it became ludicrous for us to say that thereafter the rights of women to citizenship shall be dependent on the rights of men. At that moment the doctrine of dependent or derived citizenship became as archaic as the doctrine of ordeal by fire. So to-day there can be no doubt that in theory this bill is a sound one. To me there is no doubt either that as a practical matter also the bill represents a sound principle. I do not believe an alien woman ought to be eligible to take part in the government of the United States the moment she lands on the shores of America just because she happens to be married to an American citizen. I do not believe, conversely, that an American woman who has lived here all of her life, has exercised the obligations of good citizenship all her life, and who wishes to live here always, should be divested of American citizenship because, forsooth, she happens to marry a man who at the moment is not an American citizen. [Applause.]

Both as a matter of principle and of practice I believe that this bill is progressive in the right sense. It is true, as Justice McKenna says, that it changes a very old principle; but it changes it to accord with what the country has said is the right kind of progressivism. [Applause.]

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield one minute to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH].

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to extend my remarks in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Maryland asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks in the RECORD. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

The extension of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. GOLDSBOROUGH. Mr. Speaker and gentlemen of the House, the majority leadership is trying to pass through the American Congress a bill to subsidize American shipping to the amount of about $52,000,000 annually, to be paid by all the people, and is at the same time endeavoring to put through a tariff bill which will tend to drive American imports and exports from the seas, destroy American shipping, and so defeat the avowed purpose of a ship subsidy.

Now, I am opposed to a ship subsidy, root and branch; I do not have to tell the House I am against the present tariff bill; I have proclaimed that opposition too long and too often to make it necessary; but the proposed duty on potash is worse in principle than the ship subsidy, for it proposes to subsidize the producers of potash and to make the American farmer pay the tribute to the tune of about $51,300,000 a year.

The statement of the American Farm Bureau Federation, which I have analyzed and believe to be fair, is as follows:

> The proposed tariff rates on potash will cost the American farmer the enormous sum of $51,300,000. That is the tax burden he will have to shoulder if Congress adopts the rates proposed in the pending tariff bill, and there will be no escape from payment, for the farmer can not pass it along. He will have to pay or do without potash.
> This potash tax bill of $51,300,000, be it remembered, is in addition to all the other taxes which the farmer must share in common with the rest of us. In plain words, the proposed potash tariff is a scheme that singles out the farmer to carry, alone and unaided, the unconscionable additional tax load of $51,300,000. The iniquity of such a scheme becomes the more apparent when it is realized that without potash, which is one of the elements of complete fertilizer, the crops of the Nation will fall in yield and suffer in quality.
> The computation by which the amount of the potash tax is calculated is easy of demonstration. Here are the figures:

Proposed tariff rates.	Tax on 270,000 tons actual potash, 1913 consumption basis (normal year).
$50 per ton ($K_2O$) first year	$13,500,000
$50 per ton ($K_2O$) second year	13,500,000
$40 per ton ($K_2O$) third year	10,800,000
$30 per ton ($K_2O$) fourth year	8,100,000
$20 per ton ($K_2O$) fifth year	5,400,000
	51,300,000

> Why this indefensible scheme of taxation, with its heavy hand upon a single industry—agriculture?
>
> Because of the demand of the domestic potash producers.
> They have persuaded committees of Congress to levy a toll of $51,300,000 upon the food producers of the country that they may continue an industry totally inadequate to meet the normal consumption demand.

Under the stimulus of inflated war prices, the output of domestic potash producers in their best year, 1918, reached a maximum of only 50,000 tons. Since then their production has declined, amounting to only 7,626 tons in 1921. But granting that the war-time maximum of 50,000 tons of domestic potash can be equaled, then the operation of the duty on this basis of production gives the producers power to take from the farmer $2,500,000 the first year, $2,500,000 the second year, $2,000,000 the third year, $1,500,000 the fourth year, and $1,000,000 the fifth year. But in addition the farmer is to be still further mulcted in the sum of $11,000,000 the first year, $11,000,000 the second year, $8,300,000 the third year, $5,600,000 the fourth year, and $2,900,000 the fifth year.

Again:

* * * * * * *

It is almost certain that domestic potash production will not reach 50,000 tons a year. As has been stated, the 1921 output was only 7,626 tons, but large or small production will have no effect on the tax proposed to be levied on the potash consumers. If the production should be low, the farmer will have to pay at the customhouse what the potash producer fails to collect.

Such a system of customs duties never has been written in any tariff bill passed by any party in the history of the country. It can not be justified either as a measure of protection or as a means for raising revenue.

Tax laws avow a purpose to distribute their burdens equally. The proposed potash rates are laid with discrimination against the agricultural industry. The farmer in this case is the ultimate consumer, and no others participate in the tax.

The proposed rates mark a departure from the traditional policy of all parties, which have always declared for free plant food. Every civilized nation adheres to that policy, recognizing as a fundamental principle that food producers shall be unfettered in their labors to sustain the nation.

The result of the proposed rates, naturally, will be to restrict the use of potash and cause a decline in crop production. The farmer, still suffering from reverses of 1920 and 1921, which almost overwhelmed him, can not buy at an advance of $50 a ton the quantity of potash requisite for his needs. If the proposed rates are voted, he will strain himself to buy what he can, but the sight of his underfed crops will be a constant reminder of the injustice that has been laid on him.

Because of physical conditions and geographical location, it is economically unsound as it is morally wrong to take by taxation from the farmer for the benefit of a private interest. The potash-consuming regions are on the Atlantic seaboard and west to the Mississippi River. The potash-producing points are west of the Missouri River, and the high freight rates from these producing points to consuming centers make successful competition with the French and German products impossible.

Foreign potash is water borne from points of production to Atlantic-port destination, and transportation charges are consequently relatively low. Foreign potash occurs in huge natural deposits and is mined cheaply, while production of American potash is a costly process. Because of cheap ocean rates it is economical to ship material of low potash content which sells to American consumers at a lower price per unit of potash than the higher-grade salts. American producers can not ship low-grade material, but because of high freight rates must concentrate into high percentage of potash. The low-grade foreign potash contains much magnesia, which is an essential element in the growing of tobacco, potatoes, citrus fruits, and truck. It is obvious, therefore, that even if a duty were placed upon foreign potash some American farmers would be forced to buy it in order to raise a crop.

Mr. Speaker, this duty strikes at the basic industry of this country; it strikes at the men and women and children who rise up in the morning before daylight comes and toil through the day and into the night to feed the peoples of the world; it strikes at the life-giving blood, fresh from the soil, which has done so much to keep the generations of America strong and wise. The duty is unsound, and I shall do everything in my power to prevent its becoming a law.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. BOX].

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts has referred to the feature of this legislation which appeals to me most. Considerations of justice and equality and my recognition of woman's contribution to our political life led me to support this measure in committee and caused me to support it here. We men are very conservative in recognizing the rights of women, but if you had seen the man of a few thousand years ago who got his wife by capture or by purchase, and resented somebody's interference with his rights of absolute ownership, including sometimes the power of life and death, you would have found that old fellow conservative in the same line. He would have said that you were making an undue and dangerous innovation. As intelligence has increased, as the impulses of humanity have enlarged in the human heart, they have placed less premium upon mere physical and brute force and more upon intelligence, love, and justice. I am glad that our country is taking the lead in this forward step in the course of recognizing the right of our sisters, the women of the country.

The gentlemen who met in the council room of the two great conventions to write these two platforms to which reference has been made to-day were but interpreting the sentiment of the people of the United States in making these platform promises. Their interpretations were accurate and their promises are binding. I do not see how any member of the majority who regards such promises as having force can refuse to keep the promise made by his party for him. On this side we can not ignore it; we made it not less emphatically.

Because this is a measure expressive of enlightenment and enlarged and more liberal democracy, because public sentiment in America has led the way to it, because we have promised it to the good women of the country, whose part in our political life is to become greater and ever greater, and because it is just and sound and for the good of the country, I count it an honor that I have had an opportunity to take part in writing the bill, to speak for it, and to vote for it. [Applause.] Mr. Chairman, I yield back the remainder of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman yields back seven minutes.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 minutes to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL].

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, this bill may be deemed divided into two parts, one referring to the right of woman to be an American citizen in her own right and the other referring to the citizenship of the woman who has become such by virtue of naturalization of her husband.

As to the right of the woman to be an independent American citizen in her own right there can be no controversy, because the nineteenth amendment to the Constitution has settled that for all time. In regard to the first part of the bill there was considerable doubt at first in my mind as to whether it was the ideal way of reaching that which we are all striving to attain, namely, full American citizenship both for the husabnd and the wife, with a full recognition of its responsibility. The big problem which has confronted men and women who have been studying the question of the children of the immigrant has always been how to instill into the children who were brought over here respect for the father who becomes an American citizen and also for the mother. My conclusion after studying the whole question for a long number of years has been that we have been giving too much attention to the father becoming Americanized and too little to the mother, who is engaged daily in looking after the home, with its heavy burden of work. I feel that through this bill being enacted into law the mother will commence to take a keener interest in American affairs, learn more about our Government than before, and through being required to go to the courts and obtain her separate citizenship she will be in a position to bridge the chasm which has been growing up on account of her lack of knowledge of English and civics. I sincerely hope that we will attain that result.

Last Thursday I had the pleasure of having Secretary of Labor Davis in New York. He visited the same schools which the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization visited two years ago. He was very agreeably surprised at what the children of Schools 83 and 101, Manhattan, showed him in Americanization work and their studies. He made certain inquiries along lines involving citizenship, and he put the question to 3,000 girls as to whether they thought there should be separate citizenship for the women, and, lo and behold, he got a unanimous vote in its favor. In the evening he spoke in the Institutional Synagogue Auditorium to 522 citizens who have become naturalized during the past few weeks and to 500 other American citizens. Altogether it seems to me that the time has come to cross the bridge and courageously fight the battle for intelligent citizenship. For that reason I feel that this bill deserves to receive the support of every Member of this House. It will help to bring back in our country the spirit of fair play and tolerance. [Applause.]

Permit me to add another thought which has been running through my mind. This bill has been somewhat modified and changed this morning in committee, as will be shown by certain amendments which will be offered. It is going to be vitally necessary to increase the force of clerks and the courts for the purpose of handling efficiently the provisions of this legislation. The commissioner of immigration at Ellis Island told me on Thursday last that the certificate of arrival problem has been growing, and when the applicant for citizenship applied for that certificate of arrival to-day he has to wait five months in order to get it. We will have the problem doubled when this bill becomes a law. We will require more clerks and more courts. The sooner we realize these self-evident truths we will make a sufficient appropriation for that purpose. Without additional funds, courts, and clerks there can be no increase in the number of those who can possibly be naturalized. There are only 6,000,000 people in the United States that have not been naturalized, and one-sixth of that number, or, to be accurate, 1,032,000, are in the city of New York. I do not agree with the proposition of naturalizing 15,000 inside of one month by one judge, something which occurred in the city of New York last July, because I think that is doing the matter in too quick a fashion, without that dignity and decorum which should attend the bestowal of the great privilege of American citizenship. The responsibility, however, rests with Congress.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. BOX. Has the gentleman any reason to hope that that bad condition which he describes, which many of us have witnessed, especially the gentleman's committee, will soon be improved by the making of adequate appropriations and provision for proper places to do the work?

Mr. SIEGEL. I told the Secretary of Labor on Thursday that I thought he could not render any greater service to this country than by devoting himself exclusively to the question of bringing before the Congress the urgent necessity of providing a sufficient force of men and indirectly by obtaining a sufficient appropriation for that purpose.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. Do the State courts of New York naturalize?

Mr. SIEGEL. They do.

Mr. WALSH. How many are naturalized through the State courts as compared with the Federal courts?

Mr. SIEGEL. The State courts are naturalizing nine out of ten. In the Federal court we have only one day a week, with one judge sitting.

Mr. WALSH. I am talking about New York City.

Mr. SIEGEL. The Federal courts are in New York City.

Mr. WALSH. The State courts in New York City.

Mr. SIEGEL. They are doing the entire work, practically, because the Federal courts are so jammed with other important work that they can not attend to it or give it the time required.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, if the State courts are doing 90 per cent of the work that is not any expense to the Government, is it?

Mr. SIEGEL. Oh, no. We are using the State courts and using the State machinery for naturalization, while the money goes into the Treasury of the United States. The Federal judges are not responsible for the conditions, because it is physically impossible for them to handle the entire accumulated calendars of cases before them right now in the southern and eastern districts of New York. Our judges are working as hard as men can.

Mr. WALSH. Has the gentleman's committee any proposition before it with reference to remedying the situation by providing a naturalization court or extending the jurisdiction of the United States commissioners, or otherwise?

Mr. SIEGEL. The question can be solved along these lines. One proposition is to increase the number of clerks we will allow to the naturalization bureau in New York; then designate one of the additional Federal judges to sit, not one day a week but to sit for a term of a month, the same as he handles any other litigation, such as criminal cases, and so forth. The State courts last summer, at my request, through the action of Governor Miller, sat during the entire summer, and the 15,000 people to whom I referred who became citizens in one month obtained relief before Justice Cropsey, who held a special term for that purpose.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. The Immigration Committee has before it a bill to permit the chief naturalization examiners to act as commissioners of the courts, has it not, and to do away with the carrying of two witnesses into court at various stages of the naturalization proceedings?

Mr. SIEGEL. That is correct; but, as the gentleman knows, there is opposition to the measure by those who believe in having a judge presiding. We have only two men at Ellis Island to examine the manifests in order to issue the certificates of arrival. They are behind five months. You would have at least 150,000 newly naturalized citizens in the city of New York in the next year if you would increase the courts and clerks, because applicants are being turned away, and people are coming there two or three and often four times with two witnesses.

Mr. WALSH. The gentleman is assuming that all these applicants will be naturalized. What percentage of these applicants in New York City are refused naturalization?

Mr. SIEGEL. Less than 1 to 2 per cent.

Mr. WALSH. That is not quite large enough.

Mr. BOX. After Congress has passed this legislation, which most of us think must be passed, will not the amount of work required by the naturalization court be very greatly increased, although they are now wholly insufficient to do the work?

Mr. SIEGEL. There is no question about it in my mind. It is going to be doubled, because most of these people who are applying to be naturalized have wives and children. I am looking to Congress to act, supported by the press and all who are interested in providing sufficient naturalization facilities.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I yield the gentleman two minutes more.

Mr. GAHN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SIEGEL. Yes.

Mr. GAHN. Will the gentleman explain whether or not it is consistent to allow women who marry aliens to retain their citizenship, whereas those women who are not citizens who marry a naturalized person can not become citizens?

Mr. SIEGEL. They retain their citizenship in the particular country whence they came. That is, the alien woman does. I recognize that this legislation is going to lead to some trouble, but we are proud of the United States; and those who are coming here, according to my viewpoint, to stay here permanently should only come here with the one undiluted thought, and that is to become American citizens, to become part and parcel of this country in the full sense of the word. [Applause.]

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks and to include in that extension the speech delivered by the Secretary of Labor last Thursday night, as well as my own remarks regarding American citizenship.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from New York asks unanimous consent to revise and extend his remarks in the manner indicated. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

The extension of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Speaker, on the evening of June 15 there was held at the auditorium of the Institutional Synagogue, 37 to 43 West One hundred and sixteenth Street, New York City, a welcome to 522 newly naturalized citizens. In addition thereto, 500 American citizens, both men and women, were present. The new citizens had come to the United States from 14 different countries.

This program is part of the naturalization work carried on by the Institutional Synagogue since it came into existence a little over five years ago. Its leader is Rabbi Herbert S. Goldstein, a Columbia graduate.

The following remarks were made by me in introducing Secretary Davis:

For the first time in the history of New York City invitations have been extended to those who have become naturalized during the past few months to attend a welcome at the new citizens' meeting. It is fitting that the highest public official of the United States, who not only is in charge of the enforcement of the law in regard to the admission of immigrants but who also looks after the naturalization of aliens, should have come here to deliver a message on such an occasion. We are passing through a time when the spirit of intolerance seems to be spreading throughout our beloved Republic. Here and there, and happily, in only a limited number of places, we see the evidence of a so-called "invisible government" attempting to usurp the functions of constituted authority. There is no room here for individuals who attempt to act for and in behalf of a government which has no legal existence and who endeavor to operate in defiance of law and authority but fearing to disclose their identity.

In this Republic of ours there is only room for those who are 100 per cent Americans, who are ever ready to face their fellow men and perform their full duty as citizens, openly and aboveboard. It is thrice fitting therefore that an official of the President's Cabinet should come here to speak to you, the newest American citizens, that you may learn that this Government of ours, with all that it stands for in behalf of freedom and religious liberty, is as safe to-night as it has been since April 30, 1789, when Washington took the oath as President of the United States. I know that he brings to you a message telling you that this is a Government of laws and not of men.

I desire, my fellow Americans, to allude for a moment to that disgraceful, cowardly, and un-American episode which has recently occurred at the Naval Academy. It costs us approximately $12,000 for each of its graduates. Apparently envy and jealousy, to put it mildly, was at the bottom of the entire trouble. It might be wise to plant in Bancroft Hall, in a conspicuous place, a copy of the Ten Commandments, so that those who pass by daily may at least be able to learn that they are still in existence. It might also help to teach some of the rising generation who are receiving an education at our expense that envy and jealousy are not only in direct conflict with God's law, but that it has no place in the academy. The American people will not tolerate for a moment any kind of discrimination at the academy or at any other place where their money, raised by taxation, is being expended. I rely on Col. Theodore Roosevelt to do his full duty in this case. In his veins flows the blood of one of the greatest Americans and New Yorkers that we have ever had. His father knew New York. He knew how this great Republic of ours had made its progress. We can learn very much from the article he wrote which has been designated as "Roosevelt's Religion."

ROOSEVELT'S RELIGION.

"I can quarrel with no man because of his religion. The Roman Catholic, the Jew, the Protestant, the Mohammedan, the follower of Confucious all are right so long as they seek to follow what their leaders have taught. You know that the Roman Catholic is in prison not because of his faith but because he broke away from it. The Jew is there because he and the synagogue are no longer friends; the Protestant because his religion has ceased to be a living thing and his soul has atrophied.

"I have no patience with those who attack, who would destroy a man's belief in religion; no patience with those who would convert the Jew en masse or the Catholic. More likely than not, where they succeed at all, they succeed only in destroying something. They take something real away and give nothing in return, leaving the victim bankrupt. After all, one's religion is a private thing and one is apt to be misunderstood. If I should express my opinion publicly some halfbaked ass of a preacher would attack me for indorsing the Pope; another because I am a Mohammedan at heart; and another would see in my tolerance for the rabbi proof that my right name is Rosenfelt or Rosenthal.

"I wish to see nothing like race proscription in this country, but we ought to be frank with ourselves and recognize that under the surface there is considerable anti-Semitic feeling. About the Frank case in Georgia. If I remember rightly, some of the oldest families in Georgia are Jewish. One of Oglethorpe's trustees was a Jew, whose family is still prominent in affairs of that State. It is one of the last places one would naturally look for that sort of thing.

"Our Jewish friends share with us who are non-Jewish responsibility for any success these creatures may make among the newer Jewish people in this country. Like the rest of us, they have assumed that once in the immigrant would be automatically taken care of by our admirable institutions and have neglected him and left him to his own resources. It is not right to criticize the immigrant because he forms what we call 'foreign' colonies in our cities. It is natural that he should seek his kind. He does exactly what Americans do when they go abroad and settle in London, Paris, Berlin. Do they scatter? They do not. They form colonies just as distinct as do the Russian Jew, the Greek, the Armenian, the Irish, or the Germans, or, if you please, the Chinese; they seek their kind. We should see to it that their kind becomes our kind. We won't do it by calling them names, and we won't do it by neglecting them. Immigration will be one of our reconstruction problems. It will have to be handled in a big way, but with the idea that America comes first and that the time has arrived when we must and will be more particular as to whom we admit into our houses, bearing always in mind that we owe it to the alien as well as to ourselves to see to it that he has ample opportunity of becoming a real American."

With that spirit in mind, my friends, we are honored by the presence of a member of the Cabinet, who came here when he was barely eight years of age. By his own conscientious and energetic work, full of courage and determination that he was going to succeed, standing on his own legs all the time and animated by a spirit of independence, he has worked himself up to the high office of Secretary of Labor of this Republic of ours of 110,000,000 people. He recognizes, as well as does all thinking American people, that the main thought which should run through our minds is "How much can we give to America?" instead of "How much can we get out of America?" I know that such doctrine will meet his approval. Emerson said, "America spells opportunity." It was true when Emerson said it, and it is true to-night. I do not know of any better example of what Emerson had in mind than the man whom I present and introduce to you, Secretary of Labor James J. Davis.

REMARKS OF SECRETARY OF LABOR JAMES J. DAVIS.

Mr. Chairman, ladies and gentlemen, I am delighted to hear the boys' band of the Hebrew Orphan Asylum playing so wonderfully. I have two reasons for a deep interest in your band. First, because I love music, and at one time played the clarinet in a band myself. Second, because I love boys and know a little something about them. I am director general of Mooseheart, a home-school town for the orphans of the members of the Loyal Order of Moose. We have more than 1,100 children at Mooseheart learning to make their way in life. So I know something about orphan children; I want to congratulate your band on its splendid playing. I am delighted to have heard you, and when I have an opportunity I am going to tell our boys at Mooseheart all about the Hebrew Orphan Asylum Band.

I have found that even if you are a member of the Cabinet the place to find happiness is among the plain folks. No man can successfully serve this great Republic in a position of trust and responsibility unless he draws his inspiration and his convictions from the hearts of the people in their everyday life. All my life I have worked among the American workers. I have taken my recreation among them. I have been with them in good times and bad times, in happiness and content, and in sorrow. It is for this reason, as I told the good rabbi here, Dr. Herbert S. Goldstein, that I am particularly at home among you here to-night.

I came to this country as an immigrant boy when I was 8 years old. My first home in America was almost next door to a synagogue. Down the street was a Protestant Baptish church, and just across the way was a Roman Catholic church. The neighborhood represented almost a complete cross section of our immigration as it came to us at that time. There were men and women from the Germanic countries, Jews, Welshmen, Irish, English, and Italians in that neighborhood. All had come to America seeking economic and political freedom. All creeds and all races were there working out their problems of earthly existence side by side. They were our new citizens, and being with them and of them made me a better, stronger, happier man, a better father, a better husband, a better citizen.

I am glad that Congressman SIEGEL was kind enough to invite me here to have a word with you new citizens and to give me an opportunity to know you better. It is a privilege to meet the Congressman's friends personally. We hear a great deal from him about you in Washington. He must be personally acquainted with everybody hereabouts. Early and late he is at the Department of Labor pleading for the rights of some one or the other of you. When he has gone to everybody in the office with a difficult case he finds his way as a last resort to the Secretary of Labor personally. Usually he gets what he wants. So I am not at all surprised to find that the Congressman is a sort of an institution among you.

One of the greatest privileges that can be accorded a man or woman on this earth to-day is to be a citizen of the United States. It is the realization of this fact that has induced millions to come here from other countries seeking the freedom of opportunity that America offers. One of the most beautiful recollections of my younger life that remains with me is the picture of my mother with a shawl about her head coming down the gangplank of the vessel that brought her and her six children to this country. We landed at Castle Garden, which was the Ellis Island of those days, and to-day I can realize fully the hopes and ambitions that filled my mother's heart. She knew that in this new land there lay opportunity and inspiration for her little ones and that here they might find success and happiness.

The welcome that my mother felt was extended to her when she came to this country I want to extend to every one of you to-night. I am proud and happy to offer you my help in your efforts to join the citizenship of this great Republic. Here in these 48 great States you will find real opportunity. Its vast territory, its wealth of natural resources, its great industrial development are before you for your use. Here you will find a great school system to provide your children with the training necessary for their growth and progress in the struggle of life. But America, with all of its vast resources, can not make you real Americans. That remains with each one of you. You must do your part. You must take advantage of the means which America offers to develop yourselves into real Americans, living American lives, under American laws, and in accordance with those high ideals which America stands for.

Let me charge you with one thing: Know America. Acquaint yourself with the Constitution of the United States and the laws under which you live. Study the history of our country and learn the high purpose that was before the founders of this Republic when they welded the scattered colonies on this continent into a single Nation. Learn the rights and privileges which are accorded American citizens, but above all learn the duties which devolve upon every man and woman who accepts those privileges.

You have an opportunity now to take your part in the government of this great Nation of more than 100,000,000 people. Your voice is as powerful as the voice of anyone in the selection of the men who will conduct your Government. You have your part in the choosing of every elective officer in city, county, State, and National administration. Your vote is a sacred thing. Upon your ballot and those of your neighbors rest the whole structure of government in America. Let your conscience and the general welfare of all the people be the controlling factors in deciding your choice in political affairs.

You will find a few in this country who go about preaching the doctrine of hate and revolution against all constituted authority. Let me warn you against these insidious influences. Follow no doctrine based upon the gospel of hate. Rest not your hopes in revolution. Remember that in this country the people rule, not by violence but by peace and the ballot. There is not a law on the statute books of this Republic that can not be wiped out or changed if you can convince a majority of the people that it should be abolished or altered. The rule rests with the majority. You will not always have your way. The minority can not have its way. But we can and must abide by the decisions of the majority of our people if this great experiment in human government is to endure. We must work by evolution and reject the false doctrine of revolution. Every man who preaches revolution in America brings discredit upon his race. Do not give him a hearing.

Find out the true American citizen and make friends with him. Seek his advice and profit by his counsel. Remember that these things are fundamental in our Government: The protection of life, the protection of the right of contract, the protection of property, and the protection of free labor. These things, with the right to a trial by jury, to a day in court, are the basis of government, and I say to you that I am irrevocably opposed to any man or any government which fails to recognize them.

We have no room in America for those who would teach the doctrine of hatred of race or creed or class. I like to tell the story of an occurrence on the battle field during the Great War that was told me as I visited the scenes of strife after the war was over. I followed the army up through the Argonne Forest on my way into Germany. In the Argonne I heard this story. In the last American company that went over the top just before the armistice became effective were three young men who gave their lives. When the smoke of the battle had cleared the three were lying mortally wounded side by side in the dreary wreckage of no man's land.

As they lay there one of the three, feeling that his spirit had not long to remain in this world, said to the wounded soldier next to him, "Will you reach into my pocket and take the Good Book which mother gave me and read the twenty-third psalm?" With an effort his buddy took out the Book and began to read:

"The Lord is my Shepherd, I shall not want. He maketh me to lie down in green pastures," and so continued, concluding, "And I shall dwell in the house of the Lord forever." And after these words had been feebly repeated the owner of the Book breathed a sigh and the light of life went out. He was a Jew.

The effort of reading had been great and the second soldier realized that he, too, had not long to live. His coat was closely buttoned and it was with difficulty that he turned over on his other side and whispered to his remaining comrade, "Open my breast," and his buddy did so, disclosing a small crucifix. He understood and pressed it into the hand of the dying man, whose lips moved feebly in prayer as another spirit went to meet its Creator. He was a Catholic.

A Red Cross nurse who came upon the field to attend the wounded after the battle heard the story from the lips of the last survivor, but his spirit, too, had received the call and he knew that life was fast ebbing away. He whispered to the nurse, "Will you take the little Testament which my mother gave me and read me the fourteenth chapter of John?" and she started, "Let not your heart be troubled, ye believe in God, believe also in Me," and with a sigh of content this Protestant Christian boy passed out into his fuller life beyond.

My friends, that was the spirit that won the war. Jew and Gentile, Protestant and Catholic, made up that Army and offered the supreme sacrifice. We must always keep that same spirit alive in America, and upon you, the men who are coming anew to citizenship in this Republic, rests the duty of perpetuating that spirit. I say to you that America has no room for prejudice of race or creed. Every boy and girl must have the opportunity, the right, to succeed in life. He must not be hampered because of the race or creed of his parents or himself. That is one of the big things of America.

This is your America now. As you become American citizens, there are many who will look to you for example and guidance. Other immigrants will come, are coming every day. Others will appear for naturalization as you have, and it is to you that these men must look for a demonstration of what American citizenship means. See to it that you cast no discredit upon your kind.

I feel deeply my privilege as a former immigrant to welcome you to citizenship in this great country. I am proud of the part I have played in the everyday life of America. I am proud to remember that I gave years of my life to labor in the development of the tremendous iron and steel industry of America. I started to work when I was less than 9 years old, and I worked in the iron mills. I know what it is to stand before a furnace from early morning until late at night, and to start for home barely able to walk at the close of the day's labor. It was a great struggle to get ahead. Getting ahead is a struggle for every one of us. But let me say to you that here you will find the opportunity for yourself and your children to get ahead by honest industry. You are now a part of this Nation. The President of the United States has no greater power in the selection of officers to govern you than you have. You can cast a ballot for your elective officers, and the President himself can cast but one. Let me say to you again, Welcome, thrice welcome to this great fraternity, the fraternity of 48 States, the United States of America, the greatest country in the world.

Mr. SIEGEL. Mr. Chairman, the following information gives in concrete form all the statistics which have been repeatedly asked for by Members:

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, in order to secure a full attendance for the next few minutes, I will yield five minutes to the gentleman from Oklahoma [Mr. HERRICK].

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I do not know whether I will take five minutes or not. I have just a few words to say. I want to say, in its present form, I am opposed to this bill. My main opposition is to lines 8, 9, and 10, page 2, which allows an American woman to marry a foreigner and retain her citizenship. It is a well-known fact that no American farmer's daughter, no American laborer's daughter, no small business man's daughter marries a foreigner. It is only the daughter of the so-called wealthy, the profiteer class, who marries a foreigner—those who coin American citizenship into gold which they may use to purchase some Count No Account, some degenerate from over the seas. That being the case, this matter has become a national scandal, and what is the use of profiteers piling up millions and millions with which to purchase some foreign degenerate for some American girl who values her American heritage so little as to be willing to go across the seas for a husband and marries some Count No Account? Let them be known by the title of Mrs. Count No Account. [Laughter.] I might say more, but the fact is plain and it is not necessary. I yield back the remainder of my time. [Applause.]

Mr. VAILE. I yield to the gentleman from Utah [Mr. COLTON].

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to revise and extend my remarks in the RECORD on the subject of the reclamation of arid lands.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. COLTON. Mr. Chairman, in the few moments that are allotted to me I desire to discuss a question of great magnitude to this country. Sometimes it is well for us to read and consider some of the pledges we solemnly made to the people prior to election. I quote from the platforms of the two great political parties:

REPUBLICAN.

We favor a fixed and comprehensive policy of reclamation to increase national wealth and production.

We commend to Congress a policy to reclaim lands and the establishment of a fixed national policy of development of natural resources in relation to reclamation through the now designated Government agencies.

DEMOCRATIC.

We favor ample appropriations for the continuation and extension of this great work of home building and internal improvement along the same general lines, to the end that all practical projects shall be built, and waters now running waste shall be made to provide homes and add to the food supply, power resources, and taxable property, with the Government ultimately reimbursed for the entire outlay.

In these two planks of their platforms both the Republican and Democratic Parties of this country recognize that the reclamation of the arid lands of the West, and of the drainage of the swamp lands of other sections of our country, is a great national policy; a policy which if carried out will enrich every portion of America. Just as the settlement of the Ohio and Mississippi Valleys brought prosperity to the Atlantic States, so the settlement of the West is helping to build up every section of our country.

It is more than an incident that recorded history began in the countries where the great art of irrigation and reclamation got its start. We of the West are ardently supporting any movement which attempts to reclaim new lands. We deny, however, most emphatically that this is a sectional or a partisan question, nor do we subscribe to the idea that any problem before the American people is of greater importance. Viewed from any angle its importance is apparent. If the cold business side of the question is considered, it is then found to be one of the most profitable undertakings in which the people of the United States may engage.

ACCOMPLISHMENTS OF RECLAMATION SERVICE.

Since 1902 the Reclamation Service has constructed irrigation systems to supply water for nearly 3,000,000 acres of land. Surely it will appeal to the business people of the United States that an investment totaling about $129,000,000 made in this work since 1902, which has resulted in the production of wealth amounting to over $500,000,000, is a good business venture. This is to say nothing of the value of the crop raised annually on reclamation lands, which now reaches the sum of nearly $150,000,000.

To make myself clear and to show the extent of this work, I shall quote from a recent publication of the Department of the Interior:

Purpose: The Reclamation Service, organized in July, 1902, under the reclamation act of June 17, 1902 (32 Stat. 388), is engaged at present in the investigation, construction, and operation of about 30 irrigation projects aggregating about 3,200,000 acres in area located in the 17 arid and semiarid States of the far West, including the States of Arizona, California, Colorado, Idaho, Kansas, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Dakota, Utah, Washington, Wyoming, and Texas. The funds for this work come largely from the sale of public lands, and the money expended is returned to the fund by easy payments of settlers, usually in 20 annual installments without interest, in accordance with the reclamation extension act of August 13, 1914. The money thus forms a revolving fund for the construction of additional works.

Constructive results: The service has built on the 30 projects thus far approved by the Secretary of the Interior over 12,500 miles of canals, ditches, and drains, including 100,000 canal structures and involving the excavation of 175,000,000 cubic yards of materials. In connection with this work there have been constructed 100 storage and diversion dams, including the Arrowrock Dam, 349 feet high, the highest in the world; the Elephant Butte Dam on the Rio Grande, forming the largest irrigation reservoir in the United States, of 2,600,000 acre-feet capacity; and the longest roller-crest dam in the world, located on the Grand River in Colorado. In connection with this work the service has built 95 tunnels, 1,000 miles of road, 83 miles of railroad, 3,200 miles of telephone line, a dozen power plants, and 650 miles of transmission lines, and is also mining coal and has manufactured 1,676,000 barrels of cement and sand cement. The total expenditures to date are about $150,000,000.

Agricultural results: At the present time over 100,000 persons are living on the 28,000 farms being irrigated by the service, and the value of the crops in 1919 on the 1,100,000 acres cropped was about $88,000,000. In addition, the value of crops grown on land served from the works of the Reclamation Service under Warren Act contracts, and from which crop statistics were not obtainable, would bring the total value to over $138,000,000. About 3,200,000 acres of land (65,000 farms) will be irrigated on the completion of the Reclamation Service projects proper. A State has already been added to the Union from an agricultural standpoint, and there are springing up in what was but recently a "desert" hundreds of happy, contented, and prosperous communities as a result of the work of this service.

Incidentally, I may call attention to the fact that we have an opportunity of furnishing employment to thousands of people.

A PAYING INVESTMENT.

The Government owns vast stretches of desert lands in all of the Western States. The average value of these lands prior to 1902, and even to-day, would not exceed $10 per acre. Government irrigation has increased the value of these project lands $200 per acre. The increase in the price received for State lands included in the projects, and now mostly disposed of, has been at least $3,000,000, which revenue has gone almost entirely to the State. I doubt whether any other place in the United States where Government money has been invested can make a showing equal or anything like approaching the net results following the expenditure of Government appropriation on these projects.

There is another feature that is worthy of attention. It is easily shown from statistics that the average gross product of agricultural crops on reclamation projects, and, indeed, on irrigated lands, is just about double the average yield from nonirrigated lands in the United States. In other words, it means that the same amount of produce can be obtained from a 40-acre tract under irrigation as from an 80-acre tract in regions that are not irrigated. Of course, it requires more labor per acre, but much less labor in proportion to the amount of crop harvested. Encouraging, as this does, intensive cultivation and smaller farms, it naturally results in a greater centralization of population. This results in the advantages of larger schools and all of the other benefits of more thickly settled regions and yet insures to the people the advantages of country life. The social life and the better local government that grow up under conditions where these superior advantages obtain is not the least of the many blessings flowing from reclamation of arid lands.

It has been truthfully said:

It is the unthinking, the uninformed, who would speak of the possibilities of overproduction. Our population is growing so fast we can hardly keep up with food supplies for home consumption, and it will be a sad day for America when we cease to be an export nation. Besides, the products of this climate are largely different from what you raise elsewhere. The family sugar bowl is always hungry for our beets, and with butter already coming from overseas in ship-cargo lots, you need our alfalfa in dairy products, as well as meat.

But what of grain? Will not these new wheat fields hurt the farmers of the Middle West? Friends, we ourselves use now 650,000,000 of the 800,000,000 bushels of wheat raised in the United States, which means that we have only one loaf in five left for the world's market basket. You know it is a crime to talk of overproduction when half of the world is starving and children in every city of our own United States are suffering by thousands for lack of food. The problem of congested markets lies along other lines than overproduction.

Remember ever that we are all one family; that what hinders or hurts one harms all.

RECLAMATION AND EX-SERVICE MEN.

In the discussion of adjusted compensation laws it has been contended by some that the ex-service man does not want to return to the farm. That this contention is not borne out by the facts may be easily seen from a recent report of the North Platte project land opening, details of which are found in the Reclamation Record of October, 1921, written by Dr. C. J. Blanchard, chief statistician of the United States Reclamation Service:

The second opening of Government irrigated lands on the North Platte for ex-service men and women occurred on September 9 at Torrington, Wyo., and, like the first opening in the spring of 1920, was an unqualified success. War veterans to the number of 3,436 and registering from 36 States, the District of Columbia, and Canada, filed water-right applications for the 224 farms. In auto, prairie schooner, Pullman, day coach, airplane, on horseback, and on foot, the hosts of land-hungry hordes flocked to the bustling little city of Torrington, in the wonder valley of the North Platte.

Men, many of them bearing the cruel marks of service on the historic battle fields of France, but most of them were strong, vigorous, and manly young Americans. All were cheerful, wishful home seekers, and their journey was to secure, if possible, a place in which to build their home and to provide for their dear ones and to fulfill the part that they were to play as American citizens as best they knew how.

More than half the entries were filed between Thursday afternoon and Friday morning at 9 o'clock, the closing hour. During the last 24 hours 2,136 applications were recorded and the Reclamation Service employees were rushed to the limit. The unlucky applicants voiced their disappointment mildly and each expressed the hope that future openings would be far larger areas with correspondingly greater chance for winning a farm.

Ex-service men are anxious to get farms, and over 14,000 disabled veterans are now training for agricultural pursuits under the direction of the War Veterans' Bureau.

This problem is vital to the future growth and development of all that vast area of land lying west of the Mississippi River. For a number of years there has been a great deal of talk concerning conservation. Theoretically we are all conservationists in that we want to avoid the waste of public property, but is it wise or economical to continue to hold from the public vast tracts of land at a nominal value which can be made the most rich and productive part of our entire country? A comparatively small investment to-day yields a hundredfold to-morrow. In the State which I have the honor to represent in part there is less than 25 per cent of the lands upon our tax rolls. Vast areas of land now practically worthless only await the magic touch of water to become the finest farms in the world. Almost untold wealth lies in our public lands; it is our duty to develop that wealth; we can do it only through reclamation.

UTAH PROJECTS.

I was amazed soon after coming to Congress to find a general sentiment that there were no favorable reclamation projects in Utah. Only a hasty investigation has shown that there are at least five or six feasible projects with a total acreage of over 1,000,000 acres, and I am sure that careful investigation will reveal a great many more. There may be a difference of opinion at this time as to whether we should enact the so-called Smith-McNary bill independently, or whether substantially its provisions should be attached to the so-called soldiers' bonus bill. It does not matter to us which one of these ways are taken. We are concerned with the results, and I feel sure that a careful study of the speeches that have been made upon the floor of this House, showing the great purchases that are made from manufacturing districts and shipped to these projects, will easily convince the Members from all sections that this is a great national policy worthy of the best efforts of every part of this country.

EXAMPLE OF RESULTS OBTAINED.

In addition to what has been heretofore on this floor so ably said, may I briefly quote from a letter recently sent out by the Western States Reclamation Association in which the following facts are set forth and which were taken from the records of the Southern Pacific and the Atchison, Topeka & Santa Fe Railways:

The surprising thing about the following figures is that they relate to just a little patch on the map of our glorious country—a patch which a few years ago was a cactus waste, the home of the centipede and wild dog, but to-day is a bountiful scene, where the orange, the lime, and the vine thrive, and beautiful habitations dot one of the fairest landscapes in all America. Just grasp the full significance of the fact that the people on less than 250,000 acres of irrigated land, in the main a Federal reclamation project and being almost supported thereby, receive each year from the outside 7,935 carloads of commodities; while the less-than-carload lots received run into the millions of dollars in value; and these are from sections engaged in the manufacture of the more expensive and less bulky wares.

Congressmen from Wisconsin, Salt River Valley is buying in your State 213 carloads of products each year. Do you realize that this is far more than the people of Wisconsin buy from the whole State of Arizona? Does such an exchange injure the farmers of your State?

Two hundred and fifty thousand acres of irrigated land in the extreme Southwest have a trade from the outside running into the millions of dollars each year, and 20,000,000 acres of like land await the irrigation ditch. What an opportunity to increase the home market! Which is better for our ex-service men and our country in general, the reclamation of these broad waste acres or the rehabilitation of a yet belligerent Europe?

The Smith-McNary bill if enacted into law will not only reclaim these arid wastes but millions of acres of swamp and overflowed land so generally distributed throughout the United States.

GOOD HOMES BEST ASSET OF NATION.

Mr. Chairman, in conclusion may I briefly refer to another phase of this question? I know that in this cold matter-of-fact world, and particularly in discussing the business before this Congress, we are little given to a consideration of the sentimental side of any question; but I do not think that that fact in any way lessens its importance. In my humble judgment one of the crying needs of the hour is that more sentiment shall be injected into the business world and into Governments themselves. It can not be denied that there is widespread unrest and a desire in many parts of the world for an entire new social structure. There are no more contented people in all the world than home owners and home builders. If there is unrest and dissatisfaction among the boys who so nobly rallied to the defense of our country in time of war, give them the hope of a home—a chance to get a little of the earth's surface that they may call their home; let them feel the endearing ties of a place that in its truest sense is their home, and I venture that much, if not all, of this unrest and dissatisfaction will disappear. After every war our Government has concerned itself in directing the attention of its people to its lands. It has always encouraged home building. The easy available tracts of land are gone. The only source left is for us to turn our attention to the reclamation of arid lands and to the draining of swamp lands. It is economical; it is a paying investment and in no sense an expense, because in addition to increasing a hundredfold the wealth of a nation, every dollar loaned by the Government is paid back with interest. We have the privilege now not only of making this splendid investment but in assuring happy and contented homes for the people of America, and thereby more firmly strengthen the bulwalk of our liberty and insuring the perpetuity of the institutions of our great Government, so devoutly to be desired. It is the duty of a Government to give its citizens a chance to get homes and to possess them in safety. Here is a chance to perform a duty.

Some one has said: "The Persian and Chaldean Empires were founded on irrigation; the splendor of old Peru was fed by irrigation; Nile's great gift to Egypt is but crude, rudimentary, natural irrigation." When I tell you, and truly, that all these wonders are dwarfed—that the hanging gardens of Babylon, the temples of the Incas, are but trinkets, the fellahins' clumsy cultivation after the footsteps of Father Nile but a mud pie compared with the practical irrigation possibilities of your own Westland—perhaps you may grasp a little clearer concept of what this development will mean to our whole Nation. Does not your heart beat a little faster with pride at the splendid courage and vision of it? Do you not want to help us fill all these deserts with roses and the laughter of happy children?

Reclamation is the hope of the future. A happy and contented people the reward for its achievement. We can not refuse nor hesitate longer to pursue a course fraught with such possibilities and blessings.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, how does the time stand?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from California has 24 minutes remaining.

Mr. RAKER. And how much has the other side?

The CHAIRMAN. Eleven minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee do now rise in order that the gentleman from Michigan may present a conference report.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill H. R. 12022, had come to no resolution thereon.

NAVAL APPROPRIATION BILL.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill H. R. 11228, the naval appropriation bill, to disagree to all the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 11228) making appropirations for the Navy Department and naval service for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Michigan asks unanimous consent to disagree to all the Senate amendments and agree to the conference asked by the Senate. Is there objection?

Mr. CRISP. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the chairman if he has consulted with the minority Members or with Mr. GARRETT about this?

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. I have not. I did not think it would be necessary——

Mr. CRISP. I am not going to object.

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan. It is an oversight on my part.

Mr. CRISP. I am not going to object.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none. The Clerk will announce the conferees.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. KELLEY of Michigan, Mr. FRENCH, Mr. MADDEN, Mr. BYRNES of South Carolina, and Mr. OLIVER.

NATURALIZATION AND CITIZENSHIP OF MARRIED WOMEN.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12022.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the consideration of the bill H. R. 12022, with Mr. TOWNER in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. The House is in Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H. R. 12022, which the Clerk will report by title.

The Clerk read as follows:

A bill (H. R. 12022) relative to the naturalization and citizenship of married women.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, how does the time now stand?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman has 11 minutes.

Mr. VAILE. How much time has the gentleman from California?

The CHAIRMAN. Twenty-four minutes.

Mr. VAILE. Will the gentleman from California yield some time?

Mr. RAKER. I understand the gentleman has one more speech.

Mr. VAILE. One more.

Mr. RAKER. I will yield out of my time 4 minutes to the gentleman from Colorado so that he may have 15 minutes for the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

Mr. VAILE. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I am not going to take up much of your time at this time. There is no one on the Democratic side who is opposed to this legislation; it is unanimous. I am sorry on the other side my Republican friends have not been able to make as good a showing. We believe in carrying out our platform pledge on this question, but I really believe those who have been making points of order and talking against it when it comes to voting are going to see their way clear; they can not help it. I promised to answer the gentleman, always clear in his questions before, but I did not know how the time stood, and therefore I did not answer, and I shall answer it now, as I think it is important. On page 2 of the bill, lines 15 to 17, is the following language:

If at the termination of the marital status she is a citizen of the United States, she shall retain her citizenship regardless of her residence.

Under the law as it now exists if it were not for that the woman abroad would not retain her American citizenship under this bill. It is intended, irrespective of the place of residence upon the termination of that citizenship, she may have American citizenship before automatically, under the present bill, she returns and applies for naturalization.

Mr. VAILE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will.

Mr. VAILE. Do I understand the gentleman is under the impression that when a woman citizen of the United States marries an alien under existing law that there is any question about her citizenship?

Mr. RAKER. Yes. If she does not return to the United States and does not make a declaration, she continues to be an alien. Just as a matter of courtesy to myself—and my bashfulness almost prevents me from referring to it—I will say that a bill introduced by myself contains practically all of the provisions of this bill in order to try to carry out the purposes and objects and declarations of the Democratic platform. Of course, I recognize that the minority could not report any bills when the majority is in charge; that we may give all the work and labor we can to gentlemen honestly and faithfully trying to formulate legislation.

I introduced my bill on this subject on April 29, 1921, H. R. 5525, Sixty-seventh Congress, first session, found on page 587 of hearing under date of June 8, 1922, and is as follows:

The CHAIRMAN. I will also insert a bill introduced some time ago by Mr. RAKER, of this committee. His bill contains some slightly different provisions to cure defects. I think the draft of the Cable bill cures some of these defects. Others can be cured by the committee when we read the bill under consideration for amendment. Judge RAKER'S bill follows:

[H. R. 5525, 67th Cong., 1st sess.]

A bill relative to the naturalization and citizenship of married women.

Be it enacted, etc., That any woman citizen of the United States who hereafter, being then a resident of and residing in the United States, marries an alien, who may be lawfully naturalized, shall retain her American citizenship so long as she continues to reside in the United States, unless she makes in writing a formal renunciation of said citizenship before a court having jurisdiction of naturalization proceedings. If at the termination of the marital status she is a citizen of the United States, she shall retain such citizenship regardless of her residence. If during the continuance of the marital status she resides continuously for two years in a foreign country of which her husband is a citizen or subject, or for five years continuously outside of the United States, she shall thereafter be subject to the same presumption as is a naturalized citizen of the United States under the second paragraph of section 2 of the act entitled "An act in reference to the expatriation of citizens and their protection abroad," approved March 2, 1907.

SEC. 2. That any woman citizen of the United States who hereafter, being then a nonresident, marries an alien, and any such woman citizen, whether or not a resident of the United States, who hereafter marries an alien, who may not be lawfully naturalized, shall cease to be a citizen of the United States.

SEC. 3. That any woman who has heretofore ceased to be a citizen of the United States by reason of her marriage to an alien, who may be lawfully naturalized, may, if then a bona fide resident of and residing in the United States, file a petition for naturalization prescribed by law without making the preliminary declaration of intention required of other aliens, and upon due and satisfactory proof to the court may be admitted to citizenship of the United States upon complying in all respects with the other requirements of the naturalization law. If thereafter, during the continuance of the marital status, she resides continuously for two years in a foreign country of which her husband is a citizen or subject, or for five years continuously outside of the United States, she shall thenceforward be subject to the same presumption as is a naturalized citizen of the United States under the second paragraph of section 2 of said act approved March 2, 1907.

SEC. 4. That an alien woman who hereafter marries a citizen of the United States shall not derive United States citizenship by reason of the fact of such marriage.

SEC. 5. That an alien woman shall not derive United States citizenship by the naturalization of or resumption of citizenship by her husband after the passage of this act.

SEC. 6. That any woman who heretofore acquired United States citizenship by marriage to a citizen of the United States or by naturalization of or resumption of United States citizenship by her husband shall retain such American citizenship.

SEC. 7. That the right of any woman to become a naturalized citizen of the United States shall not be denied or abridged because of her sex or because she is a married woman.

I know the chairman of the committee, if it were necessary to state it, and my colleagues Judge Box and Judge WILSON and myself have been constantly in attendance and giving assistance to this legislation, as well as others in the committee, trying to make it workable the best we could. I think it is the duty of every man. It is not a party proposition. It is a question of results. That is my attitude on this legislation or any other. There is only one kind of partisan legislation that comes before Congress, and that is the question sometimes of a roll call, whether or not a certain man shall be seated because he has run as a Democrat or a Republican, and that involves a question of politics. Ordinarily we are trying to legislate the best we can for the country and the people.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will yield to the distinguished gentleman.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I am almost inclined not to ask the question after that. I want to get the committee's interpretation of lines 15 and 16 on page 2.

Mr. RAKER. I gave that to you, but you were out. I explained it fully to the satisfaction of the chairman and my distinguished associates. Ordinarily the gentleman from Texas is here; it is an exception when he is not.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I am not really sorry that I asked the gentleman the question now.

Mr. RAKER. That is all right.

There is only one inharmonious thing that has occurred to-day in this legislation, and I know the distinguished gentleman did not mean it. It was the argument made many years ago and continued up until the adoption of the nineteenth amendment. But we have not heard any of that argument since until to-day, from the distinguished gentleman, in regard to the fact that the women did not compare in intelligence with men. Lord bless you men, I supposed that the theory and that idea had been exploded years ago, particularly in America. One of the misfortunes is that there are fewer young men attending our high schools and our colleges than there are women, because of the fact that our people have been negligent in it and are failing to see that the American boy is receiving the same kind and character of education that our American girls are receiving. They ought to wake up, and there ought not to be any difference. The American girls for the last 10 years have been outstripping the boys in the schools, because the boys are not attending school as they should. Both ought to be given equal opportunity. And everyone that has the opportunity ought to attend, and no man can honestly and consistently say that the American woman is not equal both in knowledge and capability to the man. So you have said in this bill. It is a wise provision, for many reasons. There has been an attempt before the committee to permit naturalizations, not in open court, not to require witnesses to attend, and I want to tell you it is one time in a man's life that he ought to be able to lay down his work and go to the courthouse with his witnesses when he is being given the opportunity for that citizenship that many men have laid down their lives for. And yet we find people now saying that he ought not to give up his time in order to receive this great benefit and this wonderful opportunity and privilege.

Mr. LOWREY. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I will be glad to do so.

Mr. LOWREY. I would like to put this into the RECORD: Last night I attended a high-school graduation. I think there were six girls graduated to one boy who graduated.

Mr. RAKER. I have observed it for years.

Mr. LOWREY. I stated I had been attending such exercises for 10 or 20 years, and that is generally almost the proportion—3 or 6 or 7 girls to 1 boy graduating in the high schools.

Mr. RAKER. But there are as many young men of that age as there are girls.

Mr. LOWREY. I guess so.

Mr. RAKER. Then, as a matter of fact, it is an indictment against our institutions and against the men in power, to allow a condition that permits three young American girls to graduate and only one boy. When there are six altogether, two are not receiving that benefit. It requires a little more care and consideration to keep the standard up equally on both sides and give them both the same education, which means opportunity. It will make our Government stronger; it will make our city and State and National Government stronger by saying and requiring of them that they both shall receive equal and coordinate education.

What I wanted to say, and what I wanted to impress upon these men with relation to this bill is, to my mind, one of the best things in it, that an alien woman, who is married to an alien who can be naturalized but does not, may enter the courthouse upon her petition; that she may have the opportunity—and may compel her employer to yield a sufficient time from her work without taking it from her pay, if she is working—to go to the courthouse where the opportunity is presented to her to become an American citizen, that she may for a few moments forget what my friend from Wisconsin says, that she is so overburdened with her duties with her family that she does not even have time to be naturalized.

That idea of American womanhood in this country ought to be forgotten, namely, that because she is a mother she should be so bound down to her duties on the farm or at her home in the city that she can not even have an opportunity to go to the courthouse to become naturalized; that you want to make her a beast of burden all the time, without any opportunity to see God's sunlight, or to get some of the benefits of civilization and an opportunity to better herself and better her children, so that she may go home and give them some of the inspiration that she herself is trying to drink in and obtain by virtue of that association. So I think the committee on that point alone, saying nothing else, will have accomplished a wonderful move forward when they will be able to say to over a million alien women that can not be naturalized now, that they will be given an opportunity to be naturalized under this law and to go to the courthouse with their witnesses and become naturalized and become American citizens, irrespective of the sluggish, un-American, lazy husbands, who do not want to take the time and opportunity to give their wives American citizenship. We will eliminate that class, and they will wake up when mother begins to take an active part, and they will wake up further when daughter and sons will begin to realize that mother has an interest in citizenship and has the right to vote. Father will wake up and take a bath and put on decent clothes and go with mother and become naturalized and become an asset instead of a liability in this country. There is only one danger in this country now, and that is the Bolshevists within the confines of the United States that are ready and willing to tear down the country. We want to eliminate them as fast as we can.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I was much interested in the gentleman's statement. It is really an indictment of our institutions when three girls are graduated in school and only one boy.

Mr. RAKER. And when there are as many boys as girls.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. How is the gentleman going to eliminate it—by saying that only one girl should graduate?

Mr. RAKER. Did I make myself so poorly understood that the gentleman conceives the idea that there was a limitation? What I was trying to convey, and I will repeat it again——

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. Just a moment.

Mr. RAKER. I want to state this, that the fathers and mothers of these boys and girls ought to make the surroundings such that every boy in the community who is able and capable should go to the grammar and high schools instead of loafing on some street corner or going to some place to swim when he should be in school. Send them both. Give them both the opportunity.

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. That is what I was getting at. I was wondering, however, how the gentleman was going to make them equal.

Mr. RAKER. Oh, you can not make the boy equal to the girl. I admit that. [Laughter.]

Mr. CONNALLY of Texas. I was just wondering, when the gentleman said a moment ago that that old feeling that the women were not equal to the men had been exploded—I was wondering whether he would admit, on the other hand, that the intelligence and mental qualities of the men equaled those of the women. He does not admit that, does he?

Mr. RAKER. I want to answer that. I think when you give them both an equal opportunity that, except for the difference in sex, they are equal, only I like the women better than the men; that is all. [Laughter.]

Mr. DENISON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield.

Mr. DENISON. Under this bill if an American woman marries an alien who can not be naturalized, she immediately becomes an alien?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. DENISON. She loses her citizenship?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; but she can attain it by her husband's accidental death or by divorce.

Mr. DENISON. But if a man marries a woman who can not be naturalized, he does not lose his citizenship. Why do you not treat them both alike?

Mr. RAKER. We are doing so.

Mr. DENISON. You are not by this bill.

Mr. RAKER. That is a different proposition altogether.

Mr. DENISON. I think you ought to treat them both alike.

Mr. RAKER. The man has always had his right of citizenship. The men have dominated the thing from the beginning. They have been the lords of creation.

Mr. DENISON. I am talking about the question as it is now.

Mr. RAKER. The women have been denied their rights. We want to equalize them as nearly as we can.

Mr. DENISON. But you are not doing that in this bill. If a woman marries a foreigner, she can be naturalized, but if a man marries an alien he can not be naturalized.

Mr. LOWREY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. LOWREY. I want to make it plain to the Republican majority that if they do not regulate that matter of the inequality of numbers among the boys and girls in schools, I am going to vote the Democratic ticket next fall and do all I can to carry my district for the Democratic candidate. [Laughter.]

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I yield 15 minutes to the gentleman from Washington [Mr. JOHNSON].

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, the germ at the heart of this bill has been before Congress for 12 years at least. In the Sixty-second Congress it came up as a motion to amend the expatriation clauses of the naturalization act. The hearings conducted at that time were illuminating. The privilege was claimed on the demand of certain States which then had suffrage for women. Bills were on two occasions sent to the floor of the House from the Committee on Foreign Affairs. Attempts made to pass them by unanimous consent failed. No effort was made to pass them by vote. In the meantime the enactment of the nineteenth amendment had so broadened the scope of suffrage that this legislation becomes necessary from two important angles, namely, the rights of American women married to aliens and the protection of the ballot against women brought into citizenship as wives of naturalized citizens.

As is well known to Members, the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization for some time have had under consideration a plan for the general recodification of the naturalization laws of the United States. The provisions of this particular bill as introduced by the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. CABLE] are found in quite different language in the so-called omnibus bill, and in that bill are elaborate provisions attempting to define the status of children under the various conditions that might arise. For some time it has been apparent that the bill was too involved and that it carried too many provisions. Therefore I am glad that the particular details relating to the naturalization and citizenship of women have been brought out separately.

I think that there will be no need for the amendment of section 5 of the expatriation act, as suggested by the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. STAFFORD] in the early part of this debate, where the word "parent" is used. The reading of that law now is that in the event of the death of the father the mother is held to be the parent. I think there will be no difficulty in that phase of it with reference to the nationality of the children. As it is now all present laws as to nationality of children will stand.

The Cable bill, which is now before you, has been carefully gone over in the committee. It has been rewritten two or three times, and we have two or three perfecting amendments to present. I have come to a complete indorsement of plans outlined in this bill with much caution. I recognize the great principle, now recognized by all of us, that American-born women who marry aliens should not lose their rights—certainly not in the United States; but I happen to be one of those old-fashioned individuals who thinks that marriage should not be like an old shoe, to be put on and off, and I know that citizenship should not be like another old shoe, to be put on and off. We have tried to avoid provisions which might let an American woman put her citizenship on and off at will. We have adopted the State Department's suggestion of not introducing the question of residence.

With regard to separate naturalization of wives of aliens who become naturalized we have adopted what we call a short form of naturalization for the wives—one year's residence. The full naturalization process would require five years' residence, and when the husband became naturalized the wife—if the long process were required—would be left for five years a woman without a country.

There has been some discussion of dual nationality. But as long as we create citizens by law, and expatriate by law, and as long as we have aliens, we will have problems of dual nationality. This bill when it becomes the law will not change that situation.

Mr. Chairman, I approve and desire to praise the remarks of my colleague the gentleman from New York [Mr. SIEGEL] on this particular bill and the necessity for it. True naturalization is what we seek for the aliens now here. We do not desire enforced citizenship to be thrust upon aliens, either men or women. My desire and purpose is not that too many shall come to the United States while we are taking care of those now here. To make it possible to bring properly into citizenship under uniform and just laws a large part of the 6,000,000 aliens now here is our real task. And that is why the committee has been trying to write a new naturalization code.

THE OMNIBUS NATURALIZATION BILL.

Mr. Chairman, the omnibus naturalization bill, the new naturalization code, is having its troubles. I notice in this morning's Associated Press dispatches that at the great annual gathering of the American Federation of Labor the omnibus naturalization bill, designed to make naturalization easier and simpler for the 6,000,000 aliens in the country, designed to lead them on to where they belong, in the possession of full citizenship, is pointed out and criticized as a "legislative absurdity." The alleged "absurdity," my friends, comes because in that bill it is proposed to register the aliens in the United States not for the purpose of espionage but for the purpose of an orderly progress toward the naturalization of those who qualify for citizenship. In another body a similar bill has been introduced carrying all the paragraphs which represent the work of the various members of the House Committee on Immigration and Naturalization, but with the fee fixed in the measure pending in the other body placed at the sum of $24, a sum so large that I doubt if either body would consider it for any length of time or give many votes to the proposal. The fee fixed in the House omnibus naturalization bill is placed at $5.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. In a moment.

I have no quarrel with the American Federation of Labor. When its president, Samuel Gompers, is gone he will be missed by those who fail now to recognize the good that he has done and is doing by "sitting on the lid" against the spread of radicalism, internationalism, one big unionism, and revolutionary notions generally. I have had numerous letters from the president of the American Federation of Labor, Mr. Gompers, indorsing certain of my work here, particularly with reference to the present restriction of immigration. I am proud of those letters.

The American Federation of Labor pointed out many years ago the great flaw which hindered the progress of the United States was the permitting of great hordes of nonassimilable aliens to come pouring into the United States to take the jobs and keep down the wages of Americans. That organization led the fight and I am glad it did, and I am proud to stand on this floor and say that we now have a law which checks and holds up and restricts immigration.

That organization has a right to criticize the new naturalization code. In due time its legislative delegates will come before the Committee on Immigration with their criticisms in detail and their suggestions for improvement. But regardless of the Federation's present criticism, I note that many others who oppose any registration of aliens in the United States—notably the foreign-language press—have some reason for opposing it other than those reasons that they put forth. I notice that the foreign-language press leads in the opposition.

In my opinion, the objection of the foreign-language press to the registration features is largely a smoke-screen objection, their real objection being to that phase of the naturalization bill requiring those aliens coming here in the future to come with certain certificates. Your committee has discovered that in an immigration law we can not very well, under the present treaties, provide for this examination overseas that the whole American public calls for. We can not go into another country and set up a United States establishment for the examination of people desiring to come here, unless we first obtain the consent of that government; but in a naturalization act we can provide that those who come here, whom we hope and believe will some day come into American citizenship, shall come here with such credentials as we may designate by law. Many aliens desire to come without credentials, and therein lies the basic objection of some people against the whole new naturalization code.

In addition, I note that some organizations which object to the registration of aliens by the people of the United States themselves do a pretty neat job of alien registration and fee collecting. It is fair for them to do it, they think, but they also think that it would be un-American for Uncle Sam to do it. I wonder why.

The Saturday Evening Post this very week has something editorially to say along that line which is quite to the point. I quote:

[From the Saturday Evening Post, June 24, 1922.]

AMERIKANSKI AGAIN.

There is no more galling reading in the daily press than the well-displayed interviews with aliens and hyphenates who resent every effort made by Congress to protect our own people from the wholesale invasion of European slum dwellers. When the extension of the 3 per cent law was under discussion, aliens in every city took pen in hand to denounce it as "un-American." When a proposal was made in the House to require aliens to register, aliens again rose to brand the bill as "un-American." Strangely enough, all over the country there were editors, well-meaning and patriotic citizens, who allowed their columns to be used for the dissemination of this propaganda. Americans and Americans only are entitled to say what is "American" and what is "un-American."

Mr. Chairman, I do not care to use all the time allotted to me. Those who will do me the honor to read in the RECORD the remarks I made recently on this floor will find there my views as to whether that registration shall be arbitrary or voluntary; also a general statement as to our program of immigration legislation. I ask unanimous consent to place in the RECORD at a later date translations of foreign-language newspaper editorials in regard to naturalization, registration, and other matters of the kind.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Washington asks unanimous consent to extend his remarks as indicated. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Will the gentleman yield for a question?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes; with pleasure.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I had occasion to hear the gentleman's remarks the other day, and later I read very carefully the printed report, and the question arose in my mind as to why the gentleman took the census of 1910 as the basis for admitting the 3 per cent.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It is immaterial what figure one takes. The later the figure and the more the immigrants in the country the less the quota.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. There is another point. The gentleman designated the number of 600 as a base quota for all countries, and then used 2 per cent instead of 3. What is the object in that?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Of course, that is my view. I am only one member of a committee of 15, and I am one Member of a great House of Representatives of 435.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. I think it is a good way to adjust it——

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. But I wondered why the gentleman took those particular figures.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. I would not care whether it was 600 or 1,200. Whatever the quota is based upon, the guaranteeing of a base quota does away with petty bookkeeping in human beings.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. And the object is to limit the number who come?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes. The gross number to be admitted would be much less.

By unanimous consent, leave to extend remarks on the bill was granted to Mr. VOLK.

The extension of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. VOLK. Mr. Speaker, the naturalization and citizenship of married women has claimed the attention of the public during the past few years as never before. Numerous bills embodying the principle of independent citizenship, but differing somewhat in their provisions, have been presented in Congress. The difference between these has not been in the principle, but in the determination and solving of the complicated and perplexing questions of dual citizenship, the nationality of children, conflicting property and inheritance rights, and so forth.

The nation-wide adoption of woman's suffrage permitting the exercise of the elective franchise by hundreds of thousands of women, many of them citizens merely because of their marital state and without regard to any other qualifications, at once opened up a wide field for serious thought. The effects of the World War upon the status of American women who had married aliens and thereby lost their citizenship, the attending ostracism and injustices visited upon them, are too recent to need description in detail. They serve but to accentuate the importance of this needed legislation.

Under existing law when an alien woman marries an American citizen she instantly becomes an American citizen, entitled to all the rights and privileges attendant upon that citizenship. Conversely, when an American woman marries an alien she immediately loses her citizenship and takes the nationality of her husband. Under the existing law an alien married woman can not apply for naturalization independent of her husband, no matter how fit she may be or regardless of the length of residence in the United States.

It is now proposed to change all this. Both the Republican and Democratic Parties in 1920 at their national conventions inserted planks in their platforms indorsing the principles of independent citizenship for women. The following women's organizations have favored it: American Association of University Women, Business and Professional Women's Clubs, Council of Jewish Women, Daughters of the American Revolution, General Federation of Womens' Clubs, National League of Women Voters, National Women's Trade Union League, Women's Christian Temperance Union.

Briefly, the change from the present status regarding citizenship for women would be as follows:

(a) It would permit alien married women who are desirous and are qualified to become American citizens to apply for naturalization.

(b) It would change the present law, which confers citizenship upon an alien woman by reason of marriage with an American citizen and require a residence of one year within the United States, filing a petition, and compliance with all the requirements of the naturalization laws as to qualifications, and so forth, for citizenship.

(c) It would preserve the status as a citizen of an American woman who marries an alien, unless she formally renounced it before a court having jurisdiction over naturalization of aliens or lived for two years in the country of her husband's allegiance or for five years in any other foreign country. The last two are the same presumptions as now apply to naturalized citizens of the United States.

If an American woman married an alien who is ineligible for citizenship, she would cease to be a citizen. The bill further provides for the naturalization of a woman who has heretofore lost her citizenship because of marriage to an alien but who was eligible to citizenship.

The status of children is not affected by the provisions of the new bill. As before, those born here are citizens of the United States regardless of the allegiance of the parents; those born abroad take the nationality of the father.

That the wife takes her identity from her husband is an ancient principle of our jurisdiction. It was reiterated in the opinion of Mr. Justice McKenna in the decision rendered in the United States Supreme Court in the case of McKenzie versus Hare in 1907. The doctrine that a wife has no property rights, that a wife has no control over the children, that a woman has no rights in the matter of franchise, has been materially changed in the last few years. The tendency has been toward extending the rights of women and to place them on a plane of civil equality with men. The need has been accentuated by the passage of the nineteenth amendment to the Constitution, which states:

> The right of citizens of the United States to vote shall not be denied or abridged by the United States or by any State on account of sex.

The doctrine of dependent or derived citizenship has become archaic. The theory of independent citizenship for women is a good one, and this bill carries out in a practical manner the sound principles involved. It is progressivism in the right direction and will meet with the approval of the great masses of thinking Americans.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired, and the Clerk will read the bill.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent, in lieu of the committee amendment, to offer the following section as a substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent to offer an amendment in lieu of the committee amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, let us hear what the amendment is.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Pages 1 and 2, strike out all of section 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following:
> "SEC. 2. That any woman who marries a citizen of the United States after the passage of this act, or any woman whose husband is naturalized after the passage of this act, shall not become a citizen of the United States by reason of such marriage or naturalization; but, if eligible to citizenship, she may be naturalized upon full and complete compliance with all requirements of the naturalization laws, with the following exceptions:
> "(a) No declaration of intention shall be required.
> "(b) In lieu of the five-year period of residence within the United States and the one-year period of residence within the State or Territory where the naturalization court is held, she shall have resided continuously in the United States, Hawaii, Alaska, or Porto Rico for at least one year immediately preceding the filing of the petition."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Colorado?

Mr. WALSH. Reserving the right to object, I would like to ask the gentleman if this would permit a woman who lives in the United States, in different places for short periods of time, to count the total residence in an application to be naturalized?

Mr. VAILE. That is the purpose of the amendment I have offered in lieu of the original.

Mr. WALSH. Does the gentleman think that is wise?

Mr. VAILE. I think it is fair. The situation was this: Under the present law the alien woman becomes a citizen immediately on her marriage. We did not think it was fair to require the regular period of naturalization—five years, two years for declaration of intention and three years after that—and the reason we did not think it was fair is that she is living in family relations and presumably would be qualified for citizenship earlier than a woman who did not have that opportunity. In the second place, there would be a long wait when she would be virtually without a country, because after she had declared her intention to become a citizen her former country has disowned her. But we thought at least she should reside in the United States for one year. The preparation for citizenship involves something more than moral character, something more than a knowledge of the language; it involves, as we consider it, some familiarity with our institutions. This arbitrary period of one year was fixed at what we thought would be fair.

Mr. MANN. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAILE. Certainly.

Mr. MANN. Under the existing law if a woman marries an American citizen she at once becomes an American citizen.

Mr. VAILE. That is correct.

Mr. MANN. I understand the gentleman's amendment is so that under the new law the woman who marries an American citizen may at once file her application to become an American citizen——

Mr. VAILE. No; she can not file it for one year.

Mr. MANN. The gentleman did not wait until I finished the question—if she had lived in the United States one year, without requiring her to move back to the place where she came from, and requiring her to live apart from her husband in order to secure naturalization in the district where she had lived.

Mr. VAILE. The gentleman has stated it more accurately than I did.

Mr. MANN. The purpose is to let her live with her husband while making the application for citizenship.

Mr. VAILE. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. I notice the language of the gentleman's amendment begins "any woman who marries a citizen of the United States after the passage of this act, or any woman whose husband is naturalized after the passage of this act, shall not become a citizen of the United States by reason of such marriage or naturalization." I do not think it affects the meaning in the least, but I wondered if it would not be more instantly apparent what the purpose of the language was if you inserted before the word "woman" in each place the word "alien."

Mr. VAILE. No; and the reason for that is this: Of course, this does not affect any woman but an alien woman. We do not want it to affect all alien women. If we say any alien woman who marries a citizen may become naturalized, that would apply to certain alien women who are not eligible as citizens.

Mr. ROGERS. But the first clause is in the negative, "any woman who marries a citizen of the United States shall not become a citizen," and so forth. Why not say any alien woman, so as to make it clear?

Mr. VAILE. A Filipino woman is not an alien woman, neither is she a citizen of the United States.

Mr. ROGERS. What is she?

Mr. VAILE. I leave that to the gentleman; she owes permanent allegiance, but is not a citizen.

Mr. RAKER. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAILE. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. The gentleman from Illinois has clearly and succinctly stated what the committee believe they have accomplished by this amendment. The question of the gentleman from Massachusetts [Mr. ROGERS] is the same question that presented itself to me. He is right; it makes it clearer; but with an alien woman it makes no difference, because it is only alien women who will be affected. So, the committee this morning seemed to think we would strike out the word "alien."

Mr. ROGERS. I notice in the bill as reported you say "any woman who marries a citizen shall not become a citizen," and in the other place you say "any alien woman whose husband is naturalized shall not become a citizen."

Mr. RAKER. This leaves it just the same; it only as a matter of fact applies to alien women.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Chairman, I object.

Mr. VAILE. Then, Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment as a substitute for the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado offers a substitute for the committee amendment, which the Clerk will report.

Mr. MANN. No; it will be a substitute for the section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair calls the attention of the gentleman from Illinois to the fact that the committee amendment has been reported.

Mr. MANN. But it has not been voted on. After all, the other motion is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. It may be denominated as a substitute for the section. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

> Pages 1 and 2, strike out all of section 2 and insert in lieu thereof the following:
> "SEC. 2. That any woman who marries a citizen of the United States after the passage of this act, or any woman whose husband is naturalized after the passage of this act, shall not become a citizen of the United States by reason of such marriage or naturalization; but, if eligible to citizenship, she may be naturalized upon full and complete compliance with all requirements of the naturalization laws, with the following exceptions:

"(a) No declaration of intention shall be required.

"(b) In lieu of the five-year period of residence within the United States and the one-year period of residence within the State or Territory where the naturalization court is held, she shall have resided continuously in the United States, Hawaii, Alaska, or Porto Rico for at least one year immediately preceding the filing of the petition."

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, a parliamentary inquiry.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. LONDON. I sent an amendment to the original section to the desk. Ought not that to be voted on now?

The CHAIRMAN. If the gentleman desires to offer it. That is a perfecting amendment.

Mr. VAILE. That would not come before the committee amendment unless the amendment that I offer is voted down.

The CHAIRMAN. That is the observation the Chair made a few moments ago. The Chair is willing to follow out the desire of the committee, but it occurred to the Chair that the gentleman from New York should not be deprived of the right of having his perfecting amendment considered. The Clerk will report the perfecting amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. LONDON: Strike out the word "not," in line 10, page 1, insert a comma instead of a semicolon at the end of line 11, on page 1; strike out lines 1 to 7, inclusive, on page 2, and insert in lieu of the matter stricken out the following: "unless the woman makes a formal renunciation of United States citizenship before a court having jurisdiction over naturalization of aliens within 90 days after such marriage or such naturalization."

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, this bill comes now before the House under a special rule. The announcement made on Sunday giving the program for the week mentioned this bill as one of the things that would be taken up next Thursday. Many intricate problems of international law are involved in this legislation, many questions of principle.

I understand that this legislation is primarily the result of the desire of women to complete the work of political and civic emancipation, to secure the fullest and largest measure of liberty so as to place the individual, irrespective of sex, on a basis of equality in society. So far, so good, but what in the world has this proposition to do with the process of naturalization which presents an entirely different situation? It is a large subject in itself, which requires most careful study and thought. It is impossible to give the subject the proper degree of deliberation under a special rule which provides only two hours of general debate, without any time having been given to those who are opposed to the bill or to some features of it.

A woman who is an American by birth and who marries a foreigner retains her citizenship, unless she renounces it. I would give the same measure of equality to the alien woman who becomes the wife of an American citizen. I would have her become a citizen unless she renounces it; unless she declares her desire not to be a citizen of the United States. That is the object of my amendment. I do not want you, in order to satisfy a theoretical desire for liberty, to strike at liberty, to strike at hundreds of thousands, if not millions, of wives of the industrial workers, by placing new obstacles in the way of their enfranchisement. Nearly 60 per cent of the workers in the basic industries will be adversely affected by the proposed measure.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Just one moment, please. It is customary to attribute the greatness of every man to his mother, and in a large measure it is true. The character of the child is shaped by the mother. No school influence amounts to anything unless the home influence is healthy, moral, salutary, and there is no home for a child where there is no mother. The unity of the family should not be disturbed. The enfranchisement of a man should carry with it the enfranchisement of his wife unless she dissents. If the nineteenth amendment, the political enfranchisement of women, is to be given as a valid excuse for this legislation, then it would apply with the same validity and force to illiterate native men and women; it would apply with equal potency to all ignorant persons.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. Yes.

Mr. WALSH. If I understood the reading of the gentleman's amendment correctly, this section would read then that any woman eligible for citizenship, and so forth, shall become a citizen by reason of such marriage or naturalization, and then is added the provision that unless within 90 days she renounces her allegiance.

Mr. LONDON. Unless within 90 days she renounces United States citizenship. In other words, she becomes a citizen unless within 90 days she renounces her citizenship.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York has expired.

Mr. LONDON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for five minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. WALSH. How can a woman renounce anything that she has not got?

Mr. LONDON. She becomes a citizen by marriage or naturalization, and she may divest herself of it by formal renunciation in a court. That is the object of my amendment.

Mr. WALSH. Of course, that is saying that a woman shall become a citizen unless she renounces her citizenship.

Mr. LONDON. Yes; exactly. She becomes a citizen unless she refuses to do so. I am trying to conform myself to the high ideals proclaimed by women who speak of the right of woman to determine her citizenship.

Mr. WALSH. I appreciate that the gentleman is always struggling to conform to ideals, but he states here that the woman shall become a citizen unless she renounces her citizenship. I can not see how she can renounce something before she has acquired it.

Mr. LONDON. I believe I have expressed it clearly, and if I have not it is again because we have not been given the time to prepare properly. I say, "Unless the woman makes formal renunciation of United States citizenship before a court having jurisdiction over naturalization of aliens within 90 days after such marriage or such naturalization." Marriage to a citizen or naturalization of the husband confers citizenship upon the wife, but in order to give a woman that high degree of liberty which we are being assured is so essential to her salvation, she may within 90 days exercise the privilege of renouncing American citizenship.

Mr. WALSH. Would it not be more appropriate if within 90 days she claimed citizenship of some other country?

Mr. LONDON. That might be an improvement, but I believe the language of my amendment embodies the idea I have endeavored to express.

Mr. CHALMERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. I will.

Mr. CHALMERS. If the gentleman makes that provision for the woman, why not make the same provision for the man; the gentleman wants the laws uniform?

Mr. LONDON. Poor man does not want anything. This legislation is here primarily because the women want it. It is a piece of political candy that is being given to the women. That part of the bill which permits an American woman to retain her citizenship is not the thing I object to. I object to the poisoned candy you hand out to the millions of poor devils who are taking care of their children and of their husbands, and who make happy homes. It is the poisoned candy that I would like to see eliminated.

Mr. CHALMERS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LONDON. I do.

Mr. CHALMERS. Having the nineteenth amendment, which places women on the same footing with men, the laws governing naturalization should be about the same for both of them, should they not?

Mr. LONDON. The qualifying of the people for the understanding of American institutions should be the continuous task of statesmanship. There are millions of natives who can not read or write but who are the possessors of a good portion of common sense and of an unerring instinct for the right which some professors with the degree of doctor of philosophy do not possess. Victor Hugo makes one of the students of a graduating class say "the fact that I am a doctor of philosophy is not conclusive proof that I am a jackass."

In its present form this bill confers some benefit upon the select few and places at a disadvantage the many. It is a sad departure from the fundamental and wholesome policy of liberal naturalization which is as old as the Republic itself, and which has heretofore never been attacked, never been challenged, except during the brief frenzy of the alien and sedition law days or during the wave of Know Nothingism.

Instead of creating new difficulties the process of naturalization should be made more easy, so that every useful man or woman may share in the advantages of American citizenship.

It seems that this Congress can not move except backward.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The question was taken, and the Chair announced that the noes appeared to have it.

On a division (demanded by Mr. LONDON) there were—ayes 6, noes 63.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute for the section offered by the gentleman from Colorado.

The question was taken, and the substitute was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 3. That a woman citizen of the United States shall not cease to be a citizen of the United States by reason of her marriage after the passage of this act unless she makes a formal renunciation of her citizenship before a court having jurisdiction over naturalization of aliens: Provided, That any woman citizen who marries an alien ineligible to citizenship shall cease to be a citizen of the United States. If at the termination of the marital status she is a citizen of the United States she shall retain her citizenship regardless of her residence. If during the continuance of the marital status she resides continuously for two years in a foreign State of which her husband is a citizen or subject, or for five years continuously outside of the United States, she shall thereafter be subject to the same presumption as is a naturalized citizen of the United States under the second paragraph of section 2 of the act entitled "An act in reference to the expatriation of citizens and their protection abroad," approved March 2, 1907.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike out the section.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I have a perfecting amendment, if that is in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman can offer his perfecting amendment if he desires. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 2, line 8, strike out all of section 3.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the perfecting amendment of the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROGERS: Page 2, line 25, at the end of the paragraph add a new sentence, as follows:

"Nothing herein shall be construed to repeal or amend the provisions of Revised Statutes, 1999, or of section 2 of the expatriation act of 1907 with reference to expatriation."

The CHAIRMAN. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts desire to be heard?

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Chairman, a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. WALSH. If I understand correctly, a perfecting amendment is entitled to be voted upon first, but if the gentleman from New York has been recognized to strike out the section, he is entitled to recognition for debate.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair knows, but no precedent of that kind as a matter of record——

Mr. ROGERS. I shall be glad to give way to the gentleman from New York.

The CHAIRMAN. There has been recognition both ways. It makes no difference to the Chair. The Chair will recognize the gentleman from New York.

Mr. MILLS. Mr. Chairman and gentlemen of the committee, I have not a great deal to say with respect to this section, except to point out to the committee what must be obvious to anyone, that there is no logic in or reason for this section. You provide that an American woman who marries a foreigner shall retain her American citizenship, yet you all know that according to international comity and according to the laws of practically every foreign country she will become a citizen of that foreign country. Under this section which country is she a citizen of? Is she a citizen of both countries? Is she entitled, let us say, to marry a Frenchman or a German and move abroad, to live there, to exercise her rights as a citizen of that country, and yet come home in the fall to the United States and vote? And to which country, pray, will her children belong? If she gets into trouble, is she entitled to appeal for protection to the German Government and at the same time to appeal for protection to the United States Government? And must both Governments rush to her assistance?

Furthermore, gentlemen, let me remind you that during the war we heard considerable outcry against the very small number of Germans who had come to this country and become American citizens and yet favored the enemy nations. We maintained the principle that if a man came to this country and became a citizen he was an American citizen, and no matter what his forbears were, no matter what his ancestry was, no matter where he was born, he owed allegiance to the American Government. Here you say that a woman who goes abroad and marries abroad does not owe allegiance to the country in which she lives, in which her husband lives, and in which her family is being reared. We are going to keep a string on her and say, "You remain an American citizen." You violate, it seems to me, all logic; you violate all existing legal notions, and you violate, it seems to me, the essential principle of family unity.

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLS. Gladly.

Mr. STEPHENS. If a male citizen of the United States marries a foreign woman and moves there, he does not lose his citizenship.

Mr. MILLS. Not necessarily.

Mr. STEPHENS. Then why does a woman under the same laws and same regulations?

Mr. MILLS. That is theory, permit me to state, because, as a matter of fact, the gentleman knows that when an American marries a foreign woman he stays at home. He does not move abroad, or scarcely ever. He does not change his residence by reason of marriage, whereas we know it is a universal practice that when a woman marries her husband's home is her home.

Mr. STEPHENS. Under the nineteenth amendment the thing is equal.

Mr. MILLS. Yes; from the standpoint of voting. But the nineteenth amendment never contemplated that a citizen has the right to claim the protection of two countries or be a citizen of two countries. What men have that right?

Mr. STEPHENS. Should not the law apply equally to the women as to the men in connection with naturalization?

Mr. MILLS. But you do not give to any man who lives abroad the right to retain his American citizenship.

Mr. STEPHENS. Yes; you do.

Mr. MILLS. Excuse me.

Mr. STEPHENS. He can marry a foreign woman and go there and live two or three years.

Mr. MILLS. And become naturalized as an Englishman and retain his American citizenship?

Mr. STEPHENS. No.

Mr. MILLS. But an American woman who marries an Englishman becomes an English woman and is recognized as such by the English Government.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. Under the provisions of this bill she may renounce her American citizenship.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York [Mr. MILLS] has expired.

Mr. GARNER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that he may proceed for five minutes. It is an interesting statement, I think.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Texas asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from New York may have five additional minutes. Is there objection? [After a pause.] The Chair hears none.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If a woman marries an Englishman, she may, under the provisions of this bill, renounce her American citizenship.

Mr. MILLS. Very true.

Mr. CAMPBELL of Kansas. If she fails to do it under the provisions of this bill, and she may retain her American citizenship, and she does not accept the citizenship of her English husband——

Mr. MILLS. But whether she accepts it or not, under the English laws she becomes a British citizen. They do not have any such provision as this. They have woman suffrage over there, but because they have woman suffrage they have not adopted any such ridiculous provisions as this, that changes the entire legal status of married people.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. If an American woman marries a British subject and lives in England, although she returns to the United States, what is her status?

Mr. MILLS. She is still a British citizen.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. She is an American citizen under our law. You are going to have that dual proposition, and you can not help it.

Mr. MILLS. The gentleman asked a question. She is a British citizen unless she declares her intention to become an American citizen.

Mr. VAILE. By returning to the United States and residing therein.

Mr. MILLS. The State Department, from a case that I know of and which has come to my attention very recently, will not only require a declaration, but will require proof that she intends to reside in the United States permanently.

Mr. CURRY. Lady Astor was born in the United States. She went to Great Britain and married a British subject, Lord Astor. She was not admitted to citizenship, but she became a citizen on account of her marriage to Lord Astor. She became a candidate for Parliament and was elected. Now then, if this bill was included in the law and Lord Astor should die and she would come to the United States, she would become an American citizen?

Mr. MILLS. By so declaring. And under the provisions of this bill, she could be a Member of the American Congress and at the same time represent America in the British House of Commons.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. In that connection, if the bill should be enacted, in the case you suppose, she would be taxable on her income in both countries?

Mr. MILLS. That is a question of residence as well as citizenship.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. Would she not be taxable under British law?

Mr. MILLS. She is anyhow.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. And by virtue of this provision, if this bill should be adopted, she would be taxable under the American law?

Mr. STEPHENS. If she had property here.

Mr. MOORE of Virginia. On her American income. There would be dual taxation?

Mr. MILLS. Yes; there would be.

Mr. VAILE. I would like to speak for a moment in opposition to this amendment, Mr. Chairman.

Of course, to cut out section 3 would be to cut out the heart of this bill. It is only offered for the purpose of defeating the bill. The fact is that it would nullify the declaration of both party platforms. The Republican Party declared that an American woman resident of the United States should not lose her citizenship if she married an alien. The Democratic platform declared that an American woman who married an alien should retain her American citizenship.

Mr. ROGERS. The draft of this bill is the very draft that I presented to the committee for consideration. There was a provision that the retention of citizenship by an American woman who married an alien should exist only as long as an American woman should reside in the United States.

Mr. VAILE. Yes.

Mr. ROGERS. I understand that the committee have given very full consideration to that point and have decided to eliminate the provision that I had thought it wise to include. Will the gentleman tell the committee why?

Mr. VAILE. I shall be glad to. If you limit the operation of this act to citizenship for women while they reside here, you will bring up the legal question of what constitutes residence. Of course the books are full of decisions on the question of what constitutes residence, in the main holding it to be a matter of intention. We want to avoid a doubtful legal question depending upon circumstances which are different in every individual case. But if the woman wants to change her allegiance, do not attach a string to it. If she does not want American citizenship, in the first place, she can renounce it, and in the second place, we make her citizenship the same as that of naturalized citizens in the United States by bringing her under the terms of the expatriation act. If the married woman resides abroad in the country of her alien husband for two years or for five years in any other country, she is presumed to lose her citizenship here.

I hope the committee will not be scared about the question of dual citizenship. We have lots of cases of dual citizenship in this country now. If a man applies for naturalization, before he is naturalized he is subject to dual citizenship. He may be a subject of a foreign nation, although the foreign nation may refuse to give him a passport; but he is the subject of that nation, notwithstanding the fact that he has applied for naturalization in this country and has not yet been fully adopted by our country. It affects hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions, at this time.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAILE. Yes.

Mr. BOX. Is it not true that there will always be dual citizenship until there is created a uniform system of citizenship applying to all countries?

Mr. VAILE. Yes, of course; and until you have a uniform system of citizenship applying to all countries you will not cease to have conflicting claims. Italy claims that a child born here of Italian parents is an Italian subject. Japan does the same. Japan claims that a child born here of a Japanese father is a Japanese subject, while under our Constitution he is a citizen of the United States. We have in many ways too numerous to mention, too numerous to go into here, this matter of dual citizenship to wrestle with, and we can not expect to iron it out entirely. We have ironed it out partially; we have released the string on the woman who does not want us, by providing, in the first place, that a woman can renounce her citizenship, and, in the second place, that she is presumed to have relinquished it, and under those circumstances, which would amount to loss of her residence here and acquisition of actual residence elsewhere. We are not trying to force American women out of citizenship; we are merely trying not to make such an inequitable distinction between the citizenship of women and the citizenship of men.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has expired.

Mr. STEPHENS. I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may have two minutes more.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio asks unanimous consent that the gentleman from Colorado may have two minutes more. Is there objection?

There was no objection.

Mr. STEPHENS. It is provided here that if an American woman marries an alien who is ineligible to citizenship here she ceases to be a citizen of the United States?

Mr. VAILE. Yes.

Mr. STEPHENS. I can not understand why that should be. I do not understand why a woman citizen should cease to be a woman citizen by reason of marriage.

Mr. VAILE. That is the provision of the bill; but where a woman marries an alien who is eligible to citizenship, who may later become a naturalized citizen, should she not retain her citizenship? If she marries an alien who later becomes a naturalized citizen it is abhorrent to think that she should not have a chance to be a citizen of the United States.

Mr. STEPHENS. Does the same law apply to men?

Mr. VAILE. No; and I will show you why: Because when a woman marries a Japanese, for example, assuming that she is deprived of her American citizenship, she at least gets Japanese citizenship, but when an American man marries a Japanese woman he would lose his citizenship here and not get citizenship there.

Mr. STEPHENS. I would suggest that you strike out the word "woman" in there and say "any citizen who marries an alien," and leave out the other language.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Colorado has again expired.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, the crux of this bill, the main purpose, is section 3, to permit under the law and make expatriation mandatory, unless the woman herself takes the initiative to remain a citizen of the United States. The Supreme Court of the United States discussed this question fully and fairly in the case of Mackenzie against Hare (233 U. S. 299–312), where the woman was an American citizen and married an alien.

Now, under the common law she remained an American and retained her allegiance immutably to the country in which she was born. Under the doctrine of the United States, first by diplomatic relations, and then by act of Congress, and then consummating the matter by the success of the War of 1812, the American Government said to the world, "We will determine who can be citizens of the United States and what is necessary for people to do to become citizens of the United States." As Kent stated in his second volume, fourteenth edition, "The deduction would seem to have been repealed by the naturalization laws"; that is, that it was immutable, "and it was certainly opposed to the executive opinion, and we may say popular sentiment so determined that it sought its vindication by war."

Now, a person born in the United States becomes a citizen of this country, contrary to the doctrine of any other country in the world. They can not add to or subtract from our declaration. When a woman then marries an alien, under the act of 1868, chapter 249, Fifteenth Statutes 223, incorporated in the Revised Statutes, we again assert our rights by virtue of the result of the War of 1812; that that woman loses her citizenship wherever she goes, against any declaration of any country on earth.

Mr. STEPHENS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I just want to complete this thought: That is the statute to-day; and only by virtue of that statute and the declaration of the Congress of the United States, by virtue of the Constitution of the United States, that woman loses her citizenship.

That woman loses her citizenship, first, by our declaration that a person can release citizenship by complying with the laws of the United States; second, that we control it by the declaration in the Constitution; third, that is arranged by uniform laws passed by the Congress. Now, the main crux of the bill is this: That Congress in its wisdom said that an American woman would lose her citizenship under certain conditions, and the court in reasoning out this case carries out that idea clearly. She voluntarily marries. She has a right to do that. It is the same as though she voluntarily crosses the border into Canada and applies for British citizenship. Therefore she loses her United States citizenship.

Mr. STEPHENS. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield for a question.

Mr. STEPHENS. That is something in the past.

Mr. RAKER. No; that is the law to-day.

Mr. STEPHENS. The nineteenth amendment has placed women in the same position as men.

Mr. RAKER. That makes no difference here.

Mr. STEPHENS. The same laws ought to govern the women as govern the men.

Mr. RAKER. That does not apply to this provision.

Mr. STEPHENS. They all ought to come under the same naturalization law, because they are all citizens and electors alike, with the same privileges and the same burdens.

Mr. RAKER. That is the law to-day. What we are trying to do is to change it. The Congress, backed by the wisdom of the people of this country, should say that an American woman born in America retains her American citizenship irrespective of what may be the law of Great Britain or of France or of Italy. Under the Constitution and under our declaration following the War of 1812, that woman is an American citizen and not a British or French or Italian subject, as the case might be.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RAKER. I yield for a question.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I want to ask the gentleman in regard to section 3. I understand the purpose of this section is to benefit American women.

Mr. RAKER. And no one else.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Under the provisions of this section any American woman who marries a foreigner retains her citizenship as an American citizen unless she affirmatively renounces it?

Mr. RAKER. Yes; with the exceptions named in the bill by reason of residence abroad two or five years as provided.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Unless she marries some alien who is ineligible to citizenship in this country?

Mr. RAKER. Yes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Then she loses it?

Mr. RAKER. Yes. If she marries an alien ineligible to become a citizen of the United States.

Mr. KINCHELOE. If this is for the benefit of American women why not make the same law apply to a man who is an American citizen who willfully marries a woman who he knows is ineligible to citizenship in this country? Why should not he surrender his citizenship also? This is a discrimination in favor of the man.

Mr. RAKER. No. Let us be practicable.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I want to know the reason for the discrimination.

Mr. STEPHENS. If the gentleman will yield, what is sauce for the goose is sauce for the gander.

Mr. RAKER. I decline to yield. No one has ever complained, and the law on the statute book to-day provides that certain individuals are ineligible to citizenship in the United States. No one has ever raised the question that the man who marries a woman ineligible to citizenship should lose his own citizenship. Why take it up and discuss it in this bill? It is not involved.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Why should it not be?

Mr. RAKER. I do not yield any further. There is no necessity for it and no demand for it. Nobody wants it. But when an American woman marries a person who can never become a citizen of the United States, no matter how long he lives or wherever he may live, she should stand by that voluntary agreement of hers and lose her citizenship.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Why should not the man lose his citizenship, too?

Mr. RAKER. That is not involved. I hope it will not be insisted upon by the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I want to know the reason. That is what I am trying to get.

Mr. RAKER. The mere statement is reason enough, I trust, under the law now on the statute books. It could be done, no doubt. Let it alone as it is for the present.

Mr. KINCHELOE. It may be for the gentleman, but it is not for me.

Mr. RAKER. Now to get back to the question of a voluntary renunciation—it must be an affirmative act in court. Second, it puts her in the same place as a naturalized citizen. If she resides two years in the country of the husband's nativity or five years anywhere she, by presumption, is deemed to have made a renunciation.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I move that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado moves that all debate on this section and all amendments thereto close in 10 minutes.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. KINCHELOE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KINCHELOE. In view of the fact that debate is closed, I would like to be recognized to offer a perfecting amendment before the section is passed.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman will be recognized.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, the amendment which I have pending at the Clerk's desk simply seeks to insure that the present right of expatriation shall be retained. Let us assume that England allows the separate naturalization of a married woman. Suppose an American woman goes abroad, marries a Frenchman, and proceeds to go through the process of securing British naturalization, independent, of course, of her French husband, in the courts of England. She would renounce allegiance to the United States and would assert allegiance to the other sovereign. By that very fact, as our law now stands, she would put an end to her American citizenship. I think that is the intent of the section as presented by the committee. But the language of the pending bill is such as to make it at least a close question whether an American woman who, while abroad, renounces American citizenship would certainly thereby put an end to her American citizenship. In this connection I want to call your attention to the beginning of section 3: That the woman citizen of the United States shall not cease to be a citizen of the United States by reason of her marriage unless she makes renunciation before a United States naturalization court. Now, if she undertakes to acquire citizenship by naturalization in some other country, she would not be renouncing anything in the United States and therefore would not be terminating her American citizenship. Then, in the sentence beginning in line 15, it is provided that if at the termination of the marital status she is a citizen of the United States she shall retain her citizenship regardless of her residence. That language is unconditional. There is no provision in it for the operation of the doctrine of expatriation even though she wants it to operate. It seems to me that in view of the fact that for at least 50 years the American view of international law has insisted on the right of expatriation it is exceedingly important that nothing in section 2 shall put an end to that right. As I say, I rather think the committee agrees with me as to the principle I am announcing, and that if there is any difference between us it would be a difference solely as to the effect of the language they have used. My amendment provides that nothing herein shall be construed to repeal existing laws with reference to expatriation. I think it makes safe a very important principle of our law. For our national protection, it must be clear that a person who seeks to throw off American citizenship shall have every shred of that citizenship stripped from him.

Mr. VAILE. I have no objection to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, I have an amendment which I would like to offer.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, would not a vote on my amendment naturally come at this time?

The CHAIRMAN. Not necessarily.

Mr. ROGERS. If permissible, I respectfully request that my amendment be voted on now.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair can not grant that request now. The gentleman from Kentucky is recognized.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, after the word "any," page 2, line 13, strike out the word "woman," and after the word "citizen" insert the words "of the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. KINCHELOE: Page 2, line 13, after the word "any," strike out the word "woman," and after the word "citizen" insert the words "of the United States."

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Chairman, they say that this section 3 is the heart of this bill for the woman. I want to be for the woman. I can not understand why there should be any discrimination in favor of the man. It provides that any American woman who marries an alien does not surrender her citizenship unless she does it affirmatively, or provided she marries an alien ineligible to citizenship. In other words, if she marries an alien ineligible to citizenship she ipso facto surrenders her citizenship as an American. But the man who is an American citizen can marry any woman he wants to that is ineligible to American citizenship, live with her, bring her to this country, and yet he does not surrender his citizenship at all.

Mr. VAILE. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes.

Mr. VAILE. Did the gentleman hear the discussion upon that point a moment ago?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes; but it was not very satisfactory to me.

Mr. VAILE. May I repeat the reason?

Mr. KINCHELOE. My point is this: I have no respect for an American man who marries a foreign woman ineligible under our laws to citizenship. You say he can do it and retain his citizenship in good standing as an American citizen, but, on the other hand, you say to the American woman, if you marry a man ineligible to citizenship you will immediately surrender your citizenship.

Mr. VAILE. But we want to avoid as far as possible having people without any citizenship at all.

Mr. KINCHELOE. If a man does that, I want him to be without any citizenship at all.

Mr. VAILE. What are you going to do with him?

Mr. KINCHELOE. I do not know. What are you going to do with the woman?

Mr. VAILE. She has the citizenship of her husband.

Mr. KINCHELOE. She surrenders her citizenship in this country.

Mr. DENISON. Ought there not be a penalty to prevent that from happening?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Absolutely. Under this bill a man can marry a woman who is ineligible to citizenship with impunity, but you say to an American woman that if she does it she surrenders her citizenship. I want to be fair to the women.

Mr. CURRY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me for a question?

Mr. KINCHELOE. Yes.

Mr. CURRY. I do not know whether the gentleman is aware of the fact or not, but no alien is permitted to marry a Japanese woman in Japan. In order to marry a Japanese woman, the alien has first got to take a Japanese name and to become a citizen of the Japanese Empire. Outside of the Japanese and a few others who have similar laws, I do not know how any man could marry an alien who was ineligible to citizenship without ipso facto, according to the law of that country, losing his United States citizenship.

Mr. KINCHELOE. I want to say to this American, "When you do that you surrender your citizenship as an American."

Mr. CURRY. But he will already have done that before he marries the Japanese woman.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

Mr. BOX. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the Rogers amendment may be again reported.

There was no objection, and the Clerk again reported the Rogers amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment offered by Mr. ROGERS.

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Kentucky [Mr. KINCHELOE].

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. KINCHELOE) there were—ayes 20, noes 63.

So the amendment was rejected.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk and ask to have read.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment by Mr. ROGERS: Page 2, line 8, after the word "States," insert "so long as she continues to reside in the United States."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Massachusetts.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ROGERS) there were—ayes 40, noes 35.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I demand tellers.

Tellers were ordered, and Mr. ROGERS and Mr. VAILE were appointed to act as tellers.

The committee again divided; and the tellers reported—ayes 37, noes 39.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. The question now recurs upon the amendment offered by the gentleman from New York to strike out the section.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. MILLS) there were—ayes 18, noes 60.

So the amendment was rejected.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 4. That a woman who, before the passage of this act, has lost her United States citizenship by reason of her marriage to an alien eligible for citizenship, may be naturalized as provided by section 2 of this act, and she shall upon her naturalization have for all purposes the same citizenship status as immediately preceding her marriage: Provided, That no certificate of arrival shall be required to be filed with her petition if during the continuance of the marital status she shall have resided within the United States.

With the following committee amendment:

Page 3, line 3, after the word "act," strike out the comma and the words "and she shall upon her naturalization have for all purposes the same citizenship status as immediately preceding her marriage."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I offer the following amendment, which I send to the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment offered by Mr. VAILE: Page 3, at the end of line 9, insert a new sentence, as follows: "After her naturalization she shall have the same citizenship status as if her marriage had taken place after the passage of this act."

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, this is an afterthought, and it makes no difference whether it is or not, but it is pure, unadulterated surplusage.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is quite important.

Mr. RAKER. This is an amendment that is, in my view, surplusage. It can not be explained otherwise. When a woman loses her citizenship and comes back again to citizenship, she stands as though the thing had never occurred, but it is immaterial whether it goes in or not.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I offer another amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, after line 9, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 5. That no woman whose husband is not eligible to citizenship shall be naturalized during a continuance of the marital status."

Mr. STAFFORD. As I gathered from the reading of the amendment, it prohibits a woman from taking out naturalization whose husband is not eligible.

Mr. VAILE. Where she continues to be married.

Mr. STAFFORD. What does the gentleman mean by being ineligible—not having the qualifications of citizenship, the ability to read the Constitution——

Mr. VAILE. No.

Mr. STAFFORD. What does the gentleman mean by ineligible; what does that term mean?

Mr. VAILE. Well, there are people in certain parts of the world who are not eligible to citizenship.

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Under the law, eligibility is applied to free white persons and persons of African descent.

Mr. STAFFORD. I should think when a man is denied citizenship because he is not able to meet the qualifications exacted by the court or the law that he would be ineligible and——

Mr. VAILE. He is eligible if he can cure the defect, but there are certain people who can not cure the defect, and consequently they are ineligible.

Mr. ROSENBLOOM. Does that apply to insane persons and to persons convicted of treason?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. It does. Let me say this: The naturalization laws provide that naturalization shall be given to free white persons and persons of African descent. Certain others now have been made ineligible on account of race. And then in addition Congress during the war passed an act declaring that certain aliens who withdrew their first papers in order to avoid service with the armed forces of the United States shall be forever afterwards ineligible. So there is one more class numbering about 1,500. I think that is about all of the classes who can not cure ineligibility.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 5. That section 1994 of the Revised Statutes and section 4 of the expatriation act of 1907 are repealed. Such repeal shall not terminate citizenship acquired or retained under either of such sections nor restore citizenship lost under section 4 of the expatriation act of 1907.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I send an amendment to the Clerk's desk to this section.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 10, strike out the figure "5" and insert the figure "6."

Mr. VAILE. This is to correspond with the numbering of the other sections. I ask for a vote.

The question was taken, and the amendment was agreed to.

The Clerk read as follows:

SEC. 6. That section 3 of the expatriation act of 1907 is repealed. Such repeal shall not restore citizenship lost under such section nor terminate citizenship resumed under such section. A woman who has resumed under such section citizenship lost by marriage shall, upon the passage of this act, have for all purposes the same citizenship status as immediately preceding her marriage; and such status shall continue until changed in accordance with the provisions of this act or other law of the United States.

The committee amendment was read, as follows:

Page 3, line 18, after the word "section," strike out the remainder of the paragraph.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to substitute an amendment for the committee amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado asks unanimous consent for the consideration of a substitute for the committee amendment. Is there objection?

Mr. RAKER. Reserving the right to object——

Mr. STAFFORD. Let it be reported.

The Clerk read as follows:

Substitute for committee amendment: Page 3, line 21, after "marriage," strike out the semicolon, insert a period, and strike out the remainder of the line and all of lines 22 and 23.

Mr. RAKER. I would like to ask the gentleman what is the object of the amendment?

Mr. VAILE. It is simply to define her status. We thought we had stricken out too much, and it is well to have this in to define her status. It is not a matter of very great importance, but——

Mr. RAKER. It was thoroughly considered, but if the committee determines that it should be that way, why, it makes no difference.

Mr. MAPES. Will the gentleman yield?

Mr. VAILE. I will.

Mr. MAPES. If the gentleman from Colorado will give attention for a moment, the other provisions of the bill state that a woman who marries a foreigner and resides in the country of her husband for two years loses her citizenship?

Mr. VAILE. Shall be presumed to lose her citizenship, unless she makes such a showing as naturalized citizens do.

Mr. MAPES. Does not this provision, by reinstating this language which the committee propose to strike out, make a woman who has been married 10 years and has lived ever since in Germany a citizen of the United States?

Mr. VAILE. No; because we repeal section 3 of the expatriation act.

Mr. MAPES. Do you say that a woman who has resumed under such section citizenship lost by marriage shall, upon the passage of this act, have for all purposes the same citizenship status as immediately preceding her marriage?

Mr. VAILE. That is, if she was a native-born citizen prior to her marriage. Here is the difference between that amendment and the preceding one. There are two classes of citizens, the native born and naturalized. Now, it is not quite accurate to say that they are exactly in the same situation, because the law imposes certain burdens upon naturalized citizens which are not placed upon native-born citizens, namely, in this respect, that when a naturalized citizen has resided two years in the country from which he came——

Mr. MAPES. I understand that.

Mr. VAILE. So we want to distinguish between the naturalized citizen and a native-born citizen, and want it to apply to the woman prior to her marriage.

Mr. MAPES. I do not understand the reference here. It seems to me you provide that a woman who is already married and has lived for 10 years in the country of her husband resumes the citizenship she had prior to her marriage.

Mr. VAILE. We say that a woman who has resumed citizenship shall have the same status she had preceding her marriage. She is a citizen now. We provide she shall have the status of a native-born or naturalized citizen, according to what her status was before her marriage.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, I want to offer an amendment.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I ask for a vote on my substitute.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the substitute offered by the gentleman from Colorado [Mr. VAILE].

The question was taken, and the substitute was agreed to.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, the bill should be amended by striking out the figure "6" and inserting the figure "7."

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Page 3, line 15, strike out the figure "6" and insert the figure "7."

The amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the amendment offered by the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. ELLIS].

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ELLIS: Page 3, after line 23, insert a new section, as follows:

"SEC. 8. That subdivision (a) of section 2 of the act entitled 'An act to limit the immigration of aliens into the United States,' approved May 19, 1921, is amended by inserting before the period at the end thereof a semicolon and the following: 'or (9) an alien woman married to a citizen of the United States.'"

Mr. STAFFORD. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order until some statement is given of this amendment.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, this is to correct a difficulty that would have been produced by this bill. It could have been corrected by an amendment to the bill itself, but upon the suggestion of gentlemen in charge of the bill this amendment to the pending law has been substituted. Under the law as it now stands, an alien woman by marrying a citizen of the United States becomes entitled to admittance to the United States. But when you take away the benefit of the husband's citizenship, as you do in this bill, she would be no longer entitled either as a citizen or under the citizenship of her husband to come in. She might be excluded by the quota. So that this amendment simply amends the law as it now stands by adding this language and permitting the woman to enter, whether the quota were exhausted or not.

Mr. BOX. Does the gentleman say that was submitted to the committee?

Mr. VAILE. As was stated a few minutes ago, we thought it was fair. We have a rigorous restriction law. We do not desire to separate families. Now we have an American bringing himself and his wife here and withholding from her a chance to be an American citizen.

Mr. BOX. Does the gentleman think the law will keep him out?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. BOX. Is he kept out now?

Mr. JOHNSON of Washington. Yes.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the amendment again reported.

The CHAIRMAN. Without objection, the amendment will be again reported.

The amendment was again read.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

Mr. ELLIS. I hope the gentleman will withhold his point of order.

Mr. KING. Mr. Chairman, I make the point that there is no quorum present.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman makes the point of order there is no quorum.

Mr. KING. I withdraw it.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I withhold the point of order.

Mr. ELLIS. Mr. Chairman, I had prepared an amendment to this bill simply to this effect, to add another subdivision to section 2, providing that an alien woman otherwise qualified to come in should not be excluded by consideration of any quota at any time if as the wife of a citizen she should seek admittance. Now, you see the point. Married or not, an alien woman from some other country could not, if this bill becomes a law, come into this country if the quota of her country were exhausted. She could not come with her husband to this country if that quota were exhausted. This amendment to existing law would obviate this.

Mr. MONDELL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ELLIS. Yes.

Mr. MONDELL. The condition of affairs that the gentleman refers to would not be likely to occur in a thousand years. There would be only the remotest possible chance that the filling of a quota would come between a husband and a wife.

Mr. ELLIS. Those things would be occurring every day now but for the right of a citizen to bring his wife in, irrespective of quotas. The gentleman is not informed.

Mr. MONDELL. Something of that kind might occur some time in the history of the world, but it would be the rarest thing.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Chairman, I make the point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The point of order is sustained.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report the bill with the amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Colorado moves that the committee do now rise and report the bill with amendments to the House, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass. The question is on agreeing to that motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the committee rose; and the Speaker having resumed the chair, Mr. TOWNER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union, reported that that committee, having had under consideration the bill (H. R. 12022) relative to the naturalization and citizenship of married women, had directed him to report the same back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill as amended do pass.

The SPEAKER. By the rule the previous question is ordered. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put the amendments in gross. The question is on agreeing to the amendments.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays on the bill; and, pending that, I make the point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum is not appropriate yet.

Mr. HERRICK. I withdraw that for the time being.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. ROGERS. I am not.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts offers a motion to recommit. The Clerk will report it.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. ROGERS moves to recommit the bill with instructions to report the same back forthwith, with the addition of the following language: Page 2, line 8, after the word "States" insert "so long as she continues to reside in the United States," and strike out the last sentence of section 3.

Mr. ROGERS. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from Massachusetts moves the previous question on the motion to recommit.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The question was taken, and the Speaker announced that the "ayes" appeared to have it.

Mr. VAILE. A division, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. A division is demanded.

The House divided; and there were—ayes 28, noes 58.

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

Mr. WALSH. Mr. Speaker, I make the point of order that there is no quorum present.

Mr. HERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I renew my point of no quorum.

The SPEAKER. The point of no quorum is made on the vote on the motion to recommit. Evidently there is no quorum present. The Doorkeeper will close the doors, the Sergeant at Arms will bring in the absentees, and the Clerk will call the roll. Those in favor of the motion to recommit will, when their names are called, answer "yea"; those opposed will answer "nay."

The question was taken; and there were—yeas 64, nays 186, not voting 180, as follows:

So the motion to recommit was rejected.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

Until further notice:

Mr. Cramton with Mr. Carter.

Mr. Clarke of New York with Mr. Martin.

Mr. Reece with Mr. Garner.

Mr. Gorman with Mr. Williams of Texas.

Mr. Greene of Massachusetts with Mr. Montague.

Mr. Schall with Mr. Pou.

Mr. Knutson with Mr. Favrot.

Mr. Robsion with Mr. Riordan.

Mr. Taylor of Tennessee with Mr. Wise.

Mr. Griest with Mr. Collins.

Mr. Patterson of New Jersey with Mr. Rainey of Alabama.

Mr. Strong of Pennsylvania with Mr. Weaver.

Mr. Kreider with Mr. Johnson of Kentucky.

Mr. Paige with Mr. Lee of Georgia.

Mr. Leatherwood with Mr. Gallivan.

Mr. Winslow with Mr. Taylor of Colorado.

Mr. McKenzie with Mr. Hammer.

Mr. Dempsey with Mr. Hayden.

Mr. McFadden with Mr. Drewry.

Mr. Perlman with Mr. Woods of Virginia.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The SPEAKER. The question is on the passage of the bill.

Mr. RAKER. Mr. Speaker, I demand the yeas and nays on the passage of the bill.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from California demands the yeas and nays. All those in favor of taking the question by yeas and nays will rise. [After counting.] Thirty-nine Members have arisen, not a sufficient number, and the yeas and nays are refused. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. LEHLBACH) there were—206 ayes and 9 noes.

Mr. KINCHELOE. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote and make the point that there is no quorum present.

The SPEAKER. The vote discloses that a quorum is present.

Mr. KINCHELOE. A parliamentary inquiry, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER. The gentleman will state it.

Mr. KINCHELOE. How many does it require to make a quorum?

The SPEAKER. Two hundred and fifteen.

So the bill was passed.

On motion of Mr. VAILE, a motion to reconsider the vote whereby the bill was passed was laid on the table.

LEAVE OF ABSENCE.

By unanimous consent, leave of absence was granted as follows:

To Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts, indefinitely, on account of illness in his family.

To Mr. OSBORNE, indefinitely, on account of illness.

To Mr. JONES of Texas (at the request of Mr. LANHAM), for to-day, on account of important business.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS.

By unanimous consent, leave to extend remarks on the bill just passed was granted to Mr. CHANDLER of New York, Mr. LONDON, Mr. ANSORGE, and Mr. BOND.

The extension of remarks referred to are here printed in full as follows:

Mr. ANSORGE. Mr. Speaker, I am heartily in favor of the principle of independent citizenship for married women. In my first campaign for Congress, in 1912, I advocated equal suffrage. I am now proud to advocate equal citizenship.

An American male citizen does not lose his citizenship by marrying an alien, neither should an American woman lose her citizenship by marrying an alien. The woman's citizenship should not be dependent upon her marital status. A married woman should be permitted to determine her own desire for citizenship and naturalization.

The principle of independent citizenship for married women was indorsed by the Republican and Democratic platforms in 1920. That portion of the Republican platform referring to this question reads as follows:

NATURALIZATION.

There is urgent need of improvement in our naturalization laws. No alien should become a citizen until he has become genuinely American, and adequate tests for determining the alien's fitness should be provided for by law.

We advocate in addition the independent naturalization of married women. An American woman resident in the United States should not lose her citizenship by marriage to an alien.

That portion of the Democratic platform reads as follows:

We advocate * * * Federal legislation which shall insure that American women resident in the United States but married to aliens shall retain their American citizenship, and that the same process of naturalization shall be required for women as for men.

The principles of this bill have been indorsed by the following women's organizations: American Association of University Women, April, 1922; Business and Professional Women's Clubs, July, 1911; Council of Jewish Women; Daughters of the American Revolution, April, 1919; General Federation of Women's Clubs, January, 1922; National League of Women Voters, April, 1922; National Women's Trade-union League, June, 1922; Woman's Christian Temperance Union, August, 1921.

The passage of this bill will serve another very important purpose. At the present time an alien woman arriving in this country and marrying an American citizen immediately becomes an American citizen and a voter. This bill provides that any woman eligible for citizenship who marries a citizen of the United States, or whose husband becomes naturalized, shall not become a citizen by reason of such marriage or naturalization of the husband. She may become a citizen upon compliance with the naturalization laws, with the following exceptions:

(a) No declaration of intention shall be required.

(b) Residence within the United States for at least one year prior to filing of her petition for naturalization shall be required.

The bill provides that the right of any woman to become a naturalized citizen of the United States shall not be denied or abridged because of her sex or because she is a married woman.

The bill provides further that a woman citizen of the United States shall not cease to be a citizen by reason of her marriage after the passage of this bill, unless she makes a formal renunciation of her citizenship before a court having jurisdiction over naturalization of aliens, with this proviso, that any woman citizen who marries an alien ineligible to citizenship shall cease to be a citizen of the United States.

If at the termination of the marital status she is a citizen of the United States, she shall retain her citizenship regardless of her residence. If during the continuance of the marital status she resides continuously for two years in a foreign State of which her husband is a citizen or subject, or five years continuously outside the United States, she shall thereafter be subject to the same presumption as is a naturalized citizen of the United States under the second paragraph of section 2 of the act entitled "An act in reference to the expatriation of citizens and their protection abroad," approved March 2, 1907.

The bill provides further that a woman before the passage of this act has lost her United States citizenship by reason of her marriage to an alien eligible for citizenship may be naturalized as provided by section 2 of this act: Provided, That no certificate of arrival shall be required to be filed with her petition if during the continuance of the marital status she shall have resided within the United States.

This bill in no way affects the status of children. Under the Constitution children born in the United States are citizens regardless of the allegiance of the parents. Children born abroad of course take the nationality of their fathers.

This bill carries out the principle of equality of citizenship. Such citizenship should be based upon loyalty to country and desire for citizenship rather than upon the marital status.

I believe the bill is a move in the right direction, and will tend to make better Americans of alien women, and will protect the American citizenship of American women.

ADJOURNMENT.

Mr. VAILE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 5 o'clock and 40 minutes p. m.) the House adjourned until to-morrow, Wednesday, June 21, 1922, at 12 o'clock noon.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 2 of Rule XIII,

Mr. MADDEN: Committee on Appropriations. H. R. 12073. A bill to provide additional compensation for certain civilian employees of the Governments of the United States and the District of Columbia during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923; without amendment (Rept. No. 1120). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. WINSLOW: Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce. H. R. 8062. A bill amending subdivision (5) of section 302 of the war risk insurance act; with an amendment (Rept. No. 1121). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

Mr. HILL: Committee on Military Affairs. S. J. Res. 23. A joint resolution authorizing the Secretary of War to investigate the claims of private parties to the Mariveles Quarry within the limits of a United States military reservation in the Philippine Islands and to permit the working thereof by the persons entitled thereto, provided military necessities permit; with amendments (Rept. No. 1122). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

PUBLIC BILLS, RESOLUTIONS, AND MEMORIALS.

Under clause 3 of Rule XXII, bills, resolutions, and memorials were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. MADDEN: A bill (H. R. 12090) making appropriations to supply deficiencies in appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and prior fiscal years; supplemental appropriations for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes; committed to the Committee of the Whole House on the state of the Union.

By Mr. GREENE of Massachusetts: A bill (H. R. 12091) to amend section 4132 of the Revised Statutes and to repeal an act approved August 18, 1914, entitled "An act to provide for the admission of foreign-built ships to American registry for foreign trade, and for other purposes"; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

By Mr. ASWELL: A bill (H. R. 12092) granting the consent of Congress to the Louisiana Development Co. to construct a bridge across Red River at or near Grand Ecore, La.; to the Committee on Interstate and Foreign Commerce.

By Mr. JOHNSON of South Dakota: Resolution (H. Res. 373) providing compensation for the assistant superintendent and an assistant in the House document room; to the Committee on Accounts.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. ANDREWS of Nebraska: A bill (H. R. 12093) granting a pension to Maggie Campbell; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12094) granting a pension to Benjamin F. Kirtley; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. COLE of Ohio: A bill (H. R. 12095) granting a pension to Martha A. Shoemaker; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HENRY: A bill (H. R. 12096) granting an increase of Pension to Mary E. Veith; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. HULL: A bill (H. R. 12097) for the relief of George A. Cummings; to the Committee on Claims.

Also, a bill (H. R. 12098) for the relief of John Albright; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

By Mr. KISSEL: A bill (H. R. 12099) for the relief of the McAllister Steamboat Co.; to the Committee on Claims.

By Mr. LUCE: A bill (H. R. 12100) granting a pension to Louis Toupin, alias Beaudette; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. McSWAIN: A bill (H. R. 12101) granting a pension to Thomas H. Emory; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. PURNELL: A bill (H. R. 12102) granting an increase of pension to Fannie McQuade; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

By Mr. SWING: A bill (H. R. 12103) granting an increase of pension to Orville H. Mills; to the Committee on Pensions.

By Mr. TIMBERLAKE: A bill (H. R. 12104) granting a pension to Emma S. Stevens; to the Committee on Invalid Pensions.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of Rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

6033. By Mr. COLTON: Petition of E. G. Crandall and others, of Provo and other places in the State of Utah, protesting against the passage of House bills 9753 and 4388 or Senate bill 1948; to the Committee on the District of Columbia.

6034. By Mr. KISSEL: Petition of American Association of University Women, urging the passage of the Cable bill; to the Committee on Immigration and Naturalization.

6035. Also petition of E. A. Bates, secretary-treasurer the New York State Federation of Labor, urging continuation of $240 bonus for Federal employees; to the Committee on Appropriations.

6036. By Mr. MacGREGOR: Petition of the Buffalo Civic Club unanimously opposing the passage of the ship subsidy bill; to the Committee on the Merchant Marine and Fisheries.

6037. By Mr. TEN EYCK: Petition of the members of the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church of Albany, N. Y., to the Congress of the United States to protect the Armenian people from the ravages of the Turks through executive initiative; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

6038. By Mr. WARD of North Carolina: Petition of 3,000 citizens of North Carolina, favoring the leasing of Muscle Shoals to Henry Ford; to the Committee on Military Affairs.

SENATE.

WEDNESDAY, June 21, 1922.

(Legislative day of Thursday, April 20, 1922.)

The Senate met at 11 o'clock a. m., on the expiration of the recess.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Secretary will call the roll.

The reading clerk called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Glass	McLean	Simmons
Borah	Gooding	McNary	Smith
Brandegee	Hale	Nelson	Smoot
Bursum	Harris	Newberry	Spencer
Cameron	Johnson	Norbeck	Sterling
Capper	Jones, N. Mex.	Oddie	Sutherland
Cummins	Kellogg	Overman	Swanson
Curtis	Kendrick	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Dial	King	Poindexter	Walsh, Mont.
du Pont	Ladd	Pomerene	Warren
Edge	La Follette	Rawson	Watson, Ga.
Fernald	Lenroot	Robinson	Watson, Ind.
Gerry	McCumber	Sheppard	Willis

Mr. CURTIS. I wish to announce that the Senator from Washington [Mr. JONES] is absent on official business. I ask that this announcement may stand for the day.

I also wish to announce that the junior Senator from Pennsylvania [Mr. PEPPER] is necessarily absent.

Mr. GERRY. I wish to announce that the senior Senator from Florida [Mr. FLETCHER] is absent on account of illness.

Mr. KENDRICK. I was requested to announce that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], the Senator from Illinois [Mr. McKINLEY], the Senator from Oklahoma [Mr. HARREL], the Senator from Alabama [Mr. HEFLIN], and the Senator from Arkansas [Mr. CARAWAY] are engaged in a hearing before the Committee on Agriculture and Forestry.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Fifty-two Senators having answered to their names, a quorum is present.

THE COTTON SITUATION.

Mr. EDGE obtained the floor.

Mr. SMITH. Mr. President, will the Senator allow me to make a unanimous-consent request to have printed in the RECORD some very important communications pertaining to the cotton situation?

Mr. EDGE. I yield for that purpose.

Mr. SMITH. The communications include one from Sir Charles W. Macara, of Manchester, England. I ask to have the articles printed in the RECORD.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The matter referred to is as follows:

ST. MATTHEWS, S. C., June 8, 1922.

Hon. E. D. SMITH,
Senate Office Building, Washington, D. C.

MY DEAR MR. SMITH: Recently we sent out thousands of questionnaires to experts of the cotton industry, and as a result we have secured some very valuable information. Many of the letters reaching us are from leaders not only in the cotton industry but in the business world, and they bring to light information of national importance.

I am inclosing you copy of a report made up from the questionnaires, which is headed "Cotton supplies and prices."

* * * * * * *

Sincerely yours,

J. S. WANNAMAKER,
President American Cotton Association.

COTTON SUPPLIES AND PRICES—MOST ACUTE FAMINE OF COTTON SUPPLIES SINCE 1865 IS CONFIRMED BY REPLIES TO QUESTIONNAIRES SENT TO THOUSANDS OF EXPERTS IN VARIOUS LINES OF COTTON INDUSTRY.

[By J. S. Wannamaker, president American Cotton Association, St. Matthews, S. C.]

For the purpose of ascertaining the views of the leading experts on the question of cotton supplies and prices the American Cotton Association mailed out thousands of questionnaires, and we beg herewith to submit a synopsis of the replies (these questionnaires were not sent to the producers but to experts in the other lines of the cotton industry, including the leading cotton authorities of the world):

1. Estimate of indicated yield as of May 22, 1922, 8,500,000 bales.
2. Estimated consumption of American cotton from growing crop for next cotton year, 14,000,000 bales, but will not be available.
3. Estimate of untenderable cotton now in American stocks, 1,250,000 bales.
4. In my (the expert's) judgment a yield of American cotton from the growing crop, based upon the following estimated production, will bring:

If 11,000,000 bales, 35 cents per pound.
If 10,000,000 bales, 45 cents per pound.
If 9,000,000 bales, 60 cents per pound.
If 8,000,000 bales, 80 cents per pound.
If 7,000,000 bales, 90 cents per pound.
If 6,500,000 bales, $1 per pound.

Many of those making the above estimate as to indicated yield point out that they expect the Government to show an estimate 25 per cent higher. They emphasize the fact that they are satisfied the Government will overestimate the crop this season as badly as they underestimated it last season. However, they also point out the certainty of a famine in cotton supplies regardless of the possibilities of the present crop yield. While the above report, as explained, is made from questionnaires not sent to the producers but to the best experts and authorities in the various lines of the cotton industry, it might not be amiss to refer to the nearness of the correctness of the report on acreage and indicated yield issued by the American Cotton Association at this same date last year, reading as follows:

"Allowing a deduction in production this year of 12 per cent on account of the reduction of 51.17 per cent in the use of commercial fertilizers, added to the acreage reduction of 30.73 per cent, making an estimated total of 42.75 per cent, the forecast of production for 1921, as compared with the 1920 crop, would be 7,558,365 500-pound bales."

The final report of the Government as to the yield of the 1921 cotton crop showed 7,952,539 500-pound bales.

A bullish feature that has not been fully stressed is the farmers' cooperative marketing movement, controlling approximately 4,000,000 bales, the strong and forceful organization of the cotton growers under the American Cotton Association and then the senatorial agricultural bloc in Washington. We can not think that the cotton farmer will revert to his low standard of living, and, in fact, we feel that the ultimate consumer would not want him to do so. The difference in price of 20 cents and 35 cents means to the farmer the difference between poverty and a fair standard of living, and this difference of 15 cents a pound would scarcely be felt by the final consumer. For instance, there is about 1 ounce of cotton a pair of half-hose, less than a pound of cotton in a dress shirt, about half a pound in a summer union suit, about 1 ounce in a "linen" collar, etc. Now, the full advance of 15 cents a pound in the price of cotton would be absorbed by the manufacturer, who would advance his price slightly, but the articles would still retail at the popular prices of, say, 25 cents per pair for the half-hose, $1 for the union suit, $1.50 for the shirt, 15 cents for the collar, and $1.50 for the overalls (weighing about 1½ pounds per pair).

It is conceded by the best economists that it is necessary to increase the area of cultivated lands to supply adequate products for the sustenance of human life to take care of the increased population of the world each year at the rate of 2½ acres per capita, or 37,000,000 acres each year. Yet within the last two years statistics show that instead of this necessary increase we have a marked decrease. This is startlingly illustrated in the great agricultural producing sections of Russia.

When the War Finance Corporation was suspended in May, 1920, it had an unused revolving fund of approximately one-half billion dollars, and there were pending applications for millions of dollars. I protested against its removal and the policy of deflation through restriction of credits and contraction of currency by the Federal reserve system and pointed out that the suspension of the War Finance Corporation and the enforcement of the deflation policy would stagnate commerce, paralyze agriculture, and cause our civilization to pay a fearful penalty; and would mean the absolute certainty of famine supplies in the production of staple crops, including cotton, as the world was dependent upon America for production as never before on account of the impoverished condition of a large proportion of the world and their inability to produce. Many of the leaders in finance and business, men with international reputations, in their replies to our questionnaire confirm the correctness as to our position as to the cause of the shortage of cotton and other staple crops and state that no other result could be possible from the enforcement of such policies as mentioned above. Our prediction is being startlingly verified to-day. We are face to face with the most acute cotton famine since 1865.

W. Arthur Shelton, a prominent statistician and expert, well says:

"Cotton is not the only fiber that is likely to be scarce during the next 18 months. We have pointed out that the jute crop of India was only 40 per cent of normal last season, and it is now reported that the new crop of jute and hemp is likely to be small. The flax crop is some 70 per cent of that of last year and wool production 15 per cent less than an average. The advancing prices of cotton, wool, jute, hemp, flax, and silk are indications that the general shortage of fiber is now a price factor. Higher prices for cotton, jute, hemp, and wool seem especially likely because of a shortage of each of these and because of the relation between the prices of these fibers."

At no time since the war between the States has the world's cotton supplies been more uncertain. The boll weevil now covers 90 per cent of the cotton belt. The best experts show that the largest number of live weevils on record have passed through the past winter and that the fields are being infested as never before. The cotton farmer is loaded with an inflated debt; his credit is seriously impaired and his ability and incentive for production are both at low ebb.

The American farmers incurred losses on the production of the 1920 and 1921 crops of $12,000,000,000, based on the cost of production and the selling price, and of this amount the southern cotton producers have suffered losses of $2,300,000,000. These stupendous losses are represented by unsettled obligations due bankers, merchants, manufacturers, and other lines of industry extending credits for the production of these crops. This brings this Nation face to face with one of the most serious problems it has confronted within the last century—an adjustment of these inflated debts so that we can have adequate production of agricultural products.

In view of the world's steadily increasing needs for agricultural production, including cotton, a solution of this problem is a national and world-wide necessity. The unchangeable law of cause and effect and of supply and demand plainly indicates that we are facing the most acute famine of raw cotton since the War between the States before the 1923 cotton crop can reach the market; and even before that time the matter of sufficient supplies of raw cotton will be of more serious concern to the cotton-consuming world than at any period within the last half century.

The settlement of the German reparation is now a certainty. The adjustment of the Russian problem is assured. This means an enormous increased demand for cotton. World leaders are concentrating their efforts upon the restoration of commerce, realizing that it is only in this way prosperity can be restored. As a result, the law of supply and demand will function. The demand is assured. What about the supplies?

The South will maintain its monopoly of cotton production which God has given it. However, a permanent higher level of prices is absolutely necessary to secure sufficient production, on account of the added cost from the stupendous losses suffered by the growers and the additional expense caused by the ravages of the boll weevil.

EXHIBIT B.

THE FUTURE OF COTTON—SHORT-SIGHTED POLICY OF THE WORLD'S SPINNERS AND MANUFACTURERS.

[By Sir Charles W. Macara, Bart., Manchester, England.]

(NOTE.—The following article has been written by Sir Charles W. Macara, of Manchester, England, one of the largest British cotton manufacturers, and who is recognized as a leading world authority on the cotton industry, having served as president of the International Cotton Spinners' Federation for 11 years. It will be noted in this article that Mr. Macara strongly advocates that the spinners of the world should take a larger measure of interest in the welfare of the cotton growers, to the end that the producers of cotton may receive not only the cost of production but fair and reasonable profits. He further takes the position that the world spinners must depend upon the Southern States of America for their supplies of raw cotton as it appears to be practically impossible to grow supplies in large quantities in any other country. In view of Sir Charles Macara's great influence and unrivaled experience in all lines of the cotton industry, his able article will prove of untold interest and benefit as it covers matters of vital importance to the entire industry.)

In a letter I have received from my esteemed friend Mr. Harvie Jordan, secretary of the American Cotton Association, dealing with the present unsatisfactory condition of things in the cotton-growing area of the Southern States, I find a request that I should "express the attitude of the spinning industry regarding the payment of a price for cotton that will enable growers to produce the staple on a basis of cost, plus a reasonable profit."

I should be very glad indeed to be able to do so, but, unfortunately, I do not yet find that enlightened opinion abroad which will allow me to say that the cotton trade has begun to view our supremely important industry in a comprehensive way—that it has begun to take into account not merely the question and cost of the production of yarn and cloth, but how it must insure for the future a full and in every way adequate supply of the raw material.

It is an extraordinary thing how indifferent the people engaged in the manufacture of cotton are to their welfare in this matter. On this question in particular I have for very many years, but more especially since the war, carried on a very large propaganda work, and I have never ceased to put before the spinners of the world the absolute necessity of seeing that a price is paid to the grower of cotton that will remunerate him for his labor and enterprise.

How is it possible to secure present and future supplies otherwise? One would think that it would be the first concern of anyone engaged in business to see that his raw material was placed beyond the possibility of doubt, but somehow those who spin and manufacture cotton seem to have little or no anxiety as to the supplies upon which the whole of their existence depends. Possibly the regularity with which cotton has year by year come to hand when required has lulled them into a sense of security, or maybe the fact that most of the raw material is grown so far away from the places where it is manufactured that it induces a feeling of unconcern. At all events, this fatal indifference or inertia exists, and I see nothing but some great upheaval that is likely to bring people to their senses. Some day the desire to obtain cotton at under-cost price will result in a condition of things such as we had in the sixties of last century, and again in 1903–4, when the Lancashire mills and those of the rest of Europe had for 12 months to curtail their production by one-third, and employers had to play Providence to their workpeople by spreading wages over the whole of the 12 months, instead of paying full wages for 8 months and none at all for 4. Then perhaps even the most selfish and short-sighted will begin to take notice.

What has been my object all along is to wake up our people in time and to make them see what a catastrophe it would be both for themselves and the world in general if the wherewithal for our most important manufacturing industry was not forthcoming.

I am by nature neither a pessimist nor an alarmist, but the state of things existing in the cotton fields of America at the present time must give rise to the gravest anxiety in the mind of anyone who has the welfare of his trade and his fellow men at heart. Mr. Harvie Jordan, whose word can be relied upon entirely, tells a story of what he has seen on a personal tour of the cotton-producing States that is calculated to bring not only British spinners but those of every other cotton-manufacturing country to a vivid realization of the position of things. Not only is the boll-weevil menace a terrible reality, but the result of the drastic deflation in the market value of staple farm products has brought farmers in the South to the verge of ruin.

The losses on the two crops of cotton produced in 1920 and 1921 are conservatively estimated at $2,300,000,000, and on the top of this thousands of negro tenants, share croppers, and laborers are leaving the cotton fields and moving to industrial centers as a result of their inability to cope with the changed conditions resulting from the cotton-boll weevil menace. Indeed, the whole situation is changing in the Southern States, and if capital and labor are not forthcoming for a more intensive and naturally more costly system of cultivation the outlook is very black indeed.

"Our efforts are to produce the crop as economically as possible," says Mr. Harvie Jordan, "but it can not be sold for less than the cost of production and the industry maintained in this country."

These are serious and weighty words, and ought to go home to every cotton spinner and manufacturer in the world. For the question arises, If America is obliged to go out of business as a cotton producer, where is the world in future to get its supplies?

It is clear, therefore, that we shall have, by hook or by crook, to get the spinners and manufacturers of the world to view this industry of cotton on comprehensive rather than on sectional lines; factory owners will have to be made to see that it is no use whatever to gloat over advantages gained to the detriment of the planters, and that they are only pursuing a foolish and suicidal policy to expect to make profits themselves while the planters make losses. It simply means that this stupid way of doing business will ultimately result in the planter going out of business, leaving the spinner and manufacturer stranded high and dry. The planter will have to come to be regarded as of the same importance as any other person who touches cotton on its way to the draper's counter, and his profits and rewards will have to be considered just as much as either spinner, manufacturer, finisher, merchant, middleman, or shipper. All are indispensable to the production of the finished article, and all must be sufficiently compensated for the work they do.

It is amazing that the planter is so little regarded, seeing that he is the basis of everything. If cotton could not be got, then none of us would be wanted. What I have always contended in the numerous articles and books I have published out of an unrivaled experience of the cotton trade all over the world is that we must regard cotton products and manufacture as one whole industry, and that we should always put in the forefront the proper remuneration of the cotton planter. The planter, of course, should be encouraged to avail himself of all modern appliances, scientific methods, and inventions, and to cultivate his land economically and to the greatest advantage, but when he has done this his enterprise should be fully acknowledged and appreciated. Especially should consideration be given at a time like the present, when the work of the planter is not only very costly but surrounded by extraordinary difficulty.

I should like very much to see something done to intensify cultivation, believing as I do that it would be no difficult thing to double the yield of cotton in the fields of the Southern States of America. During my visit to Atlanta in 1907 I was presented with a case of cotton bolls of a description which it was estimated would have produced four bales from an acre. The average at that time was a third of a bale per acre, and it is probably less to-day. I quite admit that these bolls were exceptional, but they were an example of what can be done.

I am inundated with correspondence from people who have read my articles on this and kindred questions which have appeared in British and American journals, and some of the writers have an idea that I personally can take over the whole of the cotton crop and deal with it. This, of course, is what no one man can do, but I shall never cease to try and educate the trade up to its duties and obligations in this matter of remunerating the cotton planter. How thoughtless and illogical are some of the men on the manufacturing side can be gathered by their attitude toward the British Cotton Growing Association. While they constantly show a total indifference as to whether the cotton they secure will pay for the growing, they show dissatisfaction when the scale of developments in cotton growing is below expectation.

I have been uneasy about the cotton situation for long enough. Had my advice been taken at the outbreak of the war cotton would have been withheld from enemy countries and the war shortened by a good 12 months; and again had a reserve of cotton been formed of the large surplus which existed at that time we should not have had the price falling to 4d. a pound owing to the glut, nor should we have seen identically the same cotton run up to 45d. a pound later on, and all the consequent chaos caused by prices of clothing soaring sky-high and then being rushed down by an artificial and disastrous campaign of slump.

It was my misfortune, however, to be defeated by the folly of the Government and the stupidity of the English Cotton Spinners' Federation, the members of which thought of nothing beyond the immediate advantage of procuring a quantity of cheap cotton, and never paused to think that the planter might retaliate by reducing his acreage under cultivation and make them regret their cupidity later on. The whole thing was a frightful mistake, and cost the country dear in a two years' trade depression from which we are only just now emerging.

My American friends, however, may rest assured that I shall continue to work whole-heartedly for a recognition of the full status of the planter, believing as I do that it is not only to his own but to everybody's interest in the cotton trade that his claims should have first consideration.

EXHIBIT C.

DETAILED REPORT AS TO CONDITION OF PRESENT COTTON CROP, ACREAGE, AND ALL IMPORTANT MATTERS BEARING ON CROP TO BE ISSUED BY AMERICAN COTTON ASSOCIATION—SOME IMPORTANT AND VITAL FACTS CONCERNING THE BOLL WEEVIL.

The American Cotton Association will issue on July 1 a report showing the condition of the cotton crop, the acreage, and various other important matters bearing on the crop as of June 20.

Thousands of questionnaires are being now sent out to our special reporters, covering the 850 cotton-growing counties, each county being represented by a set of reporters representing farmers, bankers, merchants, ginners, and warehousemen and special reporters at large, all reporters being selected after a most thorough investigation as to their qualifications for filling the position. In addition to this, there is a set of special State reporters.

This will be the most complete and accurate report ever issued concerning the production of cotton in America. The association has decided to go to a great deal of extra expense and trouble in the preparation of this report, realizing that accurate information concerning all phases of the cotton-producing industry, due to the great shortage of raw cotton, is of more importance to the cotton-consuming world and all lines of industry dependent upon cotton than any time within the last 50 years.

In addition to the various details shown in the questionnaire, the report will show the condition of the cotton crop as of June 20, the increase or decrease in cotton acreage, the increase or decrease in the use of fertilizers to cotton, and it will show more accurately than any report ever issued the area infested by the boll weevil and the extent of its damage. It will also show acreage abandonment and the financial condition of the farmers.

Information reaching our headquarters as a result of tests impress upon the officials of the association as never before the importance of securing some scientific method for eradicating the boll weevil. Cotton production has dropped, as shown by the Department of Agriculture, to approximately 124 pounds per acre, the yield showing a steady decrease.

We find as a result of scientifically conducted tests that it is found that the boll weevil in addition to destroying growing cotton by puncturing the squares, blooms, forms, and bolls also reduce the productivity of the soil. The constant destruction causes the plant to draw on the soil for elements which produce fruit far in excess of the amount that would be drawn under normal conditions. Consecutive plots of the same soil planted to cotton under boll-weevil conditions and planted to cotton protected from the boll weevil over the five-year test absolutely demonstrates that this condition exists. The nonprotected plot is protected in alternating years to ascertain the production in fruiting as a result of elements drawn from the soil by the damage of the boll weevil to the growing plant. It was the general consensus of opinion heretofore that the boll weevil did no damage to the productivity of the soil, as the plant when damaged by the boll weevil became very vigorous, showing many times the size as under normal conditions. This idea, however, has been absolutely exploded as a result of the above test. The fruit-producing elements taken from the soil under boll-weevil conditions are far in excess of normal conditions and are not returned. Only the vegetable-growing elements are returned by plowing under the stalks. Then, too, the boll weevil greatly increases the cost of cotton production. As no cotton can be produced under boll-weevil conditions after August 1 to 15, therefore, over 90 per cent of the Cotton Belt the matter of an early killing frost or a late killing frost will have no bearing on production.

With the boll weevil covering 90 per cent of the belt, this is one of the most serious problems that has faced every line of the cotton industry within the last century.

The questionnaire we are sending out to thousands of reporters covering every section of the Cotton Belt and every line of industry interested in cotton production for the compilation of our report is as follows:

Town ———, county ———, State ———, June 20–22. Estimate condition cotton crop as of June 20–22 ——— per cent of normal. How does condition compare same time last year? ——— per cent. With 10-year average? ——— per cent. How many days late crop? ———. Estimated increase or decrease in cotton acreage planted your county for year 1922? ——— per cent increase. ——— per cent decrease. PROPOSED DUTIES ON FOOD, TABLEWARE, AND WOMEN'S WEAR.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have the Secretary read a communication from citizens of the State of Mississippi affecting a public question.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, the Secretary will read as requested.

The reading clerk read as follows:

Hon. JOHN SHARP WILLIAMS,
United States Senate, Washington, D. C.

DEAR SIR: Will you please read into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the following resolution and have a copy of the RECORD containing it sent me:

"Resolved, That we protest against the food, tableware, and women's wear schedules of the Fordney-McCumber bill. These schedules will increase the cost of living in every American home. They are fines levied by American men upon American women and upon American children. They should not be allowed to become law."

Yours truly,

SUSIE V. POWELL,
Chairman of Home Economics,
Mississippi Federation of Women's Clubs.

PETITIONS AND MEMORIALS.

Mr. McLEAN presented a petition of sundry Federal employees of New Haven, Conn., and vicinity, praying for the passage of House bill 8928, to provide for the classification of civilian positions within the District of Columbia and in the field service, which was referred to the Committee on Civil Service.

He also presented a resolution of the Metal Trades Department, American Federation of Labor, of New Haven, Conn., protesting against the enactment of legislation granting ship subsidies, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce.

He also presented petitions of the ministers and congregations of the First Congregational Church of Guilford; the Winchester Congregational Church, of Winchester Center; the Woman's Auxiliary of St. John's Church, of Salisbury; the East Pearl Street Methodist Episcopal Church, of New Haven; the Orange Congregational Church, of Orange; and sundry citizens of Norwich, all in the State of Connecticut, praying for the granting of relief to the suffering peoples of Asia Minor, particularly of Armenia, which were referred to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

He also presented a petition of sundry citizens of Hartford, Conn., praying for the prompt passage of an adequate tariff law based upon American valuations, which was referred to the Committee on Finance.

He also presented resolutions of James W. Milne Camp, No. 14, of Rockville, and William McKinley Camp, No. 9, of Norwalk, both of the United Spanish War Veterans in the State of Connecticut, favoring the passage of House bill 4, granting relief to soldiers and sailors of the war with Spain, Philippine insurrection, and Chinese Boxer rebellion campaign; to widows, former widows, and dependent parents of such soldiers and sailors; and to certain Army nurses, which were referred to the Committee on Pensions.

SUPPLIES FOR THE NATIONAL GUARD.

Mr. SUTHERLAND, from the Committee on Military Affairs, to which was referred the bill (S. 3704) to amend an act entitled "An act making appropriations for the support of the Army for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1922, and for other purposes," reported it without amendment and submitted a report (No. 779) thereon.

UNITED STATES VETERANS' BUREAU.

Mr. SMOOT. I report back favorably without amendment from the Committee on Finance the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 313) providing for the disposal of articles produced by patients in the United States Veterans' Bureau, and I ask for its immediate consideration.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

Mr. ROBINSON. Let us have first a statement of the purpose and effect of the joint resolution.

Mr. SMOOT. If the Senator will hear the joint resolution read he will have it fully explained.

Mr. ROBINSON. Very well; let the joint resolution be read in full.

The VICE PRESIDENT. It will be read.

The reading clerk read the joint resolution as follows:

Resolved, etc., That the Director of the United States Veterans' Bureau is authorized to make regulations governing the disposal of articles produced by patients of such bureau in the course of their curative treatment, either by allowing the patients to retain the same or by selling the articles and depositing the money received to the credit of the appropriation from which materials for making the articles were purchased.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection to the present consideration of the joint resolution?

There being no objection, the joint resolution was considered as in Committee of the Whole.

The joint resolution was reported to the Senate without amendment, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

MESSAGE FROM THE HOUSE.

A message from the House of Representatives, by Mr. Overhue, its enrolling clerk, announced that the House had passed a bill (H. R. 12022) relative to the naturalization and citizenship of married women, in which it requested the concurrence of the Senate.

BILL INTRODUCED.

Mr. WILLIS introduced a bill (S. 3733) granting the consent of Congress to the city of Warren, in the State of Ohio, its successors and assigns, to construct, maintain, and operate a dam across the Mahoning River, in the State of Ohio, which was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Commerce.

TARIFF BILL AMENDMENT.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to House bill 7456, the tariff bill, which was referred to the Committee on Finance and ordered to be printed.

KATHERINE MACDONALD.

Mr. MYERS submitted an amendment proposing to appropriate $9,819, to pay Katherine Macdonald, of Butte, Mont., for losses sustained by her through the building of the Corbett Tunnel, a Government project, etc., intended to be proposed by him to House bill 12090, the third deficiency appropriation bill, which was referred to the Committee on Appropriations and ordered to be printed.

ASSIGNMENT OF CERTAIN NAVAL OFFICERS.

Mr. LODGE submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to the bill (H. R. 11214) authorizing the President to scrap certain vessels in conformity with the provisions of the treaty to limit naval armaments, and for other purposes, which was referred to the Committee on Naval Affairs, ordered to be printed, and to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

On page 3, line 9, add the following: That three reserve officers are hereafter authorized to be retained on active shore duty in the historical section of the Office of Naval Intelligence, though beyond the age of disenrollment or retirement.

HOUSE BILL REFERRED.

The bill (H. R. 12022) relative to the naturalization and citizenship of married women, was read twice by its title and referred to the Committee on Immigration.

DECISIONS OF THE SUPREME COURT.

Mr. EDGE. Mr. President, I wish, first, to propound a question as to the parliamentary situation. I understood last evening that the Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE] had requested that the address which he started to read should go into the RECORD without reading. If I am mistaken about that, I would like to be informed, because I wish to address the Senate briefly following the address of the Senator from Wisconsin. He read through a portion of it, and then permitted the Senate to vote on the pending question, and I am not quite positive what the parliamentary situation is at this time.

Mr. MCCUMBER. Mr. President, at the request of the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] the address was ordered to be printed in the RECORD yesterday. The Senator from Wisconsin informed me this morning that instead of proceeding with the reading of it, he would allow it to be printed in the RECORD without reading.

Mr. EDGE. That being the situation, and assuming that the address has been ordered printed in the RECORD and will appear in the RECORD, I desire briefly to address the Senate on the same subject.

The Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], when rising to a question of personal privilege, inferred that it was unethical for a colleague to insert in the RECORD an attack upon the expressed views of a fellow Senator. The Senator from Wisconsin seems to consider the address of Dr. Butler as being a personal attack rather than a disagreement with the policies recently proclaimed by the Senator.

That the question of ethics should be raised especially by the Senator from Wisconsin is particularly surprising to me. I did not ask the Senator's permission, neither did I then nor do I now think it a lack of courtesy. May I say to the Senator—I regret that he is not in the Chamber, but I have sent a page to try to locate him—that I feel, greatly to his credit, in most cases at least, that I have considered him one of the most conspicuous advocates of free speech in the country. I can not conceive why the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD should be the sacred exception.

I have during my short career as a Senator endeavored to subscribe to a qualified reverence for the traditions of the Senate; but frankly, Mr. President, I find myself entirely unable to agree with the policy which seems to permit a Senator to say anything he pleases touching not only the viewpoint and policy but at times the character of citizens of the Republic, and then to insist on immunity when a Senator is under discussion.

Every Member of this body thoroughly appreciates, I am sure, that in recent times at least—perhaps it was not so in the old days—none outside of Senators, and sometimes not even Senators, are immune from most venomous attacks on the floor of this Chamber. From the President of the United States and members of the Cabinet, and touching practically every activity of the country, the Senate has recently at least been a limited forum where citizens have been the subject of at times startling attacks.

So far as I am concerned, I waive any immunity, whether it be upon the floor of the Senate or elsewhere, and I should think Senators would welcome the publication in the people's own production, the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, of opinions which may differ from their own.

How can Members of this body in fairness, when they proclaim time after time that they are the people's representatives and when they attack either individuals or policies, take exception to the insertion of a reply or a response when made publicly and without reserve or qualification? We know perfectly well that attacks are made almost daily in this Chamber upon men who hold high public positions and who, because they are not Members of the Senate, are unable to reply, excepting through the medium of a public statement, which, as a rule, receives much less consideration in the public press than does the attack of the Senator. So far as I am concerned, I am a little weary of the policy of standing on our dignity, when almost one-half of our time is spent in criticizing the activities or viewpoint or policy of those outside of the Chamber. I can not subscribe to that type of consistency.

The CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, which is published at the expense of the taxpayers of the country, seems to be, under the traditions of the Senate, or at least according to the view of some Senators, simply a receptacle for the wise or unwise utterances of Senators; but an answer from a citizen in any way differing should not appear therein.

We do not grant citizens immunity; why should we ask it for ourselves? We are permitted here almost without qualification, so long as we do not libel a fellow Senator, to give utterances to any thought that comes to our minds; but the answer of a citizen representing the other 110,000,000 people must not appear in the RECORD, because it is unethical. And yet the Senator from Wisconsin directs his attack upon the Supreme Court mainly on the premise that this is a people's government and the work of Congress should not be set aside by any other branch of the Government.

Mr. President, it reminds me somewhat of the bully of the old country school, who blusters about and when some one, tiring of his bluff and braggadocio, asserts himself, usually in the recognized American style of self-defense, the bully runs away.

The RECORD should not be simply a personally conducted senatorial publication. The RECORD, in all fairness to the taxpayers, if it is to be used for the bright inspirations of Senators, should likewise be open to the occasional bright and pertinent thoughts of some of the other citizens of this great Republic.

The RECORD, it appears to me under the apparent ethics of the Senate, would almost resolve itself into a publication "you pat me and I'll pat you"; and if anybody disagrees with our mutual-admiration society or system of patting and petting, they must be refused a place in the taxpayers' publication because it is unethical.

If I may be permitted to paraphrase an expression of a fellow Senator, whose ability I greatly admire and who remarked after completing a most forceful and eloquent speech, "If this be treason, make the best of it," may I be permitted to suggest if my viewpoint as to the ethics of the Senate in this regard is transgressing the sacred policy of this body, then adjudge me guilty.

So, Mr. President, while I do not believe in personal attacks, whether on the floor of the Senate or outside, still I am not prepared to admit that the speech of Doctor Butler can fairly be considered a personal attack on the Senator from Wisconsin.

True, Doctor Butler in forceful language disagreed most positively with the suggested amendments to the Constitution proposed by the Senator from Wisconsin. He termed them, as I recall the speech, "anti-American" and "not representing either political party." I agree with him. Doctor Butler considers the speech anti or un American, and I contend that all precedents and all references going back one hundred or more years will justify that viewpoint. The doctor attacks the Senator's remedies, and in attacking the Senator's remedies he, of course, must disagree with the Senator. He does not say the Senator is anti-American; he says his teachings and his policy and suggestions would be anti-American.

Does the publication of this type of viewpoint transgress the ethics of the Senate? If it does, Mr. President, then I am firmly convinced that the Senate in all fairness should revise its own privileges and withhold to a very considerable extent its almost daily tirades upon the viewpoint and policies of eminent citizens and public officials not members of this body.

So much for the ethics, the question of personal privilege, and the crime the Senator from New Jersey was guilty of committing when he asked and secured unanimous consent to publish extracts from Doctor Butler's speech in the people's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD.

As a layman, I presume I should not attempt to discuss the wisdom of the policy enunciated by the Senator from Wisconsin. I thoroughly appreciate that I am not equipped by study or association, it might be said, to discuss legal problems. At the same time, Mr. President, my layman view of the policy of the Senator from Wisconsin, crudely expressed, would be that any man, especially when occupying a high public position, who invites or advocates a lessening of respect for the highest courts in the land and who through his violent attack seems bent on the destruction of our present form of government, weakens the very cornerstone of our American political system, which is the judicial protection of individual liberty and private rights against any encroachment even on the part of the Government itself.

When a public official attacks that position he contributes to a situation which may ultimately mean the downfall of the Republic. If the Senator from Wisconsin takes exception to the address of the President of the Columbia College, so far as it is possible, it will give me great pleasure, inasmuch as I inserted it in the RECORD contrary to the ethics of the Senate, to subscribe as a Senator to every word which appeared therein and to discuss it as well as I am able from the layman's standpoint.

Let us analyze Doctor Butler's address on this subject. The doctor said, in part:

"The public press of yesterday reports the text of a speech made by the senior Senator from Wisconsin, Mr. LA FOLLETTE, before the annual convention of the American Federation of Labor at Cincinnati. This speech presents a view of our American Government that is so false, and announces a political program that is so revolutionary, as to justify, indeed to demand, quick reply. Senator LA FOLLETTE made an attack not only upon the American judiciary but upon the very corner stone of our American political system, which is the judicial protection of individual liberty and private rights against any encroachment even on the part of Government itself

"Senator LA FOLLETTE is quoted as saying: 'A century and a half ago our forefathers shed their blood in order that they might establish on this continent a government deriving its just powers from the consent of the governed, in which the will of the people, expressed through their duly elected representatives, should be sovereign.'

"Our forefathers did nothing of the sort. They took good care to do something quite different.

"What our forefathers did was to retain sovereign power in the people of these United States and to erect a Government of strictly limited powers and functions, divided into an executive, a judicial, and a legislative branch. Each one of these branches of the Government rests upon one and the same constitutional foundation. Each in its own sphere represents the people and gives voice and effect to the public will. The notion that the legislative branch of the Government in some mysterious way more adequately represents the will of the people than does the executive or the judicial branch is without warrant either in legal theory or in our political history.

"The judicial branch of the Government represents the people's fundamental principles, their controlling ideals, and their continuing purpose. It brings, and justly brings, to the test fixed by these any and every legislative act that may be challenged. This power of judicial review and of judicial protection is distinctive American doctrine and constitutes America's greatest single contribution to the cause of free government. Without it we should be swept hither and yon by the swiftly shifting tides of mere opinion and by the active propaganda of aggressive minorities. Destroy the principle of judicial protection of public law and of private rights and the America that we have known falls to pieces.

"The Executive, too, directly represents public opinion and the popular will. The President of the United States is the one public officer for whom the whole people vote. His constituency is the Nation; he speaks for the Nation and is responsible to the Nation.

"While in theory the legislative branch of the Government directly represents the people's will, it has in fact during recent years come to be less representative of public opinion and public interest than either the executive or the judicial branch of the Government. Parochialism, sectionalism, and various forms of self-interest and fanaticism have all operated to weaken the truly representative character of the legislative branch. It is now far from certain that when a State legislature or the Congress enacts a law that law has the support of public opinion. When the Congress meets, the public heart sinks, and when the Congress adjourns public pæans rise to heaven.

"The program announced by Senator LA FOLLETTE is not new, but it is ominous that it should have been cheered at a convention of American workingmen, for those of us who work have most to gain from the preservation of the American system of government and most to lose from the overthrow of the principle of judicial protection."

A short editorial from the Philadelphia Inquirer printed a few days ago, it seems to me, presents the situation at least very concisely. I quote a portion of that editorial, as follows:

To say that a Supreme Court decision declaring an act of Congress unconstitutional is defeating the purposes of the founders of the Government is nonsense. The Supreme Court was established for that very purpose, because if all of the conflicting and doubtful laws which are passed by Congress were permitted to stand we should have confusion and anarchy instead of a stable and well-ordered system of government. It has been pointed out more than once that the very existence of this high tribunal and the willingness of the people to abide by its decisions is the greatest possible proof of their ability to govern themselves. Pull that important stone away from the foundations of the Republic, and in spite of our wealth and greatness it would not take us long to lapse into a condition of chaos. The fathers of the Republic, in spite of LA FOLLETTE to the contrary, knew exactly what they were doing.

As I recall, the Senator from Wisconsin among his references last evening read a statement of Alexander Hamilton, and I think, if I am not mistaken, he referred to former Chief Justice Marshall. I desire to read a very few references from the life of John Marshall written by that able statesman who I am sure will soon be a Member of this body, the Hon. Albert J. Beveridge. Members of the Senate frequently refer to the policy of our forefathers and deplore the fact, if it is a fact, that at times we seem to be ready to depart from their teachings and their doctrines; and, if the Senator from Wisconsin feels that he has the slightest encouragement for his remedy in order that the courts shall be weakened, I am quite positive he can not glean it from the opinions and statements of the statesmen of the early days of the Republic.

What Alexander Hamilton wrote in the Federalist, which had such a profound influence on the decision of Chief Justice Marshall in the famous case of Marbury against Madison in this particular connection, was:

The interpretation of the laws is the proper and peculiar province of the courts. A constitution is, in fact, and must be regarded by the judges, as a fundamental law. It therefore belongs to them to ascertain its meaning, as well as the meaning of any particular act proceeding from the legislative body. If there should happen to be an irreconcilable variance between the two, * * * the Constitution ought to be preferred to the statute, the intention of the people to the intention of their agents.

Again, speaking of Marshall, in the same case:

After writing nearly 9,000 words, he now reached the commanding question: Can the Supreme Court of the United States invalidate an act which Congress has passed and the President has approved?

That is certainly absolutely pertinent to the present question and to the remedy offered by the Senator from Wisconsin.

Marshall avowed that the Supreme Court can and must do that very thing, and in so doing made Marbury against Madison historic. In this, the vital part of his opinion, the Chief Justice is direct, clear, simple, and convincing. The people, he said, have an elemental right to establish such principles for "their future government, as * * * shall most conduce to their own happiness." This was "the basis on which the whole American fabric had been erected."

Again:

There is no "middle ground." The Constitution is either "a superior paramount law," not to be changed by legislative enactment, or else "it is on a level with the ordinary legislative acts" and, as such, "alterable" at the will of Congress. If the Constitution is supreme, then an act of Congress violative of it is not law; if the Constitution is not supreme, then "written constitutions are absurd attempts, on the part of the people, to limit a power in its own nature illimitable." Three times in a short space Marshall insists that for Congress to ignore the limitations which the Constitution places upon it is to deny the whole theory of government under written constitutions.

If I wished to take the time, I might refer right here to the address by another colleague, a distinguished member of the minority, my good friend the Senator from Kentucky, Mr. STANLEY, who also spoke in my home town of Atlantic City before the same organization—the State Bar Association—who heard the timely address of Doctor Butler. The Senator from Kentucky spoke most eloquently and convincingly, from my viewpoint, on the question of meddling with the Constitution and abridging the personal privileges of the governed by the adoption of the eighteenth amendment.

I am not going to discuss this subject further than to remark in passing that the Senator from Kentucky feels that amendments to the Constitution can destroy the fundamental and clearly defined viewpoint of our forefathers, and expressed himself most positively to the effect that the eighteenth amendment did; and I am equally positive that any other amendment, such as suggested by the Senator from Wisconsin, to permit the Congress to circumvent the authority of the Supreme Court would even more strikingly destroy the intent of the Constitution.

Mr. President, if I have been unethical in bringing to the attention of the country a clearly expressed opposition to the constitutional theory of the Senator from Wisconsin, thank God, I offended ethics!

If this attack upon the highest court in our land, the bulwark of liberty and freedom, has been brought to the attention of the country to such an extent that the other side, the right side, can be fully aired in this Chamber, then I am pleased. I feel quite positive, Mr. President, that ethics will not be disastrously offended if Senators better qualified than I am to discuss the legal side of this preposterous proposition are inspired by the opening of this attack to defend the fundamental laws of the land.

In closing, may I give expression to just a personal word? During the period of our country's participation in the World War I had the great privilege of being the Governor of the State of New Jersey. I was, as undoubtedly was every other governor of all the other 47 States in the Union, impressed with that wonderful spirit of cooperation and loyalty which spontaneously came from every quarter. Religious prejudice, social distinctions, class prejudice, were cast aside as if they had never existed. It was almost embarrassing at times for those in authority to act upon the many suggestions in the interest of the advance of the common cause. It was so inspiring, moving around among the citizens of the State, to see this wonderful, universal, unanimous enlistment in the common cause. It seemed in those days as if the one great recompense for the sacrifices of the war was going to be greater tolerance, a clearer understanding, a determination to meet problems without thought of political expediency or class prejudice or distinction.

The sacrifices were made. The war was won. The country has struggled for three or four years following it endeavoring to get together and reach an understanding with a common purpose. I am afraid to a great extent we have failed; and when I realize, as some of the happenings of recent days seem to emphasize, how far apart we seem to be in governmental policy and understanding as represented right in this Chamber, it makes one feel that the sacrifices of the war, to that extent at least, were in vain.

Oh, is it not possible to bring ourselves back to the atmosphere and the environment of those days, when, with few exceptions, the entire country was enlisted in the common cause? When I listen to the widely divergent opinions which seem to prevail, it becomes most discouraging.

Fellow Senators, can we not all realize that the problems of peace, with all the insidious efforts to bore from without and from within, are much more difficult than the problems of war when, following the martial music and uniforms, it was so easy to work in harmony? I wonder if it is beyond accomplishment.

Holding almost in our control, as we do in this Chamber, the destiny of 110,000,000 people for happiness or discontent, recognizing that every industry of every kind to-day is almost dependent upon our decisions and our teamwork, I wonder if it is not possible to rise above the partisanship of extreme viewpoint and prejudice and enlist again, as we did in 1918, in the common cause of our common country?

Mr. KELLOGG. Mr. President, I regret to take a moment of the Senate from the consideration of the tariff bill to discuss any other subject, but when a Senator of the United States on the floor announces doctrines so subversive of our representative government, the liberties of the people, and the guaranties of the Bill of Rights, which have been won in the long upward struggle of the human race, have been fought for upon fields of battle, and sanctified by the blood of martyrs, I think it is time for some one to express dissent from these pernicious doctrines.

I listened to the speech of the Senator from Wisconsin, delivered on the floor of the Senate last evening, and I read the speech which he made at Cincinnati to the American Federation of Labor as published in the papers. I am not going to discuss the merits of the decisions of the Supreme Court, for I am as heartily in favor of protecting the Nation against child labor as is the Senator; but I am in favor of doing it by constitutional means. I shall devote the few moments which I have to the discussion of fundamental principles announced by the Senator, which strike at the very foundations of constitutional government, human liberty, and the well-being of society.

In the Senator's speech in Cincinnati, after stating that the Supreme Court had usurped power not conferred upon it by the Constitution in declaring laws unconstitutional, the Senator proposed this change by constitutional amendment:

> That no inferior Federal judge shall set aside a law of Congress on the ground that it is unconstitutional.
> That if the Supreme Court assumes to decide any law of Congress unconstitutional, or by interpretation undertakes to assert a public policy at variance with the statutory declaration of Congress, which alone under our system is authorized to determine the public policies of Government, the Congress may, by repassing the law, nullify the action of the court.

Again, he said:

> We have never faced the fundamental issue of judicial usurpation squarely. The time has come when we must put the ax to the root of this monstrous growth upon the body of our Government, the usurped power of the Federal courts must be taken away, and the Federal judges must be made responsive to the popular will.

Then the Senator outlined his proposed constitutional amendment and said:

> What I propose is that Congress shall be enabled to override this usurped judicial veto and to declare finally the public policy just as it has the power to override the presidential veto so that we may realize in fact the fundamental purpose of the Government as declared in Article I, section 1, "that all legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives."

The Senator's propositions are two: (1) That the Federal courts have usurped power not conferred upon them in declaring a legislative act unconstitutional; and (2) that the Constitution should be amended so as to give Congress the absolute power to nullify the Constitution of the United States and all the guaranties of liberty and personal rights therein contained. I shall first take up this so-called usurpation of power.

From the time the Constitution was framed, during the discussions when it was before the various States for adoption, at the time of the great decision of John Marshall in Marbury against Madison in 1803, down to the present time, there has never been any doubt that under our written Constitution the only possible way the Constitution could be made effective was through the decisions of the Supreme Court of the United States, which was expressly given jurisdiction to enforce the constitutional provisions, the supreme law of the land.

The people of the Colonies who formed themselves into a confederated Government for the purpose of defense had gone through seven years of war. They had made incalculable sacrifices to establish self-government and personal liberty. They adopted a written Constitution that representative democracy might be perpetuated and personal liberty guaranteed, and in order that those rights might not be lightly taken away they provided that the Constitution could only be amended by a two-thirds vote of the Congress and a three-fourths vote of the States.

Mr. President, the power is in the people to change the Constitution in a constitutional way. The power is in the people to take away these guaranties of liberty, the bright, shining light of our Constitution, but I hope the time will never come when the American people will do it.

Under this Constitution there was created the executive, the legislative, and the judicial branches of the Government and their powers defined and limitations placed upon each.

As originally adopted, the Constitution did not contain the so-called Bill of Rights soon thereafter adopted and constituting the first 10 amendments. It is a fact well recorded in history that but for the general understanding when the Constitution was pending for ratification before the legislatures of the States, had it not been well known that the so-called Bill of Rights would be thereafter adopted as an amendment to the Constitution, it never would have been ratified by the requisite number of States. The American people were so intent on framing and establishing by written Constitution those guaranties of personal liberty, property rights, free speech, freedom of thought and religious liberty, that they insisted that they be embodied in the fundamental law of the land, the Constitution of the United States.

If the Congress is the sole interpreter of the Constitution and can pass any law it sees fit, how are you going to maintain the provisions of the Constitution creating the Government and limiting the powers of the several branches? How are you going to maintain the constitutional protection?

The Legislature could limit or abolish any department of the Government or change the form. Let me illustrate: The Constitution provides that no bill of attainder or ex post facto shall be passed.

Suppose the Congress were to pass a bill of attainder against an American citizen, and he sought the protection of the courts of the United States. Is it true that the courts would be denied the right to declare the bill of attainder unlawful which was expressly prohibited by the Constitution? Is it true that that is a usurpation of law by the Supreme Court unjustified by the Constitution?

Again, the Constitution provides that no tax or duty shall be levied on articles exported from any State. Suppose Congress were to pass a law to-morrow levying a tax on exports from a State, and in the courts a suit were brought to enforce that tax; will the court enforce that which is prohibited specifically by the written Constitution, which is by that Constitution declared to be the supreme law of the land, when the Constitution gives the Supreme Court jurisdiction to enforce its provisions? It is said there is no express provision of the Constitution which gives the Supreme Court the right to declare a legislative act unconstitutional. There is no express provision of the Constitution which says that Congress can not tax the instrumentalities of the States and the activities of the States, but it can not do it, from the very nature of the two governments and their independence.

Let us look for just a moment at the Bill of Rights, which was adopted about 1789, and made a part of the Constitution.

The first amendment provides that Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press; or the right of the people peaceably to assemble and address the Government for redress of grievances.

Suppose Congress were to pass a law establishing a religion, or preventing the free exercise of religious beliefs, or abridging the freedom of speech. Are the courts to enforce it because it is the mandate of the Congress, not adopted, according to the constitutional provision, by a two-thirds vote of the Congress and three-fourths of the States?

Amendment 4 provides that the people shall be secure in their persons, houses, papers, and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures. This runs against the Congress as well as against the action of the courts. If the Congress provides that a man shall be seized and thrown into prison, and his papers searched for evidence against him, without a charge or without trial, is the court to stand by and enforce it because the Congress has passed such a law?

The fifth amendment provides that no person shall be held to answer for a capital or otherwise infamous crime, except upon an indictment, and so forth, nor shall any person be twice placed in jeopardy of life or limb; nor shall he be compelled in any criminal case to be a witness against himself, or be deprived of life, liberty, or property without due process of law; nor shall private property be taken for public use without just compensation.

This amendment contains some of the most important protections of human rights and property rights which are embodied in the Constitution. Is it possible that any department of the Government, the executive or the legislative, may take away those rights and the courts be powerless to enforce the rights of individuals, to protect them in those sacred rights guaranteed to them, and which are necessary to human liberty and human progress?

Amendment 6 guarantees the right in criminal prosecution to a speedy trial by an impartial jury of the State and district in which the crime shall have been committed, and so forth.

These rights were not new to the men framing the Constitution. They had been struggled for, fought for by the Anglo-Saxon race for more than 600 years. Priceless treasure and sacrifice of human life had been given to establish these principles of liberty. From the day of King John at Runnymede, 600 years before the adoption of our Constitution, the struggle had gone on, and the Revolution, in which the framers of the Constitution had been engaged, was the last great struggle of our ancestors to cement and make permanent these guaranties.

I have not the time to go through the long list of authorities, including the declaration of contemporary statesmen at the time of making the Constitution, that in order to effectuate these guaranties of the Constitution the Supreme Court was conferred with the power to declare a legislative act violative of the Constitution, which was the highest law of the land.

The Constitution itself provides that it shall be the supreme law of the land, and the Supreme Court is given jurisdiction to enforce this Constitution.

It was undoubtedly the opinion of the leading men of the convention that the judiciary had the power of declaring a law of Congress violative of the express provisions of the Constitution. Men who held this opinion and expressed themselves were Elbridge Gerry, of Massachusetts; Rufus King, of Massachusetts; Madison finally came to this view; George Mason, of Virginia; James Wilson, of Pennsylvania; Luther Martin, of Maryland, and others; but the greatest exponent of this doctrine was Hamilton.

I shall not stop to read some extracts from Hamilton's work, but I ask permission that there be printed in the RECORD as a part of my remarks certain extracts from pages 101 and 102 of volume 2 of the Federalist.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

APPENDIX.

[From the Federalist. No. 78. By Hamilton.]

No legislative act, therefore, contrary to the Constitution can be valid. To deny this would be to affirm that the deputy is greater than his principal; that the servant is above his master; that the representatives of the people are superior to the people themselves; that men acting by virtue of powers may do not only what their powers do not authorize but what they forbid.

* * * * * * *

The interpretation of the laws is the proper and peculiar province of the courts. A constitution is, in fact, and must be regarded by the judges, as a fundamental law. It therefore belongs to them to ascertain its meaning, as well as the meaning of any particular act proceeding from the legislative body. If there should happen to be an irreconcilable variance between the two, that which has the superior obligation and validity ought, of course, to be preferred; or, in other words, the Constitution ought to be preferred to the statute, the intention of the people to the intention of their agents.

Nor does this conclusion by any means suppose a superiority of the judicial to the legislative power. It only supposes that the power of the people is superior to both; and that where the will of the legislature, declared in its statutes, stands in opposition to that of the people, declared in the Constitution, the judges ought to be governed by the latter rather than the former. They ought to regulate their decisions by the fundamental laws rather than by those which are not fundamental.

Mr. KELLOGG. Suffice it to say that Hamilton, probably the greatest statesman of his time, doing a wonderful work in the advocacy of this Constitution before the legislatures of the various States, expounded this provision of the Constitution, and took the ground that the Supreme Court of the United States was empowered to enforce the Constitution, the supreme law of the land, and to declare null and void an act of the Congress violative of the Constitution.

It is a significant fact that in 1803, when John Marshall decided the case of Marbury against Madison, he had the advantage of the contemporary opinions of the statesmen of the period when the Constitution was adopted, and the discussions before various legislative bodies pending its adoption. Both Hamilton and Marshall were familiar with the constitutional debates, and John Marshall, when threatened with impeachment, delivered a masterly opinion, in Marbury against Madison, which has settled the doctrine that the Supreme Court has a right to enforce constitutional provisions against the action of the executive or the legislative branch. It was the first great judicial step to make secure the Bill of Rights contained in this Constitution. It has been the law from that day to this.

I do not care whether the object in view is accomplished through breaking down the judiciary and destroying its power, or is accomplished by an amendment to the Constitution sweeping away all protection for our form of government and the guaranties of the Bill of Rights. Either is destructive of human liberty and spells the doom of representative democracy. If all the agitators who are going up and down the land denouncing the Supreme Court and the Constitution could have their way, our great representative democracy, bulwarked by the Constitution, which has stood for nearly 140 years, would disappear, and we would relapse into a state of insecurity and to anarchy so conspicuous in certain nations of the world.

If it is true—and I deny it absolutely—that the Government is controlled by an oligarchy of wealth, then the laboring man, the humble citizen, the millions of the toiling masses, should be the last to sweep away those guaranties of liberty and individual rights which have surrounded them for more than a century.

Mr. LA FOLLETTE. Mr. President, I have not objected to any criticism of an address which I delivered on June 14 before the American Federation of Labor at Cincinnati, but it does seem to me that it would have been orderly, and a matter of courtesy as between Senators, if a criticism of that sort was to be inserted in the RECORD, that mention should have been made of that fact to the end that the address itself, which is the subject of so much criticism and animadversion by certain Senators, might have had a place in the RECORD along with the criticism of the address. My first intimation that there had been introduced into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD any criticism of that address did not come from the Senator who introduced the criticism, but came from another Senator on this floor who said to me that as he came into the Senate he heard just a word of the comment of the Senator from New Jersey, and that he fancied that something was being put into the RECORD in criticism of an address I had made at Cincinnati.

I was invited to deliver an address on the decision of the Supreme Court on the child labor law at the annual convention of the American Federation of Labor on the 14th of June. I accepted that invitation. I delivered that address. It has not been printed anywhere so far as I am advised. Only very brief extracts from it have appeared in the public prints, and no one has had a fair opportunity to judge of what I said there.

It seems to me it would have been an ordinarily decent courtesy from one Senator to another, if a Senator was to introduce a criticism of that address, that he should have given me notice at the time that he was going to do it, thus affording me an opportunity to put the address in the RECORD so that it could be judged along with the criticism.

Up to the present hour the address that I made before the American Federation of Labor has been printed nowhere and yet Senators, seizing upon the opportunity to prejudice the American public with respect to that address, have taken the floor here and assailed it.

Yesterday, late in the session, getting recognition as early as I was able to, I briefly replied to the criticism of the president of Columbia University, which had been printed in the RECORD the previous day at the suggestion of the Senator from New Jersey without any notice to me that it was to be inserted. I intended in connection with my answer to the criticism to print the speech as delivered at Cincinnati. The Senator from North Dakota [Mr. MCCUMBER] asked if I would not yield to allow a vote to be taken upon the motion offered by the Senator from Indiana [Mr. WATSON] before I had concluded what I had to say upon the subject. I agreed to that, and as the result of what transpired, which appears in the RECORD, I withheld the presentation of the speech to the Senate at that time.

It will be remembered by Senators that the Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS] asked leave, in view of the fact that the criticism by Nicholas Murray Butler had been printed in the RECORD, that my speech be printed in the RECORD, and he obtained unanimous consent that that be done. In view of that, and solely for the purpose of saving the time of the Senate, I called up the Senator from North Dakota this morning and said to him that while I had thought I ought to read that speech into the RECORD myself, in view of the criticism which had been leveled at it, yet in order to save time this morning I would simply avail myself of the unanimous consent agreement that it be printed and would print it in the RECORD. I called on the telephone the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] and informed him that I intended to do that. He replied over the telephone that he wanted to get some further observations in the RECORD to go out at the same time the speech went out. I reminded him of the fact that he had placed in the RECORD some criticism of the speech that did not go out along with the speech itself, but I left him to take his own course, and he has occupied the time of the Senate this morning in making an added attack upon that speech.

Then, Mr. President, when the Senator from New Jersey concluded his attack I rose in my place here, rather expecting that I might be accorded recognition; the Senator, the famous "trust buster," from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] bobbed up and secured recognition, instant recognition, as though the wires had all been charged with electricity to insure it. He said something about making a tariff speech, and I thought, so far as he was concerned, that he was going to talk about the tariff, so I went up to my committee room to do some work on the oil investigation which the Senate has ordered the Committee on Manufactures to undertake. Then word came to me that the Senator from Minnesota was attacking the speech that had been made in Cincinnati before the American Federation of Labor, that nobody knew anything about, excepting as extracts of it had appeared in the newspapers.

Mr. President, I am going to revise my determination about that speech, and I am going to lay the speech and the comments which I made yesterday all together in one statement before the Senate. I have the floor. I am not going to yield to interruptions. I am going to present my response to Nicholas Murray Butler, the handiman of privilege, who happens to be at the head of Columbia University. I am going to repeat what I said in the Senate yesterday in response to his criticism of that speech and then I am going to put the speech into the RECORD, and I am going to do it without yielding to interruptions, that it may all go to the country together.

I may say, Mr. President, that I purpose shortly to introduce a proposed amendment to the Constitution. I am going to present it for the consideration of the Senate, and at the time when I present it, or shortly thereafter, I am going to make to the Senate an argument in support of the proposed amendment. I am going to review in that argument all of the decisions of the Supreme Court from the beginning of the Government down to the present time in which that court has declared unconstitutional the acts of the legislative branch of the Government. I am going to submit an analysis of those decisions. I purpose to show that the Supreme Court has departed from the position allotted to them by the founders of this Government to interpret the law and administer justice and that its members have become in large measure a legislative body, injecting their views into the acts of Congress and modifying those acts by constructions, in plain violation of the purpose and intent of Congress. Indeed, so far have they gone in this respect that members of that court—such men as Justice Harlan, Justice Day, and Justice Holmes, men whose views should command the respectful attention of this body—have said that the majority of the court were violating the Constitution of the United States; that they were assuming to legislate, when the founders of this Government said that the Congress alone should legislate and that the Supreme Court should adjudicate the law as written.

Mr. President, members of the Supreme Court themselves have administered much severer criticism of their associates and of that court than anything that I have ever uttered against them. They have gradually encroached upon the legislative department of this Government until they destroy, will-nigh destroy, the scheme of Government prepared and carried out for us by the fathers in establishing this Government.

Mr. President. in presenting the criticism that I have made of the Supreme Court, I believe, as I believe in my existence, that I am serving the purpose of the men who founded this Government, that I am not assailing, attacking, or undermining our free institutions. Nay, sir, I am willing to be judged in my time and in the future by the high test of the men who made this Government.

Mr. President, I have not offered any criticism, I made no criticism on yesterday in what I said, of the course of the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], and there was small reason, as I shall show presently, for his taking the floor, or for the "trust buster" from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG] taking the floor to assail my yet unpublished speech to which I am going to give publicity before I quit the floor. I refer to the speech delivered by me at Cincinnati on the 14th day of June. So, in view of what has transpired here this morning, and as showing the purpose of it, I propose—and I am glad that it will appear in the RECORD in this order following the statements of the Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from Minnesota—to put into the RECORD now the criticism that I made, in so far as I made any criticism, and the answer that I made to the abstract of the speech of Nicholas Murray Butler, which the Senator from New Jersey put into the RECORD day before yesterday without giving any notice to me.

What I said upon that occasion with reference to the action of the Senator from New Jersey was as follows:

> The practice has grown up here in the Senate by which Senators as a matter of course procure unanimous consent to print in the RECORD letters, newspaper clippings, or other communications which the Senator offering may think to be of public interest. No one sees the matter in advance except the Senator offering it. The honor and good faith of the Senator offering the matter is the only protection afforded to Senators from having inserted in the RECORD more or less unwarranted attacks concerning them.

Mr. President, I interpolate at this point the observation that that, and that only, is the mild statement that I made with regard to the course pursued by the Senator from New Jersey in putting the so-called abstract of Nicholas Murray Butler's speech in the RECORD without my knowledge. That is all I said about him, and yet that furnished the Senator from New Jersey the occasion for his performance here this morning.

In the address of Doctor Butler, which the Senator caused to be inserted in the RECORD, he quotes me as saying in a speech in Cincinnati a few days ago as follows:

> A century and a half ago our forefathers shed their blood in order that they might establish on this continent a government deriving its just powers from the consent of the governed, in which the will of the people, expressed through their duly elected representatives, should be sovereign.

That is the end of the quotation which Doctor Butler made. He took issue with what I said in the following language:

> Our forefathers did nothing of the sort. They took good care to do something quite different.

That makes up the issue between Doctor Butler and myself, and because of the language which he quoted—for he quotes nothing else from my speech—I assume that it is upon this basis that he charges me with "preaching doctrines anti-American and inimical to liberty and justice." The purposes for which our forefathers shed their blood in the American Revolution were solemnly and unanimously declared in the Declaration of Independence, of which Doctor Butler apparently has never heard. What I said in the opening of my address was nothing more than a weak paraphrase of the immortal words used in the Declaration of Independence; that to secure the rights enumerated in the first sentences of the Declaration "governments are instituted among men, deriving their just powers from the consent of the governed; that whenever any form of government becomes destructive of these ends, it is the right of the people to alter or to abolish it, and to institute new government, laying its foundation on such principles and organizing its powers in such form as to them shall seem most likely to effect their safety and happiness."

I am aware that gentlemen of the ilk of Doctor Butler are ready to contend that our forefathers did not shed their blood in order that they might establish a government on this continent "deriving its just powers from the consent of the governed," and in which the will of the people, expressed through their duly elected representatives, should be supreme; but, as against the contention of Doctor Butler and the Wall Street interests he so ably serves permit me to put into the RECORD the declarations of a few of those men who have done so much to make this Government representative of the will of the people.

I quote these words from Washington as to what this Government is:

The basis of our political system is the right of the people to make and alter their constitutions of government at will.

Madison, whose hand, sir, is credited with having written most of the Constitution, declared:

The people are the only legitimate foundation of power.

Alexander Hamilton said of this Government:

The foundation of the American empire ought to rest on the solid basis of the consent of the governed.

Webster in his immortal reply to Hayne gave birth to the germ that finally flowered into an expression that fell from the lips of Abraham Lincoln and was given to immortality. Webster in his reply to Hayne used these words:

It is the people's Constitution, the people's Government, made for the people, made by the people, and answerable to the people.

Lincoln at Gettysburg on that gray November morning gave immortal life to that idea as he uttered these words:

We here highly resolve that these dead shall not have died in vain; that this Nation, under God, shall have a new birth of freedom; and that government of the people, by the people, for the people shall not perish from the earth.

Mr. President, what was the head and front of my offending which so outraged the sensibilities of Doctor Butler and those special interests in this country he so ably serves? In discussing the intolerable conditions which have grown up outside and contrary to the Constitution of this country, by which the Federal judiciary have infringed upon and to a large extent usurped the lawmaking power, I propose to amend the Constitution, in the regular way, providing—

First. That no inferior Federal judge shall set aside a law of Congress on the ground that it is unconstitutional; and Second. That if the Supreme Court assumes to decide a law of Congress unconstitutional or by interpretation undertakes to assert a public policy contrary to that declared by Congress, then the law may be reenacted in the regular constitutional manner and shall thereafter become effective in spite of the veto of the court.

Mr. President, every person at all familiar with the Constitution of this country and its history knows that this proposal, so far from being revolutionary, merely aims to restore to the lawmaking branch of the Government the power which the Constitution in express terms confers upon it. On this point I should like to place before you the carefully considered opinion of an authority who should command the respect even of Doctor Butler. I quote:

As the people are the only legitimate fountain of power, and it is from them that the constitutional charter under which the several branches of Government hold their power is derived, it seems strictly consonant with the republican theory to recur to the same original authority—not only whenever it may be necessary to enlarge, diminish, or new-model the affairs of government but also whenever any one of the departments may commit encroachments on the chartered authorities of the others.

That is, to the people—

The several departments being perfectly coordinated by the terms of their common commission, none of them can pretend to an exclusive or superior right in settling the boundaries between the respective powers. And how are the encroachments of the stronger to be prevented or the wrongs of the weaker to be redressed without an appeal to the people themselves, who, as the guarantors of the commission, can also declare its true meaning and enforce its observance?

Who wrote those words? Was it Roosevelt, in advocating the recall of judicial decisions, or Bryan, in advocating the recall of judges? No, no! They were addressed by Alexander Hamilton, who is sometimes regarded as the founder of the Republican Party, to the people of the State of New York, and are found in The Federalist, in article No. 49.

No one, sir, I take it, will assert that there is anything in the Constitution which gives the Federal courts the right to declare a law unconstitutional. I pause to let that soak in. I repeat it: No one, sir, I take it, will assert that there is anything in the Constitution which gives the Federal courts the right to declare a law unconstitutional; nor will anyone dispute, I believe, the familiar principle that since the Federal Government is one of enumerated powers, every power that it possesses must be provided for in the Constitution, either expressly or by necessary implication. More than that, anyone familiar with the constitutional debates knows that the proposal was made in the Constitutional Convention to give the courts some measure of this power—not the whole power, just some measure of this power—which they have since usurped in declaring laws unconstitutional, but that proposal was rejected by the framers of the Constitution. The fact is that the Federal courts by their decisions have worked a complete revolutionary change in our form of government, and it is none the less complete because the change has been made gradually. The conditions which that revolution has created are no longer bearable, sir; and my proposition is simply to proceed in accordance with the law and in accordance with the Constitution to restore to the executive, the legislative, and the judicial departments of government the powers and functions which the fathers, in the Constitution, declared they should respectively possess and exercise.

And now, Mr. President, I am not quite content, sir, to print in the RECORD the address which I made before the American Federation of Labor on June 14. The Senator from Nebraska [Mr. NORRIS], while I was on the floor yesterday, obtained consent from the Senate that that address should be printed; but it has been so traduced, so maligned, so misrepresented, that I am not content that it shall simply be reproduced in the type of the RECORD. I do not wish to overweary the Senate. Until the Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE] found it necessary to take the floor again this morning and add to that which he said day before yesterday, without this speech ever having yet been published, I had intended to save the time of the Senate this morning, and had so informed the chairman of the Committee on Finance, that, so far as I was concerned, I would be content to print in the RECORD the speech which was delivered in Cincinnati on June 14 before the American Federation of Labor. After coming into the Senate, however, and listening to the performances of the Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from Minnesota, I have concluded that I am going to exercise my rights and privileges as a Senator, and I am going to put that speech before the Senate now just exactly as I put it before the American Federation of Labor on the 14th of June in Cincinnati.

Sir, a few days before the 14th day of June I was invited to speak upon the recent decision of the Supreme Court of the United States in declaring the child labor law unconstitutional and to address myself to submitting suggestions for meeting the situation which had arisen as a result of that decision. I accepted the invitation, and on the 14th day of June I appeared before the American Federation of Labor at Cincinnati, and was introduced to the members of the American Federation of Labor and the audience there assembled in a speech of presentation that I felt accorded to me more generous praise with respect to my public work than I was fairly entitled to. I mention that as it explains some matter which appears in the preliminary remarks preceding the address which I had prepared to deliver to the American Federation of Labor at that time in response to their invitation.

Mr. President, I now proceed to give the address exactly as it was given there at that time—the address which has been subjected to all this animadversion and criticism, to all these diatribes that have been delivered through the columns of the press, editorially and otherwise. Why, although I have not seen it myself, I understand that I have been made the subject of a most drastic and vitriolic editorial in the Wall Street Journal. I suppose, Mr. President, that it is somewhat akin to the criticism delivered here. I have not read it myself. I have not seen it. It may be a sort of little brother to the observations made here by the Senator from New Jersey and the Senator from Minnesota.

I now will reproduce here before the Senate the address which I delivered in Cincinnati on the 14th day of June.

ADDRESS BEFORE ANNUAL CONVENTION OF AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR, CINCINNATI, JUNE 14, 1922.

Mr. President and members of the American Federation of Labor, I count it a great honor and a great privilege to be given the opportunity to appear before you here to-day. Permit me, sir, to say out of a full heart that I deeply appreciate your more than generous words of introduction to this great audience.

You have accorded to me more praise and achievement than is my due. I am not the author of the seamen's law.

That has been enumerated by Mr. Gompers, in presenting me to the audience, as one of my achievements in legislation.

I wish I might claim it all as mine. To Andrew Furuseth, more than any other living man, is due the credit of that piece of legislation. I think I may fairly say that I added, after the matter was submitted to me, some few provisions to it which gave it a broader public interest and enabled us to enlist the general public in its support. It was of practical value. I may say that my contribution was in extending the life-saving provisions to the general public and thereby enabling us to make a broader appeal for support for that legislation.

And, sir, in fullness of time, when we have all passed, a grateful public will erect a suitable monument to the memory of Andrew Furuseth, the one man above all others who emancipated the American sailor from slavery.

Now, Mr. President, ladies, and gentlemen, I come to the subject which has been assigned to me through your invitation to address this convention. I have set down with some care what I am to say here to-day. I have been, Mr. President, misquoted sometimes in my addresses [laughter], and when it befalls a man in public life that some statement is attributed to him either through mistake or through malice, which he never made, he suffers a long time before he can get a fair correction.

Perhaps no one in this country has experienced the truth of that statement more than yourself, Mr. President, for you have been maligned and misrepresented all through your great work as the head of this organization.

A century and a half ago our forefathers shed their blood in order that they might establish upon this continent a government deriving its just powers from the consent of the governed, in which the will of the people, expressed through their duly elected representatives, should be sovereign.

By a process of gradual encroachments, uncertain and timid at first, but now confident and aggressive, sovereignty has been wrested from the people and usurped by the courts.

To-day the actual ruler of the American people is the Supreme Court of the United States.

The law is what they say it is, and not what the people, through Congress, enacts. Aye, even the Constitution of the United States is not what its plain terms declare but what these nine men construe it to be.

In fact, five of these nine men are actually the supreme rulers, for by a bare majority the court has repeatedly overridden the will of the people as declared by their Representatives in Congress, and has construed the Constitution to mean whatever suited their peculiar economic and political views.

The nine lawyers who constitute the Supreme Court are placed in positions of power for life, not by the votes of the people but by presidential appointment.

Ex-President Taft was recently made Chief Justice by President Harding.

Thus a man was invested with the enormous prestige and influence of Chief Justice of the Supreme Court by presidential appointment who had been repudiated by the voters of the United States on his record as President. After they had experienced a single term of his administration as Chief Magistrate and had studied his attitude, his acts, his sympathies, on public questions for four years they declined to reelect him President.

No one will contend that he could have been elected Chief Justice of the Supreme Court by vote of the people. And yet, made Chief Justice by presidential appointment, Mr. Taft wrote the opinion that annulled the child labor law. He also wrote the opinion in the Coronado Coal Co. case.

In making this observation, I level no criticism at the personnel of the present court. I am not concerned with personalities. I am dealing with fundamentals. The present court is probably up to average of that court in ability, wisdom, and character, but these judges, even though they sit upon the Supreme Bench of the United States, are after all but men. I am concerned only with allowing them or any other body of men so chosen to have supreme power over the happiness, the rights, and the very lives of the 110,000,000 people of the United States.

Sharing the sovereign power of the Supreme Court, but in every way subordinate to it, is the array of minor Federal judges. Many of these Federal judges are excellent and enlightened men with a high sense of justice. Some of them, notably Judge Anderson, of Indiana, and Judge McClintic, of West Virginia, have, in my opinion, shown themselves to be petty tyrants and arrogant despots.

Here again I am not attacking the personalities or opinions of individual judges. I am dealing with the fact, which can not be denied, that we are ruled by a judicial oligarchy. Even if all these Federal judges were men of the greatest wisdom, the most irreproachable character and the broadest views, the essence of the situation would not be altered. If this were the case, and unfortunately it is not, we would merely have a benevolent despotism—a system repugnant to every American ideal.

From what source, it may be asked, have the Federal judges derived the supreme power which they now so bodly assert? Not only was such power not given to the judiciary in any Constitution, State or Federal, but the records of the Constitutional Convention show that when it was proposed in the Constitutional Convention that judges should have a veto upon acts of Congress, it was decisively defeated on four separate occasions, and at no time received the support of more than three States. As a matter of fact, no member of the Constitutional Convention was bold enough to bring forward a proposition that Federal judges should have the power of nullifying a law after it had been enacted by Congress and approved by the President. The most extreme measure offered exalting the power of the judiciary was merely the proposal, presented by Madison and James Wilson, that the Supreme Court have the same power as the President to pass upon legislation before its final adoption, and if the Supreme Court should hold it unconstitutional that the measure in question should be passed by a two-thirds vote of each House before it should become effective as law. It was in this restricted form that the members of the Constitutional Convention overwhelmingly rejected the theory of "a paramount judiciary."

There is, therefore, no sanction in the written Constitution of the United States for the power which the courts now assert. They have secured this power only by usurpation. Thomas Jefferson foresaw this inevitable encroachment of the judiciary upon the sovereignty of the people, and used his mighty powers to resist it. He said:

> It has long been my opinion, and I have never shrunk from its expression, that the germ of dissolution of our Federal Government is in the judiciary—the irresponsible body working like gravity, by day and by night, gaining a little to-day and gaining a little to-morrow, and advancing its noiseless step like a thief over the field of jurisdiction until all shall be usurped.

In extending their jurisdiction in other directions, the Federal courts have often gone to the judiciary of England for precedents, but in asserting their right to set aside the laws of Congress they have never looked in that direction, and for a very good reason. As Chief Justice Clarke, of the Supreme Court of North Carolina, has aptly said:

> The courts have attempted only once in England to assert a right to set aside an act of Parliament, and then Chief Justice Tresillian was hanged and his associates exiled to France, and hence subsequent courts have not relied upon it as a precedent. * * * No court in England since Tresillian's day has refused to obey an act of Parliament.

In the beginning encroachment by the Federal judiciary was very gradual. In the case of Marbury against Madison, where the power of the judiciary to nullify statutes was first formally declared, it is worthy of note that this principle was not involved in the decision, but was asserted only as an opinion of the court, and that it was further qualified by the statement that it is only legislation "clearly repugnant to the Constitution" that can be declared void. That was the first time they undertook to say anything on the subject, and then they said it had to be a very plain case about which there could be no dispute.

This is one of the commonest stratagems of the court. The particular case is decided in accord with the popular attitude, but there is often adroitly introduced into the decision what lawyers call obiter dicta—that is, a carefully worded declaration, as a mere incidental and collateral expression of opinion, not material to the decision of the case before the court, but which is injected into the case at bar to prepare the way for a contemplated decision when the occasion shall be more opportune.

This, it may be remarked, is exactly what the Supreme Court did the other day in the Coronado case, where it dismissed the case against the United Mine Workers, but laid down a line of policy which will in future be relied upon by all Federal and many State courts to limit and hamper, if not destroy, not only trade-unions but organizations of farmers and others who are concerned in bitter controversies against the powers of intrenched wealth.

Until recent years the Supreme Court ventured to assert this great power to override the acts of Congress, only upon rare occasions, and at widely separated intervals of time. As only a relatively small part of the people were directly affected by any of these decisions, the public as a whole were not aroused to the dangerous usurpation which was taking place. There were, it is true, occasions, such, for example, as the decision that Congress did not have the right to levy an income tax, which aroused the entire country, but in these cases the evil was cured by constitutional amendment overruling the Supreme Court, so that the direct question of the court's usurped power did not become a continuing issue.

For several years before the outbreak of the Great War, however, the people had become aroused to this dangerous situation and a continuous campaign was being conducted to check or correct it. This, you will recall, was one of the issues in the campaign of 1912, when Theodore Roosevelt brought forward as his remedy a proposal for the recall of judicial decisions. The growing movement for the reform of the American judiciary, like many great reform movements of that kind, was interrupted and set back by the outbreak of the World War. But the judiciary was not checked. On the contrary, it availed itself of this period, when the attention of the people was diverted by the problems of war and of reconstruction, to extend its powers and to nullify the acts of Congress with greater boldness than it ever before displayed.

Several years ago Justice Harlan, one of the wisest and most farsighted men who ever sat upon the Supreme Court, said:

When the American people come to the conclusion that the judiciary of this land is usurping to itself the functions of the legislative department of the Government, and by judicial construction only is declaring what should be the public policy of the United States, we will find trouble. Ninety millions of people—all sorts of people with all sorts of opinions—are not going to submit to the usurpation by the judiciary of the functions of other departments of the Government and the power on its part to declare what is the public policy of the United States.

In my opinion, the time of which Justice Harlan spoke is now at hand. I believe that the decisions of the Supreme Court and the injunctions of the lower Federal courts, coming as they have as the culmination of a long train of judicial usurpations, have aroused every citizen who pretends to have any concern for the welfare of his country.

I believe that this question of judicial usurpation is now a supreme issue.

The decision handed down by the majority of the Supreme Court on May 15 last, in what is commonly known as the child labor case, is merely one of the latest manifestations of the usurpation of power by that court.

Assuredly it is not necessary in this presence to discuss the evils of child labor in our industrial system. The conscience of the people of this country has long been aroused upon that subject both by daily witnessing the baleful results of pressing children of tender years into the service of greedy and selfish employers and by scientific knowledge of the race deterioration that results from depriving childhood of its inherent right to grow and develop under normal conditions.

The question here is not whether the people wanted the child labor law. That they demanded it, and that Congress enacted it in response to enlightened public opinion, is certain.

When I first came to the Senate in 1906 the evil of child labor in the United States was one of the foremost subjects of interest and discussion in Congress and throughout the country.

Not until 10 years later, however, was the child labor act passed. But when the vote on the bill was finally taken there were 337 to 46 in favor in the House and 52 to 12 in the Senate.

Back of this vote was the enormous pressure of public opinion, a tremendous expenditure of energy and effort. In addition to the mighty power of the American Federation of Labor and labor organizations generally, the women's organizations of the country had worked unceasingly, unitedly, disinterestedly for the passage of the bill. The women's clubs, the Consumers' League, the Women's Trade Union League, the Federal Children's Bureau were all powerful factors in securing the enactment of the child labor law.

Any discussion of this subject must take into consideration the immense setback to human progress which naturally follows the annulment of the child labor law. It is a great task to overcome the loss of enthusiasm, the disappointment and discouragement on the part of those who have given years of life and service to a cause when it is defeated. The people are made to feel helpless and hopeless. Their Government appears to be an autocracy instead of a democracy.

The decision of the Supreme Court has set aside and nullified that law. The pressing question is, What are we going to do about it? In order to answer that question it is necessary to recall the leading facts in the struggle between the people and the Federal courts on the subject of child-labor legislation.

The Congress first passed a law upon this subject in September, 1916. That law prohibited transportation in interstate commerce of goods made at a factory in which children under the age of 14 were employed or permitted to work, or children between the ages of 14 and 16 were employed or permitted to work more than eight hours a day or more than six days in a week or after 7 p. m. or before 6 a. m. Certainly this was most moderate regulation and afforded the minimum of protection to young children employed in industry. This law was passed by Congress in response to an insistent public demand. The old idea that it was desirable or even commendable to employ young children in exhausting labor in factories, mines, and shops had given way to the more humane and intelligent view that such labor was not only a crime against childhood but that it degraded adult labor as well and was a menace to the race and hence to government itself. This more enlightened view had been approved by the people of the country generally—with the exception possibly of certain Federal judges, and always excepting the powerful but selfish manufacturers in a few States, who were able to defeat child-labor legislation in those States.

The hearings before Congress upon this measure were extended and most exhaustive. It was shown at these hearings that the mortality of children in industry was many times greater than among children of the same age not similarly employed. For example, in the House Report No. 46, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, page 222, it was pointed out that mortality from tuberculosis among the most youthful children employed in certain cotton mills was four times as great as among children of like age not so employed, and that of the older children the mortality from tuberculosis was two and one-half times greater than children of the same age and environment not so employed.

In the Senate Report No. 368, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, at page 11, it is said:

The evidence is overwhelming that unregulated child labor does not promote a healthy citizenship; that it tends to the deterioration of the race physically; and the dwarfing of children mentally through the denial of a full opportunity for education; and to criminality, since the statistics of our juvenile court show that by far the largest percentage of juvenile delinquents are the children who were put to work too soon rather than the children who are trained in the schools.

The medical evidence was to the same effect and showed that the young child worker became dwarfed in body and mind, that the State was deprived thereby of vigorous citizenship, and the child lost his birthright to share in the opportunities given to his fellows, and child labor was denounced as "child slavery."

Wherever enlightened State courts have had occasion to deal with this subject the evidence has all been to the same effect. In the case of the Inland Steel Co. against Yedinak, upholding the constitutionality of the Indiana child labor laws, the court said:

The employment of children of tender years in mills and factories not only endangers their lives and limbs but hinders and dwarfs their growth and development physically, mentally, and morally. The State is vitally interested in its own preservation and, looking to that end, must safeguard and protect the lives, persons, health, and morals of its future citizens.

Because many States were without adequate child labor laws and because certain selfish and powerful interests in those States, determined to exploit child labor, were sufficiently powerful to prevent State legislation, it became necessary that Congress should take action upon this subject under its admitted power to regulate commerce between the States. That congressional action was absolutely necessary was demonstrated beyond question at the hearings I have referred to. There was no means other than through the action of Congress by which the citizens of the States with enlightened and humane child labor laws could protect themselves against the goods turned out by cheap and underpaid child labor in the States which had no adequate protection for child workers. For example, in 1880 the percentage of children under 16 years of age to all wage earners in the Southern States was 25 per cent. In the New England States it was only 14 per cent. In 1890 the percentage in the Southern States was 24.2 per cent, still substantially 25 per cent. In the New England States it had fallen to 6.9 per cent. In 1900 the percentage of the Southern States was still 25 per cent and in the New England States it was only 6.7 per cent. One result of this conflicting economic situation was the establishment of branches of New England cotton mills in South Carolina, Georgia, Alabama, and North Carolina, where young children could be worked with little restriction.

The Industrial Commission created by the act of June 18, 1898, in its final report, volume 19, page 922, said:

Uniform, or at least similar, legislation in the various States is especially desirable in the case of laws restricting child labor, because in so far as the employment of children is a real economy, it gives manufacturers in the States where it is permitted an unfair advantage over those in the States having child labor laws.

The whole matter was well summed up in the testimony of Mr. Brinton, of Philadelphia, printed in the hearings before the Committee on Labor, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, on H. R. 8234, page 270, as follows:

Mr. BRINTON. Gentlemen of the committee, from Pennsylvania we come to this hearing with high hopes. Session after session at our legislature we have been met by the cry from the manufacturers, "State legislation is unfair. You ask us to compete with other States of different standards. This interstate competition will ruin our business. If we must advance, let us advance together." * * * The condition which confronts us to-day is therefore in actual fact largely a problem of interstate competition through interstate commerce, a condition emphasized in every child-labor campaign in every State; a condition certain to grow more hopeless as conditions of competition become constantly more intense. Interstate commerce is at the root of the evil as it exists to-day.

And in the Senate Report No. 358, Sixty-fourth Congress, first session, page 21, which had under consideration the measure which afterwards became law, it is said:

So long as there is a single State which for selfish or other reasons fails to enact effective child-labor legislation, it is beyond the power of every other State to protect effectively its own producers and manufacturers against what may be considered unfair competition of the producers and manufacturers of that State, or to protect its consumers against unwittingly patronizing those who exploit the childhood of the country.

It has been well and truthfully said that childhood labor in any State lowers manhood labor in every State.

Congressional legislation is absolutely necessary, therefore, to protect the childhood of the country, and to protect the manhood and womanhood of the country, and to protect the consumer from becoming a partner with the exploiters of child labor through unwittingly purchasing the tainted products of child labor.

It was, sir, in recognition of this situation and in obedience to these compelling reasons that the Congress enacted the child labor law to which I have referred.

The power of Congress to enact that law is not only written into the plain language of the Constitution itself, but Congress had so frequently exercised a similar power as to make it seem certain beyond the possibility of a doubt that no court would venture to question the congressional authority to enact this much-needed legislation. The clause of the Constitution of the United States which I contend expressly confers upon Congress the power to enact this law is found in section 8, where it is declared "the Congress shall have power * * * to regulate commerce with foreign nations, and among the several States, and with the Indian tribes."

The power of Congress to regulate commerce between the several States is therefore supreme. The Congress has precisely the same power to regulate and control commerce between the several States that it has to regulate and control commerce with foreign nations. Before the Congress passed the child labor law it had passed many other laws, the constitutionality of which had been upheld by the Supreme Court, which not only regulated but practically prohibited interstate commerce in certain commodities. It had prohibited the movement in interstate commerce of lottery tickets, of persons for immoral purposes, of diseased live stock, of adulterated food, and of intoxicating liquors. (See Lottery Case, 188 U. S. 321; Hoke v. United States, 227 U. S. 308; Reid v. State of Colorado, 187 U. S. 137; Hopilite Egg Co. v. United States, 220 U. S. 45; and Clark Distilling Co. v. Western Maryland Railroad Co., 342 U. S. 311, 325.)

In these and many other instances Congress had absolutely closed interstate commerce to certain persons and commodities under its power to regulate commerce. That the commodities excluded were in many instances not harmful made no difference. (See United States v. American Tobacco Co., 221 U. S. 106, 132.)

The Constitution vested in the Congress solely the right to determine the necessity and propriety of regulating even to the point of prohibiting the transportation of any article in interstate commerce. This rule had been so repeatedly declared in the cases to which I have referred, and many others, that it had come to be accepted as a self-evident proposition. Nor was this all. So tenacious of the power of Congress to control interstate commerce has the Federal Government always been that the power of States to regulate or tax corporations engaged in interstate commerce has been greatly hampered by the court and flatly denied by the Supreme Court, wherever it could be made to appear that the action by the State to any extent burdened interstate commerce. (See Ex parte Young, 209 U. S. 123; Galveston, etc., Railroad Co. v. Texas, 210 U. S. 217; Western Union Telegraph Co. v. Kansas, 216 U. S. 1; Yazoo, etc. Co. v. Greenwood Co., 227 U. S. 1; and numerous other cases.)

The administration of the law was given to the Federal Children's Bureau under the direction of Julia Lathrop, a rarely gifted executive. In her sixth annual report Miss Lathrop said:

A well-organized system of administration had been developed, which was constantly growing in efficiency. States with standards as high or higher than those of the Federal statute and with competent administering officials were working in excellent cooperation with the Government inspectors to the strengthening of both. In some States laws had been modified to make possible compliance with the certificating provisions of the new statute. In others the direct issuance of certificates by the officers of the Children's Bureau was securing an orderly procedure, returning many children to school, increasing the popular demand for schools, and incidentally showing the parents and the public the need of physical tests of fitness for work. Cases of willful violation had been successfully prosecuted, though this was the least important effect of the law.

In spite of the clear language of the Constitution and the many decisions of the Supreme Court, the ink was hardly dry upon the child labor act, passed by Congress in 1916, before an inferior Federal judge in North Carolina assumed to hold the act void, as unconstitutional, and enjoined its enforcement in that district. I refer to the case of Hammer v. Dagenhart, which reached the Supreme Court on appeal by the Government and was decided in June, 1918. (See case reported in 247 U. S. 251.)

We are informed from the record in this case that the bill to test the constitutionality of the law was filed in the United States District Court for the Western District of North Carolina by a father in his own behalf and as the next friend of his two minor sons, one of the age of 14 and the other was between the age of 14 and 16 years. All were employees in the cotton mill at Charlotte, N. C. Who paid the expenses of these cotton-mill operatives in the litigation does not appear. The Supreme Court of the United States, however, by a 5 to 4 decision, declared the law unconstitutional in spite of the plain language of the Constitution and in spite of that court's previous decisions. Mr. Justice Holmes filed a strong dissenting opinion, which was concurred in by Mr. Justice McKenna, Mr. Justice Brandeis, and by Mr. Justice Clarke. In his dissenting opinion Mr. Justice Holmes said:

The question then is narrowed to whether the exercise of its otherwise constitutional power by Congress can be pronounced unconstitutional because of its possible reaction upon the conduct of the States in a matter upon which I have admitted that they are free from direct control. I should have thought that that matter had been disposed of so fully as to leave no room for doubt. I should have thought that the most conspicuous decisions of this court had made it clear that the powers could not be cut down or qualified by the fact that it might interfere with the carrying out of the domestic policy of any State. * * *

I should have thought that if we were to introduce our own moral conceptions where, in my opinion, they do not belong, this was preeminently a case for upholding the exercise of all its powers by the United States.

But I had thought that the propriety of the exercise of a power admitted to exist in some cases was for the consideration of Congress alone * * *. It is not for this court to pronounce when prohibition is necessary to regulation, if it ever may be necessary—to say that it is permissible as against strong drink, but not as against the product of ruined lives.

This does not meddle with anything belonging to the States. They may regulate their internal affairs and their domestic commerce as they like. But when they seek to send their products across the State line, they are no longer within their rights. If there were no Constitution and no Congress, their power to cross the line would depend upon their neighbors. Under the Constitution such commerce belongs not to the States but to Congress to regulate. It may carry out its views of public policy whatever indirect effect they may have upon the activities of the States.

I want you to get that into your minds. Congress enacts law, and Congress declares the public policy of government under the Constitution as this Government was builded by the fathers. It is the business of the courts to administer justice under the laws as written, and they have absolutely no business to meddle with or attempt to dictate the public policies of this Government. That is what Justice Holmes means when he says:

Instead of being encountered by a prohibitive tariff at her boundaries, the State encounters the public policy of the United States which it is for Congress to express. The public policy of the United States is shaped with a view to the benefit of the Nation as a whole. If, as has been the case within the memory of men still living, a State should take a different view of the propriety of sustaining a lottery from that which generally prevails, I can not believe that the fact would require a different decision from that reached in Champion v. Ames. Yet in that case it would be said with quite as much force as in this that Congress was attempting to intermeddle with the State's domestic affairs. The national welfare as understood by Congress may require a different attitude within its sphere from that of some self-seeking State. It seems to me entirely constitutional for Congress to enforce its understanding by all the means at its command.

The opinion, written by Mr. Justice Day for the five judges constituting the majority of the court, does not in form overrule any previous decisions, but says:

In our view the necessary effect of this act is, by means of a prohibition against the movement in interstate commerce of ordinary commercial commodities, to regulate the hours of labor of children in factories and mines within the States.

Of course, the very purpose of the legislation was to prevent young children being overworked in mines and factories in States that refuse to pass decent child labor laws. The majority opinion, however, in apparent justification of North Carolina's law, said:

> In North Carolina, the State where is located the factory in which the employment was had in the present case, no child under 12 years of age is permitted to work.

The majority opinion held that the products of child labor, though stained with the sweat and blood of its victims, are untainted, and that the Congress of the United States is powerless to declare otherwise.

The seventh annual report of the Chief of the Children's Bureau tells the results of the repeal of this child labor law by the Supreme Court in its decision of the Dagenhart case, as follows:

> The immediate effect of the decision of the Supreme Court in States where the State child-labor standards were lower than those imposed by the Federal law was the prompt restoration of the longer working day for children. In addition, in a number of these States there was an appreciable increase in the violation of the State laws. For example, of the 53 factories visited in one State by inspectors of the bureau shortly after the Federal law was declared unconstitutional 47 were found violating the State law by employing 430 children under 12 years of age, while in the 40 factories inspected in this State while the Federal law was in operation only 95 children under 14 had been found at work. The tendency to illegal employment of children was especially marked in the canning industry. In one State where the minimum age for employment in canneries was 14 years, the same as that established by the Federal law, 721 children under that age, including over 50 who were not yet 10 years old, were found employed in 205 canneries visited by inspectors of the bureau in the summer of 1918. (After the Supreme Court had nullified the child labor law.)

Congress at the next session passed the act of February 24, 1919, which sought to obviate the objection of the Supreme Court by levying an excise tax upon the employers of child labor who transported their product in interstate commerce and who employed children within the prohibited ages and in excess of prescribed hours. This statute, in my opinion, though amply supported by authority to be found in previous cases of the Supreme Court, was doomed unless the court should reverse the decision in the Dagenhart case.

When the decision was handed down on the 15th of last month in the case of Bailey against the Drexel Furniture Co., setting aside and nullifying this statute, only Mr. Justice Clarke dissented. I assume that the judges dissenting in the Dagenhart case, which I have already discussed, thought that the decision in the case was conclusive and that a dissent was useless. The Bailey case, like the Dagenhart case, also came up from the western district of North Carolina, and in both instances an inferior Federal judge assumed to nullify a statute passed by the Congress after the greatest consideration and approved by the President. It is worthy of note also that the Dagenhart case, which settled the principle and fixed the position of the majority of the court, should almost wholly escape public notice and condemnation, while the Bailey case, decided last month, which does little more than to cite the Dagenhart case as authority, has provoked hostile comment from one end of the country to the other and is made the subject of consideration in this conference. The explanation is, of course, that the Supreme Court decided the Dagenhart case June 3, 1918, when we were all too busy making the world safe for democracy to pay any attention to what was happening to our own children and to our own country.

I have briefly sketched the manner in which the Federal courts have thwarted the will of the Congress and of the people to protect children against exploitation by our industrial system, simply because it is typical of the conduct of the Federal judiciary, and particularly the Supreme Court, whenever Congress has sought to enact progressive and humane legislation which was offensive to great financial interests and enterprises. The point that I am making is that we are dealing with a fixed purpose and predisposition on the part of the Supreme Court and the Federal judiciary generally.

This decision is, however, merely the last of a long list of decisions equally arbitrary and equally indefensible from the standpoint of public welfare.

You have only to recall the decisions arising out of the employers' liability statutes, the arbitration act, the workmen's compensation act, the income tax laws, and the shameful manner in which the court rewrote and misapplied the antitrust act in the Standard Oil and Tobacco Trust and other cases. If perchance the memories of any of you are very short, I direct your attention to the recent decision of the Coronado Coal Co. case.

The opinion in this case by Chief Justice Taft is significant because of what the court says on questions that are not involved in the case rather than because of anything that is actually decided. This is another case of obiter dicta.

A six-line decision was all that was required to dispose of the case on its merits, for the Supreme Court was reluctantly obliged to admit the fact that there is not, and never was, any evidence to show that the defendants conspired to restrain or monopolize interstate commerce. That being true, of course there is not, and never was, any case against the United Mine Workers in the Federal court. The court, however, went out of its way through 29 pages of obiter dicta to berate the defendants and to characterize them as outlaws and murderers, and Chief Justice Taft wound up his opinion by saying: "The circumstances are such as to awaken regret that in our view of the Federal jurisdiction we can not affirm the judgment."

Here again the court went outside the record to announce a principle which will be laid hold of by the Federal courts whenever necessary to disrupt labor unions and farmers' organizations throughout the country.

There is no need for laymen to comment upon these decisions. Let the dissenting members of the Supreme Court themselves criticize the action of the majority of the court in these cases.

First of all, I remind you of the recent stock dividend decision, by which the sixteenth amendment to the Constitution was in large part nullified by the Supreme Court. This amendment empowered Congress to lay taxes "on incomes from whatever source derived." But by a bare majority, five to four, the Supreme Court held that this did not cover income in the form of stock dividends.

Listen to what the minority, comprising the ablest members of the court, in dissenting said with regard to this decision:

> If stock dividends representing profits are held exempt from taxation under the sixteenth amendment the owners of the most successful business in America will, as the facts in this case illustrate, be able to escape taxation on a large part of what is actually their income.

It was further declared by the minority: "That such a result was intended by the people of the United States when adopting the sixteenth amendment is inconceivable."

I cite also the late decision of the Supreme Court in the Steel Trust case. This was decided by a bare vote of four to three, inasmuch as Justices Brandeis and McReynolds did not participate in the decision. Justice Day in this case delivered the dissenting opinion, which criticizes the decision of the majority in these burning words:

> As I understand the conclusions of the court * * * they amount to this: That these combinations * * * although organized in plain violation and bold defiance of the provisions of the Sherman Act, nevertheless are immune from a decree effectually ending the combinations and putting it out of their power to attain the unlawful purposes sought, because of some reasons of public policy requiring such conclusion. I know of no public policy which sanctions a violation of the law, nor of any inconvenience of trade, domestic or foreign, which should have the effect of placing combinations, which have been able to thus organize one of the greatest industries of the country in defiance of law, in an impregnable position above the control of the law forbidding such combinations. Such a conclusion does violence to the policy which the law was intended to enforce, runs counter to the decisions of the court, and necessarily results in a practical nullification of the act itself.

Another set of decisions particularly affecting the rights of labor were the so-called picketing cases in one of which the court nullified the power of a State legislature to define the conditions under which picketing might be carried on, and instead itself laid down minute and absurd rules upon the subject. This case well illustrates the tendency of the courts, not only to legislate by evading the acts of Congress but even to enter upon the field of prescribing minute rules and regulations of conduct upon any subject which it chooses.

I can not leave these decisions, limited as my time is, without recalling to you the criticism which Justice Holmes—concurred in by Justice Brandeis—delivered with reference to the decision of the court in the now famous Abrams case. To my mind this case, involving the fundamental right of freedom of speech, best illustrates the extreme length to which the court is prepared to go under the influence of its prejudices and passions. Justice Holmes did not mince words when he said in his dissenting opinion:

> In this case sentences of 20 years' imprisonment have been imposed for the publishing of two leaflets that I believe the defendants had as much right to publish as the Government has to publish the Constitution of the United States now vainly invoked by them. * * * Only the emergency that makes it immediately dangerous to leave the correction of evil counsels to time, warrants making any exception to the sweeping demand, 'Congress shall make no law * * * abridging the freedom of speech.' * * * I regret that I can not put into more impressive words my belief that in their conviction upon this indictment the defendants were deprived of their rights under the Constitution of the United States.

Heretofore the people of the United States have met the difficult situations created by the courts' decisions on constitutional matters by dealing with the particular question upon which the court was at variance with the popular will. When the court held that a sovereign State might be sued by the citizen of another State, the people were indignant, but they cured this situation by speedily passing the eleventh amendment. The people of the United States cured the situation created by the Dred Scott decision by the adoption, after a Civil War, of the thirteenth and fourteenth amendments. When the Supreme Court held the income tax law invalid, the people after 30 years were able to cure this situation by the adoption of the sixteenth amendment, which, as we have seen, the Supreme Court has already partially nullified by exempting stock dividends from taxation. And now we will probably have to have a stock dividend constitutional amendment.

We have never faced the fundamental issue of judicial usurpation squarely with a determination to make an end of it once and for all.

The time has now come to do so. It would require a dozen constitutional amendments to correct the evils of the decisions which the court has handed down within the past three or four years.

The time has come when we must put the ax to the root of this monstrous growth upon the body of our Government. The usurped power of the Federal courts must be taken away at one stroke and the Federal judges must be made responsive to the basic principle of this Government.

Constitutions and statutes and all the complex details of government are ordained, established, and supported for the sole purpose of expressing and executing the sovereign will of the people.

Now, sir, as to a remedy.

The subject is one to which I have given much thought. For years I have seen the day coming when the Federal judiciary must be made—to some extent, at least—subject to the will of the people, or we must abandon the pretense that the people rule in this country. We have created—or, at least, have suffered—to grow up within our land a Frankenstein which must be destroyed or else it will destroy us. And we can destroy that Frankenstein without destroying the constitutional court that was created for us by our fathers if we will go about it.

No student of existing conditions, however conservative he may be, can ignore the alarming fact that there is widespread and growing belief in the public mind that our courts and kindred tribunals established to administer justice under the law are more considerate of property interests than of personal rights.

For years the current literature of the day has teemed with it. It is idle to say that it is confined to the violent denunciation of the agitator and demagogue. It has found expression in publications of accepted standing. It has been the theme of eminent publicists. It has been denounced from the pulpit. It has been discussed in the meetings of National and State bar associations. It has become the settled conviction of millions of worthy citizens of the Republic.

I say this is no longer an academic question. Out of it has come the demand for the recall of judges, which is already embodied in the constitutions of at least three States of the Union.

In the American home, in our schools, and in all the relations of life we are taught to respect and reverence our courts. The judiciary alone of all our institutions of government was set upon an eminence of station and consecrated to a service designed to lift it above the suspicion of perverting justice.

Standing somewhat apart from the turmoil and clash of the material world, our courts were insured a calm and repose where they might hold with even hand the scales of human justice. Nor was that all. Through common-law proceedings for contempt and a great body of statutory crimes against justice we have thrown about them as constituted every protection and safeguard which the wit of man can provide.

But this isolation and sanctity of position, this absence of direct responsibility to the people, has led the Federal judiciary, and particularly the Supreme Court, to assume and exercise an arbitrary power wholly inconsistent with popular government.

The question is, Which is supreme, the will of the people or the will of the few men who have been appointed to life positions on the Federal bench?

It is idle, sir, in my opinion, to talk about a constitutional amendment which will merely meet the objection to the child labor law raised by a majority of the Supreme Court. We can not live under a system of government where we are forced to amend the Constitution every time we want to pass a progressive law. The remedy must adequately cope with the disease, or there is no use applying it.

I fully recognize the fact that the power which the court now exercises to declare statutes of Congress unconstitutional is a usurped power, without warrant in the Constitution, and it is absolutely certain the Constitution would never have been adopted had the men at that time believed that the court they were providing for would assume the powers now exercised by our Federal judges. Every student of history knows that to be true. Is the remedy, then, such a drastic change in the Constitution as will forever strip the judiciary of this power? I do not think this is necessary, nor do I think that the popular election of Federal judges would adequately meet the situation.

I would amend the Constitution so as to provide:

(1) That no inferior Federal judge shall set aside a law of Congress on the ground that it is unconstitutional.

(2) That if the Supreme Court assumes to decide any law of Congress unconstitutional, or, by interpretation, undertakes to assert a public policy at variance with the statutory declaration of Congress—which alone under our system is authorized to determine the public policies of government—the Congress may by reenacting the law nullify the action of the court.

Thereafter the law would remain in full force and effect, precisely the same as though the court had never held it to be unconstitutional.

Had such been the provision of the Constitution, the action of Congress in enacting the child labor law the second time would have been effective, and we would have had an efficient child labor law to-day. Had such been the Constitution, it would not have been necessary to wait 20 years to get an income tax law, after the Supreme Court had reversed its former decision upholding the law. Were such now the Constitution, the Congress could by statute speedily correct the indefensible policy asserted by the Supreme Court in the Coronado case with respect to labor unions, farmers' associations, and other voluntary organizations.

While, of course, it is a great burden upon the people to require them virtually to pass remedial legislation twice, nevertheless where the subject is important enough and the interest keen enough it will not be a difficult thing to do.

The Constitution gave to the President of the United States a veto upon legislation, in order that the Executive might be able to protect itself against encroachments. But it also gave to the Congress the power to assert its will by repassing the law, even after it had been vetoed. This was necessary in order to prevent the President from using his veto to block all progress and make himself a despot.

The Constitution did not give the courts a veto, but, as I have shown, repeatedly refused to permit them even to participate in the exercise of the presidential veto power. Nevertheless, the courts have asserted not a veto power while laws were in the making but have usurped the far greater veto power of nullifying laws after they have been enacted, and by the process of so-called interpretation to declare the public policy. They thus themselves enact what shall be the law of the land.

What I propose is that Congress shall be enabled to override this usurped judicial veto and to declare finally the public policy just as it has the power to override the presidential veto, so that we may realize in fact the fundamental purposes of the Constitution as declared in Article I, section 1, that "All legislative powers herein granted shall be vested in a Congress of the United States, which shall consist of a Senate and House of Representatives."

Certainly no one can complain that the plan proposed is revolutionary or even radical. It can fairly be criticized as being too conservative, but it at least would give the people an effective method of expressing and enforcing their will if the sentiment and purpose is strong enough, and it would at one sweeping stroke relieve the present intolerable condition.

A very good illustration of what I propose is found in the recent history of the House of Lords of Great Britain. That body, as you know, constitutionally has a dual character. It is both a law-making body and a court. Our Supreme Court by usurping legislative powers has become somewhat like the British House of Lords. You will recall that several years ago the House of Lords refused to approve the budget adopted by the House of Commons, taxing landed estates for the promotion of a great program of social legislation. This veto so provoked the popular branch of the British Parliament that the next general election was fought out on the issue that thereafter, if the House of Lords withheld approval of any measure of the House of Commons, the latter could by repassing the bill nullify the veto action of the lords. The British people overwhelmingly supported the House of Commons.

Even after this election the lords were still inclined to rebel against giving up their veto power, but through the influence of the Prime Minister the King was induced to threaten to pack the House of Lords with enough new members to bring about the passage of the law. The result was that the lords yielded, and the British Government became to that extent more representative.

Can we not do as much in this country as the British did? Can we not reduce our Federal judiciary to its constitutional powers? If not, we can at least arrest its further growth. We can prevent its further encroachment upon the lawmaking branch of the Government. The plan I propose will do this, and I believe will be accepted by the people in all parts of the country, without regard to party, as the quickest means of restoring their Government to the people.

We are confronted with a situation wherein we must make a choice that will determine the destiny of this Nation in all the generations to come. This choice is simple but fateful. Shall the people rule through their elected representatives or shall they be ruled by a judicial oligarchy? Shall we move forward in our development as a Nation, carrying out the will of the people as expressed by their ballots, or shall all progress be checked by the arbitrary dictates of five judges until the situation becomes so desperate that it can no longer be endured?

I have no doubt what the choice of the American people will be when this issue is submitted for their decision. The American Nation was founded upon the immortal principle that the will of the people shall be the law of the land. The courts have forgotten this, but the people have not. When they have an opportunity they will overwhelmingly declare that they will no longer tolerate a condition under which the wheels of progress may be blocked by the arbitrary dictates of a majority of nine judges, but that a way shall be opened whereby the Nation may move forward in peace, in order, and in harmony to achieve the great ideals of freedom, prosperity, and happiness enshrined in the Declaration of Independence and in the preamble of the Constitution of the United States.

Mr. President, that is the address as delivered before the American Federation of Labor on the 14th day of June, this present month. I did not ask to have it put into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. After it had been assailed and I had been assailed in connection with it, and my patriotism and Americanism had been subjected to criticism through material introduced into the RECORD regarding it, I then felt that it was just that the RECORD should carry the address as it was made to the American Federation of Labor.

Sir, I will say now at this time and in this connection that I shall in the early future introduce a proposed amendment to the Constitution carrying out and embodying the suggestions made in this address, and I shall at as early opportunity thereafter as the convenience of the Senate and my other official obligations may permit, offer such arguments in support of that constitutional amendment as I am able to present to the Senate. I will say, sir, that the issues raised by the present situation will not be permitted to lapse. The American people will have an opportunity, as early as may be in the course of matters of such importance, to express their views upon the need of an amendment to the Constitution to meet the situation.

THE TARIFF.

The Senate, as in Committee of the Whole, resumed the consideration of the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, on February 23 I introduced Senate bill 3199, which was referred to the Committee on Finance, and which proposed to enlarge the powers of the present Tariff Commission and lay down a fundamental principle of tariff legislation. That bill is now before the committee, but in view of the fact that the Senate is now considering the tariff measure, I am sending to the desk an amendment to the pending bill, which embodies the proposal of the bill which I introduced. I ask in connection with my remarks that it be printed in the RECORD, and that the amendment be referred to the Committee on Finance.

The VICE PRESIDENT. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Amendment intended to be proposed by Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN to the bill (H. R. 7456) to provide revenue, to regulate commerce with foreign countries, to encourage the industries of the United States, and for other purposes, viz: On page 286, after line 19, insert the following new section:

"SEC. 322. (a) That section 700 of the revenue act of 1916 is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 700. That in order that Congress may secure necessary data (1) to determine and fix the proper rates of duty to equalize wherever possible differences in conversion costs of articles grown, produced, or manufactured in the United States and of articles grown, produced, or manufactured in foreign countries and differences in competitive conditions, and (2) as economic or industrial conditions change to amend from time to time the existing rates or forms of duty on one or more articles, a commission is hereby established, to be known as the United States Tariff Commission (hereinafter in this title referred to as the commission) and to be composed of 10 members. Each member shall be appointed by the President, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, and shall hold office during good behavior, but any member may be removed by the President, after due notice and hearing, for neglect of duty, malfeasance in office, or inefficiency. The President shall designate a chairman and a vice chairman to serve for four years. A vacancy shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment. Vacancies shall not affect the duties nor impair the rights or powers of the commission or of the remaining members.

"'The members shall be selected because of their experience and fitness and must possess qualifications necessary for the efficient performance of the duties imposed upon them by law. Not more than five members shall be of the same political party. A member shall not engage actively in any private business, trade, or profession.'

"(b) The first sentence of section 701 of the revenue act of 1916 is amended to read as follows:

"'SEC. 701. That each member shall receive a salary at the rate of $12,000 per annum.'

"(c) The commission is authorized to appoint from time to time such advisers and to create such advisory committees as it deems advisable to assist it in carrying out the provisions of this section and of Title VII of the revenue act of 1916, as amended. Such advisers shall be appointed without regard to their political affiliations, and they shall serve without compensation therefor from the United States.

"(d) Each member of the commission appointed prior to the passage of this act shall continue to hold office as a member of the commission for the remainder of the term for which he was appointed and shall receive a salary at the same rate as a member appointed under the provisions of this section, but a vacancy resulting from the death, resignation, expiration of the term of office, or removal of any such member shall be filled in accordance with the provisions of this section.

"(e) When used in this section—

"The term 'article' includes any commodity, whether grown, produced, fabricated, manipulated, or manufactured;

"The term 'conversion cost' means the cost of growing, producing, fabricating, manipulating, or manufacturing an article; and

"The term 'import cost' means the price at which an article is freely offered for sale in the usual wholesale quantities for exportation to the United States plus, when not included in such price, all necessary expenses, exclusive of customs duties, of bringing such imported article to the United States.

"(f) In addition to the duties imposed by law, the commission shall—

"(1) Ascertain conversion costs in the principal growing, producing, or manufacturing centers of the United States of articles of the United States, whenever in the opinion of the commission it is necessary and practicable;

"(2) Ascertain conversion costs in the principal growing, producing, or manufacturing centers of foreign countries of articles imported into the United States, whenever in the opinion of the commission such conversion costs are necessary for comparison with conversion costs in the United States and can be reasonably ascertained;

"(3) Select and describe articles which are representative of the classes or kinds of articles imported into the United States and which are similar to or comparable with articles of the United States; select and describe articles of the United States similar to or comparable with such imported articles; and obtain and file samples of articles so selected, whenever the commission deems it advisable;

"(4) Ascertain import costs of such representative articles so selected;

"(5) Ascertain the grower's, producer's, or manufacturer's selling prices in the principal growing, producing, or manufacturing centers of the United States of the articles of the United States so selected;

"(6) Ascertain all other facts which will show the differences in or which affect competition between articles of the United States and imported articles.

"(g) Not later than December 1, 1923, and at least once every six months thereafter, the commission shall report to Congress the results of the investigations completed at the time of the report showing—

"(1) The conversion costs in the United States;

"(2) The conversion costs of articles imported into the United States;

"(3) The differences between such conversion costs;

"(4) The scope and methods of the investigations for ascertaining or determining and the items of cost included within such conversion costs;

"(5) The differences in competitive conditions;

"(6) The rate or rates of duty which it deems necessary to equalize such differences in conversion costs and in conditions of competition in trade, and whether the duty should be specific, ad valorem, or ad valorem and specific;

"(7) When conversion costs have not been ascertained and the commission is of the opinion that an existing rate of duty does not fairly equalize competitive conditions, then its recommendation as to the proper rate of duty and the facts upon which the recommendation is based;

"(8) The probable effect in dollars, as nearly as it can be estimated, of each rate proposed as it affects American growers, producers, manufacturers, and consumers; and the probable revenue to be derived from the imposition of each duty.

"(h) In addition to the powers and privileges conferred upon the commission under the provisions of Title VII of the revenue act of 1916, the commission is authorized in order to ascertain any facts required by this section to require any improper and any American grower, producer, manufacturer, or seller to file with the commission a statement under oath giving his selling prices in the United States of any article imported, grown, produced, fabricated, manipulated, or manufactured by him.

"Any commissioner, officer, employee, or agent of the commission, and any adviser who divulges any information or data received relating to the importation, growth, production, fabrication, manipulation, manufacture, or sale of a specific article, except in a report under the provisions of this section or except in so far as he is directed by the commission or by a court of the United States or a judge thereof or by a committee of the Senate or the House of Representatives, and any person who knowingly solicits or receives any such information or data from any such commissioner, officer, employee, agent, or adviser shall, upon conviction thereof, be punished by a fine of not more than $1,000 or imprisonment for not more than two years, or by both such fine and imprisonment.

"(i) The commission is authorized to establish and maintain an office in the principal customs port of entry of the United States, or elsewhere, for the purpose of directing or carrying on any investigation, receiving and compiling statistics, selecting, describing, and filing samples of articles, and performing any of the duties or exercising any of the powers imposed upon it by law.

"(j) In addition to the appropriations now available, there is hereby appropriated the sum of $1,000,000, out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, for the payment of salaries and expenses of the United States Tariff Commission in carrying out the provisions of this section and of Title VII of the revenue act of 1916, including the actual traveling expenses and per diem allowances of any member, officer, expert, examiner, clerk, or other employee of the commission when engaged in the performance of duties in any place other than his headquarters office, the purchase of samples, apparatus, mechanical devices, supplies, equipment, furniture, stationery, law books, books of reference, periodicals, and such other articles as may be necessary."

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, the amendment which I have offered proposes in brief to enlarge the Tariff Commission to 10 members; that no more than 5 members shall be of any one political party; that they shall have life tenure and shall receive a salary each of $12,000 per year. It also empowers the Tariff Commission to make studies of the difference in conversion costs of all products produced in this country and to compare the conversion costs in competing countries; and wherever such information can not be obtained, the amendment empowers the Tariff Commission to make an investigation of the difference in the domestic selling price of any American article produced and the landed cost selling price of the foreign article. It empowers them to forward to the Congress, with full information and facts as to their findings, the rates required to equalize those conditions.

This proposal is an effort on my part to remove the tariff from politics. Our past and present system of tariff legislation is not scientific or businesslike. I say this, although I did my share as a member of the Finance Committee in framing the present measure. I hold that it is not scientific because of the system on which it is based. This system is not the product of either the Republican or Democratic Parties. It is the outcome of past conditions, when a scientific finding of facts was not regarded as an essential in tariff making. My purpose is by an amendment to the pending measure to remedy the defects of that system and attempt to set up machinery looking to the enactment in the future of scientific tariff schedules.

Primarily tariff making affects trade and commerce. It is therefore a matter of economics, not of politics. The determination of rates is properly a subject for expert study and consideration. It ought to be in the hands of a trained body of men equipped to give it specialized study and having the authority to make exhaustive investigation and report to Congress scientific conclusions. The amendment which I propose would vitalize the Tariff Commission and extend its powers. It would remove the members of the commission from personal and party pressure by establishing a fundamental principle for fixing rates, and it would give them the time, the money, and the authority to frame such a bill as would afford actual, not merely supposed, protection to American industry and American labor.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. POMERENE. The Senator from New Jersey has stated that his proposed amendment will establish a principle which will guide the commission in the fixing of rates. What is that principle for which the Senator contends?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Briefly, in opening my remarks, I stated that principle, but I intend later in my speech to explain the plan.

The public mind is now thoroughly awake to the abuses of this system of tariff making and to the necessity for reform, and this awakening should be a warning to all of us to take the tariff out of politics by providing legislation setting up the machinery for a scientific system of levying tariff duties, for which purpose this amendment is offered.

In offering this amendment I am not apologizing for the present tariff measure that we are considering, and which I assisted in drafting. To my mind it is as good a measure as could be prepared under the circumstances, and it should be passed as quickly as possible, in order to remove from business the uncertainty that now exists.

But neither the pending tariff measure nor any tariff measure that has ever been passed or ever will be passed can be adequate to the needs of the country so long as we continue our present system of preparing tariff measures. This applies equally to Republicans and Democrats, and we all know it. Whether the tariff to be written is one for revenue only or for protection, the facts on which the duties are levied are the same. And what is that system? It is a compilation of the statements of manufacturers, importers, merchants, and farmers, and of inconclusive data collected by Government agencies inadequately equipped either with sufficient funds or proper authority.

In other words, our tariffs of the past have been the result of approximation, and by reason of the fact that the rates have been fixed by statute they have been inflexible. Therefore any rate improperly fixed has not been subject to change or revision because no Government agency has the power to revise by amendment. Any injustice caused by too high or too low a rate must necessarily rest imposed on industry until a new tariff bill is written.

So long as it was not an important matter how we determined the basis of value of which to fix tariffs, so long as we fixed them high enough to protect infant industries, this system worked very well. But that day has passed. We have entered now upon an era of intense international industrial competition, in which it is essential for us to protect our labor and our capital investment against the lower costs of production and conversion abroad. This protection must be honest and fair in its effect, and the basis on which it is arrived at should be scientific and free from party or business bias.

Our tariff duties must be sufficiently high to prevent a flood of imports at a cost lower than the cost of similar domestic manufactures, but it must not be so high as to act as an effectual embargo against free and unrestrained flow of our foreign trade both of exports and imports.

It is generally agreed that the prime purpose of a protective tariff is the protection of the American wage scale. In other words, a tariff may be said to determine the standard of living in the country where it operates, for civilization progresses or recedes according to the benefits enjoyed by the masses of the people.

The American wage scale per unit is the highest in the world, and it is this wage scale that makes a protective tariff absolutely necessary in this country, because it is the element in the cost of production and conversion that makes our products more expensive to produce than those of other countries.

This being the case, admitted by economists and by politicians, no matter what particular political party happens to be writing the current tariff bill, it seems logical to suppose that we would adopt a system of tariff making that would have for its basis the protection of wages.

Facts on which to base equitable tariffs, whether they are protective in character or are for providing revenue, must be obtained by trained experts. That is why, in the amendment that I am offering for inclusion in the pending tariff bill, there is provided a tariff commission of 10 members, with life tenures of office, at salaries that will attract men of sufficient caliber and experience to handle the very difficult tasks that they must solve.

I have no desire to criticize the present Tariff Commission, nor the ability of the gentlemen composing it. With its present facilities and limited power it has done exceptionally well during one of the most chaotic periods in industrial history. But the present commission in number of personnel and in the power given it under the law, which is only the power of investigation, is inadequate to and falls far short in usefulness and effectiveness as an agency for the information and guidance of Congress in the enactment of an equitable and scientific tariff.

The policy of a tariff commission acting as an independent governmental agency was a constructive piece of legislation, but with limited powers of investigation and with insufficient funds, no power of recommendation, no stated policy by Congress or definite rules under which to work, it fails in the mission for which it was created. It falls short in its usefulness unless it is given definite powers and rules through statute.

The magnitude of the work to be done demands this. Our annual industrial output now averages $65,000,000,000 and is increasing each year. Never before in all time has any nation even approached this marvelous record. Our foreign trade, which is absolutely essential for the continued prosperity of the country, and an outlet for our surplus product, averages 10 per cent of our total annual output, and the future of this necessary phase of our national business organization depends in a large measure on the equity and thoroughness of the tariff measure enacted.

Business—and by "business" I mean all of the elements of agriculture, industry, commerce, and labor—has suffered great loss during the past year while this pending tariff measure has been under consideration. It has been impossible during this most critical period of world reorganization for any of the elements of American business to chart a definite course, either in volume of production or in an estimate of costs or of demand. The whole economic machinery of the country waits on the tariff bill. In a few years unless we change the present system we will go through the same destructive experience while another Congress writes another tariff bill.

Present world conditions in values and in wages have been so unsettled that in order properly to protect our industrial system and maintain its stability there has been a confusion of counsels as to the policy of valuation upon which the pending tariff bill should be written. Honest and sincere men in both branches of Congress have differed continually as to the basis of valuation which should be utilized. This has caused wide disagreement as to the policy to be pursued, although never in the history of any tariff legislation has it been so necessary to have accurate and complete information as at the present time. Had the Tariff Commission act of 1916 included the powers, made sufficient appropriation, and given sufficient authority for fact finding and recommendations as to rates by men who by experience and education were qualified as contemplated by the amendment, the committees of Congress, unfamiliar with statistics necessary properly to frame a tariff, could have earlier completed their labors.

I think that every Senator in this Chamber will agree with me that such a situation, particularly at this juncture in the world's history, reveals the weakness of our present system. The Tariff Commission, clothed with the powers which my amendment would give it, would effectually correct this state of affairs in the future. After expert investigations, which would discover as accurately as possible the difference between production and conversion costs here and abroad, it would recommend to Congress the proper rates to be assessed. Congress need not accept those rates; it might revise them; it might wipe them out altogether if it desired to; but whatever the action of Congress, on whatever theory of tariff policy it operated, it would be operating on a basis of fact.

It is a great and complex task which this Tariff Commission must face, one which will take years to complete; but when the task is completed this Nation will have added to the militant economic forces of the country a chart on which its course in competition with other nations may be correctly drawn.

It has been said cynically that the tariff can not be taken out of politics. It is probable that the theory of what constitutes proper tariff levies will always remain a political question, just as it has always been a matter of dispute between economists; but the method of finding out the facts on which to assess tariffs is certainly not a political matter, any more than the method of adding, subtracting, or multiplying is a political matter.

The Finance Committee commenced its hearings on the pending tariff bill on July 25, 1921, and completed them January 9, 1922. The sum of all the testimony given before the committee, if boiled down to the actual facts necessary to construct rates, would not have filled more than 100 pages of competent testimony, instead of more than 3,000. No one can wade through this gigantic mass of information without confusion, and he can not be sure of his conclusion because of the technical nature of the subjects.

Yet in the preparation of this bill the Finance Committee relied upon the best information obtainable.

Not only that, but it sought further information by compilation of the customs figures. That took time. Our opponents have secured similar information from other sources considered equally reliable, yet the facts relied upon by both sides are so different that there is doubt thrown upon the accuracy of all of them. If Congress had all of the facts, not part of them, presented in a short and concise form by a body delegated to collect them, such a condition would not exist.

Even were it possible for the Finance Committee or the Ways and Means Committee to collect information of undoubted accuracy, it is not fair to ask either committee to sit day after day and month after month, neglecting other important legislation, to receive such information, when the entire subject should be analyzed and handled by experts.

There is another very important reason why a committee of Congress should not be compelled to gather its own facts on this all-important and far-reaching subject. A tariff rate as it is determined to-day often becomes at best a compromise, an attempt to meet varying demands of many sections and many opposing interests.

The reason always given in protective tariffs for the ad valorem system has been the necessity of protecting American industry by equalizing the difference between the total cost of manufacture here and abroad.

A careful analysis of the cost of manufacture reveals its gross inadequacies so far as the adequate protection of the labor involved is concerned. In fixing tariff rates on total manufacturing costs, no account is taken of the percentage of labor and material that enters into the finished article.

A brief example will illustrate the effect of the difference between the total cost of manufacture, or, as commonly used, the cost of production, and conversion costs as a basis for rate making. Let us assume that the cost of a raw material to-day is 20 cents per pound. In the United States it costs 40 cents to convert this raw material into an article of commerce, but in a foreign country the cost of converting this same raw material into the same article is but 20 cents. We have, then, a total cost in the United States of 60 cents, and in the foreign country of 40 cents. To equalize this, a 50 per cent rate of duty is necessary. Subsequently, let us suppose the cost of the raw material in both countries drops to 10 cents, while the conversion costs remain the same. We then have a total cost in the United States of 50 cents and a total cost in the foreign country of 30 cents. To equalize these costs a rate of 66⅔ per cent is necessary. Next, let us assume that the raw material cost again fluctuates, and it becomes 30 cents per pound in both countries, while the conversion cost remains constant. To equalize the 70-cent cost in the United States and the 50-cent cost in the foreign country will require a duty of 40 per cent ad valorem.

If we had determined our rate of duty solely upon the conversion costs, we would have imposed a specific rate of 20 cents upon the article, and the difference would have been equalized in each of the above cases; our rate would have been constant.

Let us now analyze further the conversion-cost method. An additional important advantage it possesses over the total cost of manufacture theory is found in the fact that in ascertaining conversion costs we ascertain the cost of the processes. In obtaining facts regarding the cost of manufacture of any article, totals only are obtained. In determining conversion costs the cost of each step in the processing of an article from the raw material to the finished product is determined. These processes in each industry for specific articles are essentially similar. Therefore, in discovering original conversion costs in specific industries, the foundation is laid for establishing the total conversion costs of any article in that particular industry.

As an illustration I will cite, for instance, the ascertainment of a scientific rate of duty for cloth. All of the elements of costs up to and including the finished product would have to be ascertained. The difference in the cost of producing the raw material here and abroad, if there were any difference, would represent the rate of duty to be imposed on the raw material. The difference in the conversion cost in producing the yarn, plus the duty on the raw material, would represent the duty on the yarn. The difference in the cost of completing the yarn into a certain kind of cloth, plus the duty on the raw material and the yarn entering into the cloth, would represent the rate of duty to be finally imposed upon the finished product.

In certain instances neither conversion costs nor costs of production are available, because of the disinclination of the manufacturers to disclose their methods and costs, although the act of 1916 gives the commission ample power and authority for ascertaining all of these facts. In other instances the foreign markets are so distant, and the methods of manufacture so crude and so varying, that the costs of production or conversion would be indefinite for practical purposes of fixing tariff duties. When these or any other conditions exist making it impossible to obtain essential facts on which to discover conversion costs, it is desirable that a substitute method be employed to recommend to Congress the proper rate of duty.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Mr. President——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield to the Senator.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I am very much interested in the Senator's proposed reform. I should like to ask him whether he thinks his party, if there were such a commission in existence, would be guided by its findings and recommendations and would shut out from the committee room the interested manufacturers who have been coming to Washington for generations now to persuade the party to which he belongs to give them the benefit of high tariffs? Does he think they would be shut out, and that the recommendations of the Tariff Commission that he proposes would be received?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, that is the object of this plan, and I think that the committee should be equally stern toward the manufacturing interests as toward the importers; that both of these interests should be shut out—those who represent the men who are trying to break down the rates of the industries, the importers, and the manufacturer who is trying to procure a selfish tariff.

I am not putting this upon a partisan basis nor making a partisan speech, nor am I pointing out or outlining the weaknesses of either party. I am attacking this system, and I am saying that a governmental body properly clothed with authority and properly instructed as to how to base fundamentally these rates should take from a committee of Congress the task of hearing the representatives who appear here to present their case and present their facts.

This bill provides that committees from the industries and from every interest—importer, producer, consumer—shall be consulted by the Tariff Commission. I want this Tariff Commission to lay down its conclusions, based upon the difference in the conversion costs, and the facts which form that conclusion.

That may be Utopian; I do not know. But this, I am informed, is the only country that lays down tariff duties through parliamentary bodies. I am informed that every other country that imposes customs duties has a governmental agency to ascertain these facts, considering that it is an economic, not a political, question; that that governmental agency collects the data and the facts, and upon the facts collected, based upon the fundamental principle of difference in conversion costs—or, if they can not be found, the difference between the landed costs of a foreign article and the comparable domestic article—they lay down the tariff that will be necessary to equalize those differences, taking the bulk-line production. By "bulk-line production" I mean the cost of a steel rail in Pittsburgh, as compared with the cost of a steel rail in Birmingham, where there is the greatest production. I hope that it will relieve the committee from the necessity of granting extended hearings and listening to the demands of manufacturers coming here, often in good faith, anxious for their industries, anxious to be properly protected against competition; that it will transfer that pressure from a committee of Congress to a governmental agency, instructed and empowered to collect these facts.

Have I answered the Senator?

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I understand the Senator's position. It is quite an ideal one; but as long as he belongs to a party which is wedded to that idea of promoting the prosperity and development and profits of industries in this country at the expense of the people I have very serious doubts whether any committee controlled by members of his party would refuse to listen to the representatives of those interests when they knock at the door and demand an increased tariff for the exclusion of the competition from abroad.

I want to draw the Senator's attention to the fact that we are now considering a certain amendment. It is the amendment which proposes to increase the tariff on iron and steel chains from the present law of 20 per cent and 25 per cent to about 45 per cent. The Tariff Commission now existing has made reports on this specific article, and, reading those reports of the Tariff Commission and the recommendation of the Senator's committee, it looks to me as though the committee had absolutely shut its eyes to the facts which the Tariff Commission has reported relating to the manufacture of chains.

The Tariff Commission has reported that the manufacture of these steel chains in the United States approximates $10,000,000 a year, and that same commission has reported the imports as being practically negligible.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Mr. President, I yielded to the Senator for a question. I am perfectly willing that he should ask me a question, but I do not want my speech interrupted by a speech from the Senator. I want to be courteous. I will say to the Senator that that question will be answered when we discuss that paragraph. I will say to him further that had the Tariff Commission made a study of the difference in the conversion costs here and in Europe, giving protection to the American wage earner and to the American industry, based upon the difference in the conversion costs of those chains here and abroad, the rates they would have fixed, I venture to say, would have been justified. That is an illustration which I present. I want the Tariff Commission to be empowered to study those things, so that we may know the facts. The industries are interested, and I am more interested in the industries than I am in the importers who are trying to break down this tariff, and the industries tell us that they are faced with disastrous competition, and we have only a few of the examples before us of the difference in the costs; but we have the figures showing the differences in the wage scales. I want to have the Tariff Commission empowered to study fundamentally the difference in the conversion costs here and abroad, so that a fair tariff can be imposed. The Senator has furnished an argument for my amendment, and I thank him for it.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me ask the Senator another question. Is it not conclusively proved that competition from Germany or any other country is not serious when the imports amount to only about forty or fifty or sixty thousand dollars a year, while the American producers are making $10,000,000 worth of the article a year, and exporting $2,000,000 worth a year?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. That is where the Senator falls down in his argument, and has fallen down all through the consideration of this tariff bill. The menace of competition lies in the difference between the conversion costs here and abroad and the facilities of the competing countries. If a tariff rate is not fair and does not provide protection equal to the difference in those conversion costs, the foreign industry can undersell us at any period, and, God knows, we want to keep our industries here.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. The fact that they do not undersell us is conclusive proof that their cost of manufacture is not less than ours, is it not?

Mr. WILLIS. Mr. President——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I refuse to yield further. I will simply answer the question by saying that Germany has organized. She has her agents here. She is beginning to ship goods. The importations are increasing.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me ask the Senator this question: Were they increasing at the time the majority of the committee drew this bill?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. Certainly.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. What do they amount to now?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not know.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Let me tell the Senator——

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I am not going into the details——

Mr. HITCHCOCK. I can tell the Senator what they were for the first three months of this year, which was after the bill was drawn. Does the Senator decline to hear them?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will be perfectly willing to go into a discussion of that matter when we discuss paragraph 329.

Mr. HITCHCOCK. Will the Senator permit me to give the figures for January, February, and March of this year?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I decline to be further interrupted.

The VICE PRESIDENT. The Senator from New Jersey has the floor.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. As a second fundamental principle the amendment proposes that in these instances the differences in competitive conditions would be determined by foreign costs, charges of transportation, and costs of merchandising compared with the selling prices of similar or comparable domestic articles.

In analyzing competitive conditions and reporting the rate of duty the Tariff Commission should consider all the favorable or unfavorable conditions as they relate to the foreign or domestic merchandise, such as distance from place of production to place of consumption, differences in quality, advantages of trade name, and many other elements. The rate of duty determined from the difference between the laid-down cost of an imported article plus the proper expenses and the price of the competing domestic article will at least have the advantage of being a rate based on fact, although in certain instances it may be necessary to further adjust this rate to meet certain other conditions which materially affect values of articles.

In some industries and for certain articles there exists greater efficiency as well as certain natural advantages, here or abroad, which would affect the amount of protection to be given to any particular article. There exist also certain types of manufactures the value of which is governed by exterior factors, including the demand of style, the genius of creation, or the goodwill value of a name. The basis on which rates are to be fixed for these articles must be determined by a study of facts and conditions. Congress has never considered this, nor could it well take it up in detail; but the enlarged Tariff Commission which is provided for in this amendment could give the matter proper attention and could reconcile such discrepancies in the recommendations prepared for the final consideration of Congress.

The duties of the enlarged Tariff Commission are specifically defined in this amendment. It is to obtain and compare conversion costs wherever possible. It is directed in addition to select representative samples of imports and of the similar domestic article and to keep these samples always available. Whenever conversion costs can not be ascertained, the commission is directed to analyze the cost of imported articles and the selling prices of similar domestic articles. The commission then recommends the rate of duty necessary to equalize differences in conversion costs and in competitive conditions.

It authorizes the establishment of a New York office, a facility long needed at principal ports through which flow 75 per cent of our imports. The commission can then keep in continual touch with market conditions and have current prices constantly available.

The appropriation of $1,000,000 for expenses will not be considered excessive when we consider the extent of the commission's activities and the results to be accomplished. It must be remembered that the revenue from the tariff averages between three hundred and four hundred million dollars annually. We can well afford to devote one million of this in securing the necessary facts. The Bureau of the Census expended approximately $2,000,000 in obtaining the 1919 census of manufactures, and the Taft Tariff Board expended a little short of half a million in procuring the costs of production in the woolen and cotton industries alone. The appropriation asked will be sufficient, however, because it is expected that American agriculturists, manufacturers, importers, exporters, and those representing the labor interests of the Nation, will cooperate with the commission in an effort to place our tariff on a scientific basis.

In offering this amendment I am trying to create a tariff policy which will remove this troublous question from the arena of politics. The fundamental principle upon which my amendment is based is not new. I have been informed that the tariffs of other countries are compiled by governmental agencies and not through the parliamentary bodies. Many of these agencies have absolute power to enact a tariff. But because of our governmental system, this amendment simply proposes that a governmental agency shall procure the facts, and upon a certain fundamental principle recommend to Congress a tariff necessary to equalize the difference between values here and abroad.

This amendment leaves all the detail, all of the study, and the unification of the interested parties to a governmental agency, which informs Congress of the rate which should be imposed, upon a principle laid down by Congress, and the basis of arriving at the same. If the tariff machinery now created through this amendment is to be nonpartisan, let us rise above partisanship in this body and do something constructive by enacting it without making it a party question, for the welfare not only of the wage earners and the industries but also for the consumers, and the entire country at large.

Mr. President, I have here a list of the presidents of associations which have favored the amendment I have submitted. Those associations are as follows:

Eastern Federation of Feed Merchants, F. C. Jones, secretary, Bullville, N. Y.

Flower & Feather Manufacturers of America, Jacob de Jong, president, 599 Broadway, New York.

Grain Dealers' National Association, Charles Quinn, secretary, Toledo, Ohio.

National Pickle Packers' Association, F. A. Vickers, secretary, 326 West Madison Street, Chicago, Ill.

National Macaroni Manufacturers' Association, J. J. Donna, secretary, Braidwood, Ill.

National Milk Producers' Federation, Milo D. Campbell, Coldwater, Mich.

Oregon State Farm Bureau Federation, George A. Mansfield, president, Portland, Oreg.

Wall-Paper Manufacturers' Association of the United States, Henry Burn, president, 169 Madison Avenue, New York.

New Hampshire State Grange, George R. Drake, secretary, Manchester, N. H.

Wyoming Farm Bureau Federation, Riverton, Wyo.

Charles de B. Claiborne, chairman banking division, Southern Tariff Association, the Whitney-Central National Bank, New Orleans, La.

New Mexico Woolgrowers' Association, Prager Miller, president, Roswell, N. Mex.

The Ohio Sheep and Woolgrowers' Association, J. F. Walker, secretary, Gambier, Ohio.

James E. Rice, chairman Committee for the Promotion and Protection of the Poultry Industry, Ithaca, N. Y.

Tri-City Manufacturers' Association, Moline, Ill.

Utah Manufacturers' Association, Salt Lake City, Utah.

C. C. Ousley, secretary Kentucky Manufacturers' Association, Louisville, Ky.

The Colorado Manufacturers & Merchants' Association, W. J. H. Doran, president, Denver, Colo.

The Manufacturers' Association of Connecticut (Inc.), A. B. Sands, assistant secretary, Hartford, Conn., and, I might add, the Manufacturers' Association of New Jersey.

I have here a list of prominent manufacturers and other individuals, with their indorsements of this plan, which I ask to have printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

From B. E. Clement, president Grain Dealers' National Association, Waco, Tex.: "Notwithstanding the fact that I am a southern Democrat, I am frank to say that I believe in the wisdom of a tariff, and I am frankly of the opinion that the tariff should be so applied as to give protection to American manufacturers and agriculture in such a manner as to secure American markets to American manufacturers and producers. Of course, it would be much wiser for the tariff to be based on facts than upon mere political pull—a pull that reflects itself in a tariff that protects one article and one section to the detriment of another article and other sections. I am frank to say, however, that the Republicans have not been wholly at fault in the method of applying the tariff in the past. The Republicans have had sense enough to see the advantage of a tariff, and when they have been in power they have given protection to the interests of the Republican sections of the country, while the Democrats have been such fools they have refused to demand participation in the benefits of the tariff by applying same or insistence upon the application of same to the products of the South and West."

From Charles Feldman, executive secretary Associated Flower and Feather Manufacturers of America, New York: "At a general meeting of this association, held Tuesday evening, May 16, in our headquarters, resolutions were unanimously adopted, and the movement which you represent was heartily indorsed."

From Milo D. Campbell, president the National Milk Producers' Federation, Coldwater, Mich.: "I am in hearty accord with the attempt to divorce as far as possible the tariff from party politics and to make it an American citizen. If I can be of any assistance along this line, I shall gladly cooperate."

From W. E. Skinner, secretary and general manager National Dairy Association, Chicago, Ill.: "I am acknowledging copy of the pamphlet describing Senator FRELINGHUYSEN'S tariff measure. I will be very much pleased to receive 50 copies of this pamphlet to send to our directorate, and will say that we most heartily and sincerely appreciate your slogan."

From Prager Miller, president New Mexico Wool Growers' Association, Roswell, N. Mex.: "After mature thought am offering you my humble assistance and shall cooperate with contemplated permanent organization. Tariffs that will protect agriculture, industry, and labor equally are the foundation for a prosperous United States, in my opinion. Therefore I would naturally be in favor of more permanent and more accurate facilities for establishing just and equitable tariffs, if such can be done."

From F. C. Jones, secretary Eastern Federation of Feed Merchants, Bullville, N. Y.: "I am interested in the undertaking and shall be very glad to help in any means to take the tariff out of politics."

From J. F. Walker, secretary Ohio Sheep and Wool Growers' Association, Gambier, Ohio: "I am very heartily in sympathy with the idea of a nonpartisan tariff based on production and conversion costs, and think I can assure you that our association will be glad to cooperate with you in securing such legislation."

From James E. Rice, chairman committee for the promotion and protection of the poultry industry of the American Poultry Association, Ithaca, N. Y.: "I take pleasure in saying that I am wholly in sympathy with the objects and shall be glad, indeed, to do anything I can to assist in promoting the movement, if it strictly lives up to its ideals of being nonpolitical and without fear or favor, so far as being dominated by any branch of our industries is concerned."

From H. A. Jansen, secretary-treasurer Tri-City Manufacturers' Association, Moline, Ill.: "This is to advise the Tri-City Manufacturers' Association is vitally interested in a nonpartisan tariff commission and believes that such a commission should be appointed. I feel assured in guaranteeing the support of our governing board and a full indorsement of all the members of the association."

From Henry Burn, president Wall-Paper Manufacturers' Association of the United States, New York: "It will give me great pleasure to use such influence as I may possess with our Representatives in Congress to act favorably upon the proposition of the establishment of a nonpartisan, scientific tariff."

From John T. Queeny, chairman of the board, Monsanto Chemical Works, St. Louis: "You can rest assured that we are very much in sympathy with the purposes of your organization, and shall be glad to see the representative from your committee when he visits St. Louis."

From William A. Aird, secretary-treasurer the Oregon State Farm Bureau, Portland, Oreg.: "Your letter, inclosing copies of resolutions passed by your association, received. I would be pleased to take up this matter at our next executive meeting. I am sure that it will be passed unanimously."

From F. A. Vickers, secretary National Pickle Packers' Association, Chicago: "I will be very glad, indeed, to take up with the members of our executive committee promptly the matter of indorsing the resolutions as passed at Atlantic City."

From Charles de B. Claiborne, chairman banking division, Southern Tariff Association, the Whitney Central National Bank, New Orleans, La.: "I have read the inclosed pamphlet, and I believe that the plan of Senator JOSEPH S. FRELINGHUYSEN of New Jersey with regard to having a sort of advisory committee is a very good one, provided, of course, you see that you obtain the proper men to advise the committee—men who are big enough to act beyond self-interest and men who, moreover, have made a careful study of this matter and are ready and willing to give the time and the benefit of their study and experience. I believe that there is no doubt that the tariff should be based on the cost of production and conversion cost."

From the Hon. MILES POINDEXTER, United States Senate: "I am very glad to know the views of your organization on the subject of an adjustable tariff to be administered under a general rule laid down by Congress, providing for administrative adjustments from time to time. This plan is contained in an amendment reported by the Senate Finance Committee, and I am heartily in favor of it."

From John H. Brewster, representing Fagersta Bruks, makers of carbon and alloy steels, New York: "I have been intending to offer whatever cooperation I could give to your permanent organization, as I am thoroughly in sympathy with it."

From Charles E. Graham & Co., publishers, Newark, N. J.: "I am in favor of the passage by Congress of the bill introduced by Senator JOSEPH S. FRELINGHUYSEN, which contemplates establishing a nonpartisan tariff commission and the removal entirely of the tariff question from the status of a 'football of politics'; and we will be willing to cooperate in the furtherance of the project to whatever extent we are able."

From Maurice A. Knight, manufacturer of acid-proof chemical stoneware, East Akron, Ohio: "We are heartily in favor of taking the tariff out of politics, for two reasons: First, because under the present system by the time some real action is taken the cause for same is usually passed, and the grief has to be gone over again; and second, because the tariffs as now arranged are not based on any scientific fact, but mostly on expediency or political necessity, with little thought for the results."

From M. E. P. Gebhard, the Milford Co., manufacturers of hardware, Milford, Del.: "I am in hearty accord with your movement, and you can count on me to do everything within my power to advance the cause. By all means take the tariff out of politics, and I am sure that the entire business world is with you in such a good work. Best wishes for the success of your committee."

From N. Kopp, vice president and general manager Pittsburgh Lamp, Brass & Glass Co., Pittsburgh: "It is needless to say that I am strongly in favor of such a procedure—taking the tariff out of politics—as it will be the only true solution of the tariff question. In 1916 I assisted materially the agents of the Secretary of Commerce to ascertain the cost of the production of glassware in the United States, showing the percentage of labor, material, and other costs in relation to the sale price. A report has been printed on our industry accordingly, and I shall be ready in the future to lend such assistance in solving the problem as my time will permit."

From W. S. Ferris, the Sidway Mercantile Co., Elkhart, Ind.: "You can count on our cooperating with the permanent organization referred to in your letter just received, for we are most heartily in sympathy with the program to take the tariff out of politics and place it in the hands of a board who will handle the subject scientifically."

From the secretary-treasurer the Wyoming Farm Bureau Federation, Riverton, Wyo.: "We indorse your effort to take the tariff out of politics and to substitute instead a scientific nonpartisan tariff as contemplated by the Frelinghuysen bill."

From L. M. Brile, president Brile & Ratner (aluminum), New York: "I am heartily in accord with the movement to take the tariff out of politics and to obtain a tariff system based on nonpartisan findings of fact as to production and conversion costs. The present tariff system, beyond question, is unscientific and inequitable. Special interests are able to control, through political machinations, the tariff rates on those commodities of agriculture or industry in which they are interested. No analysis of the true factors involved in the correct solution of the problem is possible under the illogical system which is in vogue in the making of our tariff."

From W. A. Becker, the Diamond Match Co., New York: "I think the idea of getting the tariff out of politics, if this is a possible thing to do, is a good one, and I am very willing to be of such assistance to you as I can in this connection."

From Gray Silver, Washington representative American Farm Bureau Federation: "I am very much interested in the measure introduced by Senator FRELINGHUYSEN to remove the tariff from politics, and which will adequately protect American agriculture, industry, and labor."

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Mr. President——

The VICE PRESIDENT. Does the Senator from New Jersey yield to the Senator from Montana?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I yield.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I should be disposed to support the proposal of the Senator from New Jersey to extend the power of the Tariff Commission and give it ample funds with which to prosecute its work, authorizing it to report to Congress what rate would be required to equalize the costs of production here and abroad. I inquire of the Senator if he is able to tell us what action the Committee on Finance will take with respect to the amendment he has proposed?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I would say to the Senator that I have presented the amendment, and I am making my argument, and I intend to ask the Finance Committee to report the amendment. The matter has not been considered yet by the Finance Committee. I want to get it before the whole body and the country.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Is the Senator prepared to tell us, from his experience on the committee, whether the committee was guided by that rule in the preparation of the bill before us, namely, never to fix any rate at such a figure as would produce more than the difference between the cost of production here and the cost of production abroad?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I will say to the Senator in reply that there was a great absence of information; that the effort of the committee was to ascertain the difference between the cost of production here and the cost of production abroad, and the conversion costs, if possible; but the Senator must realize that the Tariff Commission has not a sufficient staff and has not the authority to study this question, and they have had no foreign representatives. They have had no opportunity to make this study of the difference between the conversion costs here and abroad; and as far as possible, taking the wages approximately, we have tried to fix the tariffs on this basis as nearly as possible.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Is that the case with reference to chains and saws?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think the Senator will find, as to chains and saws, that the difference in conversion costs will justify the rate; but, of course, in arriving at the conversion costs the object will be to secure as far as possible specific rates, because such rates are more desirable than ad valorem rates, I believe.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. May I ask the Senator if that rule was applied in the case of manganese?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I think if the Senate would rely upon this principle as to manganese and as to magnesite I would be perfectly satisfied and feel that the principle was a good one and that it was fair protection.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. I was simply asking if it was applied—not for the Senator's attitude.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I do not think it was applied. I will say that frankly.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. Then, perhaps the Senator would not apply it to such items.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I would apply it to everything. I believe in the principle; but I want the facts ascertained, and I want the facts reliable, and I want to empower the commission to ascertain the facts and to recommend the rates.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. How did the Senator come to make an exception in the case of manganese?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. We have not the facts or figures in any way to make a tariff upon this principle. There are no facts to go on, as I have stated.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. There were abundant figures with reference to that item.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. There were no figures that I saw which gave conversion costs abroad.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. They were supplied in abundance with respect to that item.

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have never seen the costs of conversion.

Mr. WALSH of Montana. For certain reasons, good or bad, the committee obviously did not care to apply that rule in the case of manganese and as to a number of other items. I inquire of the Senator whether he would make any exceptions to the rule?

Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN. I have said very frankly that the system has not been followed by either party. I think the Democrats are equally as culpable as the Republicans might have been in ascertaining facts of this character.

Mr. President, in closing I want to read, as an evidence of the widespread demand for a more scientific tariff, a speech made by the head of a great industry, who has been referred to as a dye-tariff robber baron, Judge Elbert H. Gary, before the American Steel & Iron Institute in New York the last week in May.

Judge Gary said:

Revision of the tariff laws is an intermittent disease. It appears, if not with every session of Congress, certainly with every change of administration. It seems to be considered an important political question, though it ought not to be. It should be discussed and decided strictly upon scientific principles and from the standpoint of fairness to every part of the country, to every line of employment, and to the public welfare. This was the tendency of public discussion for a time, but it seems there has been an increasing departure from this practice; that the data secured by the National Tariff Commission at large expense has been almost completely ignored in late discussions.

Many years ago I was invited to the White House to consider briefly tariff matters. I commenced by saying: "Mr. President, I favor free trade," and, after waiting for the surprised expression of countenance which appeared, finished by saying, facetiously, of course, "for every industry except our own." President Roosevelt, immediately catching the point, replied: "That is exactly the trouble. They laughed Hancock 'out of court' for saying the tariff was a local issue, but he was nevertheless perfectly accurate." This little incident illustrates what has always appeared prominent in congressional investigations and decisions, and the disposition has been shown to the same extent in both parties. Efforts to obtain personal advantage have not been limited to localities, individuals, industries, or commodities; they have been universal. Every Member of Congress, striving to faithfully represent his own constituency, is more or less selfish and, by argument, persuasion, and sometimes, if rarely, by bargain with other Members, contends for and often secures benefits which are more or less local.

As between parties, the main difference, as I see it, is that the Republican Party has stood for a "protective tariff" and the Democratic Party a "tariff for revenue only," whatever the distinction may be or is claimed to be. The settlement of this controversy should include both. Indeed, if the question is settled right there must be both. The evil, if any, results from going to extremes. If the two parties could agree upon principles, as they ought to do, the tariff question would be removed from politics and business progress would not be disturbed by pending legislation relating to it.

Tariff rates should be high enough to protect all producers in this country, including capital and labor, against destructive foreign competition, which may come from cheap labor or otherwise, and might drive both domestic capital and labor out of employment. They should protect domestic production fully up to the point of being on a parity with all foreigners as to selling prices in the United States, but they should not be high enough to permit producers to oppress consumers by unreasonable and unconscionable prices.

The determination from time to time of this basis—that is, the full and fair application of the principle stated—would involve careful and scientific study and be more or less difficult, but it would not be political. There should be a commission of well-paid, high-minded, intelligent, competent, and nonpartisan appointees, authorized to ascertain and communicate the facts and figures, and their reports should be frequent, so that, if deemed necessary, a change in or amendment to the tariff laws or any of them could be made at any time Congress is in session. Its members would or should confine their discussions to the question as to whether or not the recommendations came within the principles named.

If tariff laws should be based entirely on the amount to be collected for revenue, great injustice might be done the consumer. There are many kinds of imports that are not produced in the United States. On these, if revenue alone is considered, the amount of tax might be unlimited, except as determined by the absolute necessity or the willingness to buy, and it might be oppressive; but while this would add to the treasury of the revenue collector, it would come out of the consumer, and to the extent that it was excessive it would be oppressive.

Fair and reasonable protection to industry, no oppression to the consumers, this is the line to be established and maintained up to the highest point of possibility. To this principle I think we may safely and conscientiously subscribe. For its application good business will lend its influence.

We have able, fair-minded men in Congress, and they are not afraid to vote against tariff rates they believe are too high or too low. It is to be hoped the tariff agitation now pending will soon be ended, and that the bill adopted will not especially help or hurt either political party and that it will help business.

Mr. President, the trouble with our tariffs is that they are inflexible. I think by this method of allowing the Tariff Commission to make continued studies and recommend to Congress the basis of rates, Congress would be enabled to correct any injustice, either by a higher or a lower tariff as the situation might require; but in all events Congress would have all of the facts and a scientific and expert study of the tariff situation. Every manufacturer whom I have mentioned agrees with me that it is the proper principle. Mr. Taft, when he found that Schedule K was unfair, recommended to the Tariff Board a revision. I have here his message to Congress. Notwithstanding the fact that the McKinley tariff had been in force for several years, the last words of President McKinley at Buffalo were to the effect that there should be a revision of the tariff, that there should be a change, that there should be reciprocity, that we must consider our exports as well as our imports.

If Congress is big enough and constructive enough to create a Tariff Commission having to do with $65,000,000,000 of products and of commerce, which this country enjoys every year, to create a body almost as important at least as the Interstate Commerce Commission—I was about to say almost as important as the Supreme Court—a body of high-minded men who will study conditions and who will receive salaries sufficient to enable us to secure the best and ablest men, and then remove them from any political pressure by making the position one of life tenure, I think we will go a step forward in constructive statesmanship on the tariff question, such a step as this country has never yet taken.

We had for years been without a budget, without an orderly method of financial appropriation. I am informed that we were practically the only country without a budget. Even Mexico has had her budget. Now, we have instituted that reform. Are we willing in this body to go far enough now, irrespective of party, to give a governmental agency authority and power to make these expert studies and refer to this body their conclusions based upon a fundamental principle laid down, conclusions which will be accurate and which will be reliable?

I have served on the Finance Committee only for a short period, but I have had a long business career, and I am presenting this legislation as a business policy of the Government on the theory that the great economic question of tariff imposts should be handled by an expert and experienced governmental agency and not by men who have not the time or the technical knowledge to determine the facts necessary to arrive at the tariff rates necessary to properly protect agriculture, labor, and industry.

Mr. LADD obtained the floor.

Mr. McNARY. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GOODING in the chair). The Secretary will call the roll.

The Assistant Secretary called the roll, and the following Senators answered to their names:

Ashurst	Gooding	McKellar	Simmons
Brandegee	Hale	McKinley	Smith
Broussard	Harreld	McLean	Smoot
Cameron	Harris	McNary	Spencer
Capper	Harrison	Nelson	Stanley
Caraway	Heflin	Newberry	Sterling
Cummins	Hitchcock	Norbeck	Sutherland
Curtis	Johnson	Norris	Swanson
Dial	Jones, N. Mex.	Oddie	Townsend
du Pont	Kellogg	Overman	Wadsworth
Edge	Kendrick	Phipps	Walsh, Mass.
Ernst	Ladd	Poindexter	Walsh, Mont.
France	Lenroot	Rawson	Warren
Frelinghuysen	Lodge	Robinson	Watson, Ga.
Gerry	McCormick	Sheppard	Willis
Glass	McCumber	Shortridge

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Sixty-three Senators have answered to their names. A quorum is present.

ENFORCEMENT OF CUSTOMS LAWS.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, will my colleague yield to me for a moment that I may ask unanimous consent to present a report from the Committee on Finance?

Mr. LADD. I yield to my colleague for that purpose.

Mr. McCUMBER. I report favorably from the Committee on Finance the joint resolution (H. J. Res. 344) to authorize the Secretary of the Treasury to detail four persons, paid from the appropriations for the collection of customs.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, I simply wish to make an observation with reference to the report which has just been made from the Finance Committee by the Senator from North Dakota. I will take but a moment. I do not recall that any meeting of the Finance Committee has been called for the purpose of considering the joint resolution or that there has been any meeting of the committee at which the joint resolution was acted upon. I wish to ask the Senator from North Dakota a question. I do not know that I have any objection to the joint resolution; I have not considered it; I did not hear it read by title; but I wish to ask the Senator if the joint resolution was reported after a meeting of the Finance Committee?

Mr. McCUMBER. The joint resolution was supported by a majority of the Finance Committee and I thought it could go to the calendar, but if the Senator from North Carolina desires further consideration of the matter, I shall withdraw the report.

Mr. SIMMONS. Mr. President, that is not the point I am making.

Mr. McCUMBER. I stated that the joint resolution had the approval of the majority of the committee.

Mr. SIMMONS. But, Mr. President, the majority of the committee can not act upon a measure unless there is a meeting of the committee. There are meetings every day of the majority members of the Finance Committee, but they are not the committee. A joint resolution of this character certainly can not be acted upon by a majority of the committee unless there is a meeting of the committee at which every member of the committee has an opportunity to be present and to express his view.

I think, Mr. President, that it is due the minority members of the committee that I, as the ranking minority member, should protest against the majority membership of the committee considering any question when the minority membership were not present and were given no opportunity to be present and were not notified of the meeting of the committee. I think that in justice to the minority members of the committee that this matter should be brought to the attention of the Senate. Indeed I think, Mr. President, it is an indignity to the minority membership of the committee for the committee to meet and take up bills and consider them at a meeting of the majority members of the committee at which the minority members have not been notified to be present. I am not meaning to reflect upon the chairman of the committee, but I think it is a very bad practice.

It has been called to my attention that one or two small bills have been considered by the Finance Committee dealing with various and sundry matters when I knew there had been no meeting of the committee and no action upon the bills by the committee. I did not then call attention to it, because I thought it was an inadvertence on the part of the chairman of the committee, but I think the matter has gone now to the point where I owe it to the minority members of the committee to protest.

Mr. McCUMBER. Mr. President, I desire to say that it has long been the custom of the committee, instead of calling a meeting of the committee to consider small matters as to which it is supposed there will be no discussion, merely to send the measures around to the members of the committee and have them "O. K." them as satisfactory. That has been the custom right along and has been adopted, I think, by both political parties. We all admit that it is irregular if anyone desires to object to it, and in this particular instance, if the Senator from North Carolina has any objection to the report being made, I shall be very glad to withdraw it.

Mr. SIMMONS. Let me say frankly to the Senator that if he had polled the committee I should not make any point.

Mr. McCUMBER. It was my intention to do so, and I thought the majority of the committee had been polled and that the joint resolution had been found satisfactory. However, as the Senator from North Carolina has indicated a desire to be heard upon the matter, I shall request that the report be withdrawn. I think the Senator has the right to have the matter reconsidered, if he desires that it shall be.

Mr. SIMMONS. As I have stated, I do not know that I have the slightest objection to the joint resolution, but I do insist that members of the committee should be notified of committee meetings and have an opportunity to be present, or that the committee should be polled.

Mr. McCUMBER. Yes; the Senator is right. But often we do not find all of the members of the committee so as to be able to poll them in a day, and when we have a majority in favor of a measure we generally order it reported. I think, perhaps, there may have been a failure to present this measure to all the members of the committee, as is usual in such cases. I thought it was of very little importance, and I assumed that the Senator from North Carolina was agreeable to the arrangement.

Mr. SIMMONS. I am simply protesting because as a member of the committee I do not wish to be ignored, and I speak on behalf of the minority, who, I think, feel the same way as I do—that we ought to be notified of meetings at which action is taken, or that we ought to have the matter submitted to us by way of a poll.

Mr. McCUMBER. The Senator is correct, and I will withdraw the report.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The report presented by the Senator from North Dakota is withdrawn.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATIONS—CONFERENCE REPORT.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I will ask the Senator from North Dakota to yield to me in order that I may present a conference report on the District of Columbia appropriations, which, I think, will lead to no discussion.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from North Dakota yield to the Senator from Colorado?

Mr. LADD. I yield.

Mr. PHIPPS. I present the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate numbered 1 to the bill (H. R. 10101) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The conference report will be read.

The Assistant Secretary proceeded to read the conference report.

Mr. PHIPPS. Mr. President, I may say that the amendment has been read more than once in the Senate. The only real changes which have been made in conference have been in the verbiage and in appropriating a fund not to exceed $20,000 to take care of the expenses incident to the inquiry proposed into the matter of the balance existing as between the District of Columbia and the Federal Government. There is a further change as to the period of time to be covered by the proposed investigation, it being extended for four years; that is to say, starting in 1874 instead of 1878. If any Senator desires that the amendment as perfected may be read, certainly that would be in order, but unless there is a request that it shall be read I hardly think it would be necessary.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President——

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the reading of the amendment will be dispensed with.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, pending that I should like to be informed as to whether the conference report represents a complete agreement between the two Houses.

Mr. PHIPPS. It is a complete agreement between the conferees on the part of the House and the conferees on the part of the Senate. I may say that the only matter under consideration at the latest conference was amendment numbered 1, relating to the fiscal feature of the bill, all other items having been agreed to some time ago.

Mr. ROBINSON. I ask that the amendment which it is proposed to adopt may be read.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Secretary will read the conference report.

The Secretary read as follows:

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendment of the Senate numbered 1 to the bill (H. R. 10101) "making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of such District for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate to the amendment of the House to Senate amendment No. 1, and agree to the same with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment of the House and the amendments of the Senate thereto insert the following:

"That, annually, from and after July 1, 1922, 60 per cent of such expenses of the District of Columbia as Congress may appropriate for shall be paid out of the revenues of the District of Columbia derived from taxation and privileges, and the remaining 40 per cent by the United States, excepting such items of expense as Congress may direct shall be paid on another basis; and that in order that the District of Columbia may be able annually to comply with the provisions hereof, and also in order that the said District may be put upon a cash basis as to payment of expenses, there hereby is levied for each of the fiscal years ending June 30, 1923, 1924, 1925, 1926, and 1927, a tax at such rate on the full value, and no less, of all real estate and tangible personal property subject to taxation in the District of Columbia as will, when added to the revenues derived from privileges and from the tax on franchises, corporations, and public utilities, as fixed by law, and also from the tax, which hereby is levied, on such intangible personal property as is subject to taxation in the District of Columbia, at the rate of five-tenths of 1 per cent on the full market value thereof, produce money enough to pay such annual expenses as may be imposed on the District of Columbia by Congress, and in addition to such annual expenses a surplus fund sufficient to enable the District of Columbia to get upon a cash-paying basis by the end of the fiscal year 1927; and that beginning with July 1, 1922, and annually thereafter, one half of the tax levied upon taxable real and personal property in the District of Columbia shall become due and payable on the 1st day of November of each year and the other half of such tax shall become due and payable on the 1st day of May of each year; and if either said installment of such tax shall not be paid within 30 days of the date it is due and payable, said installment shall thereupon be in arrears and delinquent; and there shall then be added, to be collected with such tax, a penalty at the rate of 1 per cent per month upon the amount thereof for the period of such delinquency, said delinquency to date from the date such installment was due and payable, and the whole together shall constitute the delinquent tax, to be dealt with and collected in the manner now provided by law; and that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia hereby are empowered and directed to ascertain, determine, and fix such rate of taxation as will, when applied to the aforesaid property in accordance with the levies and values hereinbefore mentioned, produce the said sums of money; and that until July 1, 1927, the Treasury Department may continue to make advancements toward the payment of the expenses of the District of Columbia as has been done during preceding years, but after June 30, 1927, it shall be unlawful for any money to be so advanced or for any money whatever to be paid out of the Treasury for District purposes, unless the District, at the time of such payment, has to its credit in the Treasury money enough to pay the full per cent required of it; and that for the purpose of defraying such expenses of the District of Columbia as Congress may from time to time appropriate for, there hereby is levied for each and every fiscal year succeeding that ending June 30, 1927, a tax at such rate on the aforesaid property subject to taxation in the District (the rate fixed herein on intangible personal property not to be made less but which may be increased by the commissioners in their discretion to any rate not in excess of the rate imposed upon real estate) as will, when added to the other taxes and revenues of the District, produce money enough to enable the District to pay promptly and in full all sums directed by Congress to be paid by the District, and for which appropriation has been duly made; and that the Commissioners of the District of Columbia hereby are empowered and directed to ascertain, determine, and fix annually such rate of taxation as will, when applied as aforesaid, produce the money needed to defray the share of the expenses of the District during the year for which the rate is fixed; and that the Commissioners of the District shall, in accordance with existing law, cause all such taxes and revenues to be promptly collected and, when collected, to be daily deposited in the Treasury to the credit of the District for the purposes herein set out; and that on July 1, 1922, the Treasury Department shall open, and thereafter accurately keep, an account showing all receipts and disbursements relative to the revenues and expenditures of the District of Columbia, and shall also show the sources of the revenue, the purpose of expenditure, and the appropriation under which the expenditure is made; and that from and after June 30, 1922, any and all revenue derived from property not owned wholly or in part by the District of Columbia, as between the United States and the District of Columbia, shall be the property of the United States; and that after June 30, 1922, where the United States is the owner of ground or the holder thereof in trust for the public, upon which improvements have been made at the joint expense of the United States and the District of Columbia, the revenues therefrom shall first be used to pay the United States 3 per cent of the full value of the ground as a ground rent, and the remainder shall be divided between them in the same proportion that each contributed to said improvements, and for such purposes the assessor for the District of Columbia shall fix the full value of the ground after he has first made oath that he will fairly and impartially appraise the same; and that after June 30, 1922, any revenue derived from any activity or source whatever, including motor-vehicle licenses, not otherwise herein disposed of, which activity or source of revenue is appropriated for by both the United States and the District of Columbia, shall be divided between the two in the same proportion that each has contributed thereto; and that if, for any fiscal year after June 30, 1927, the District of Columbia should raise and deposit in the Treasury to its credit, as herein provided, more money derived from taxation, privileges, and other sources authorized herein than may be necessary for the purposes herein set out, such excess shall be available the succeeding year, in the discretion of the commissioners, either for the purpose of meeting the expense chargeable to the District of Columbia and/or for the further purpose of enabling the commissioners to fix a lower rate of taxation for the year following the one in which said excess accrued than they might otherwise be able to do; and that after June 30, 1922, the agencies through which the District of Columbia collects its revenues derived from taxation shall also collect for the United States any revenues which by this act become the sole property of the United States, and said revenues shall be deposited in the Treasury of the United States as "Miscellaneous receipts," but the revenues from the property known as Center Market shall not be so collected; and that hereafter the Commissioners of the District of Columbia shall not be restricted in submitting to the Bureau of the Budget their estimates of the needs of the District, but they shall, as near as may be, bring them within the probable aggregate of the fixed proportionate appropriations to be paid by the United States and the District of Columbia.

"A joint select committee, composed of three Senators to be appointed by the President of the Senate, and three Representatives to be appointed by the Speaker of the House of Representatives, is created and is authorized and directed to inquire into all matters pertaining to the fiscal relations between the District of Columbia and the United States since July 1, 1874, with a view of ascertaining and reporting to Congress what sums have been expended by the United States and by the District of Columbia, respectively, whether for the purpose of maintaining, upbuilding, or beautifying the said District or for the purpose of conducting its government or its governmental activities and agencies, or for the furnishing of conveniences, comforts, and necessities to the people of said District. Neither the cost of construction nor of maintenance of any building erected or owned by the United States for the purpose of transacting therein the business of the Government of the United States shall be considered by said committee. And in event any money may be, or at any time has been by Congress or otherwise, found due, either legally or morally, from the one to the other, on account of loans, advancements, or improvements made, upon which interest has not been paid by either to the other, then such sums as have been or may be found due from one to the other shall be considered as bearing interest at the rate of 3 per cent per annum from the time when the principal should, either legally or morally, have been paid, until actually paid. And the committee shall also ascertain and report what surplus, if any, the District of Columbia has to its credit on the books of the Treasury of the United States which has been acquired by taxation or from licenses. And the said committee shall report its findings relative to all the matters hereby referred to it to the Senate and House, respectively, on or before the first Monday in February, 1923. The chairman or acting chairman of said committee hereby is empowered to administer oaths or affirmations. The committee also is empowered to compel witnesses to attend its meetings and to testify, and also to compel the production of such books and papers as it may deem desirable. Any person who has been duly notified to appear before the committee either as witness or witness duces tecum, and fails so to do, shall be deemed guilty of contempt of Congress, and therefor may be punished to such extent as either the Senate or the House may determine; and said committee shall determine whether the proceedings for contempt shall lie with the House or the Senate. The committee may employ such accountants and stenographers to assist in the work as may be necessary, but the same qualifications for such accountants shall be required as was required of accountants by section 6 of the act of June 20, 1874, entitled "An act for the government of the District of Columbia, and for other purposes," and no one shall be so employed as accountant who is or has been heretofore an officer or employee of the District of Columbia or the United States. No employee of said committee shall be paid more than $25 a day while actually at work. The Attorney General of the United States hereby is authorized and directed to assign a competent attorney from his regular force of attorneys to represent the United States before said committee; and any Member of Congress shall be permitted to examine any witness and argue any question before the committee. For the payment of salaries of accountants and stenographers, for printing and binding, and other necessary expenses of the committee, there is appropriated 40 per cent out of the Treasury of the United States and 60 per cent out of the revenues of the District of Columbia, the sum of $20,000 to be paid out upon vouchers approved by the chairman or acting chairman of the committee.

"That all acts or parts of acts in conflict with any provision of this act are hereby repealed to the extent of such conflict but no further.

"That in order to defray the expenses of the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending June 30, 1923, 40 per cent of each of the following sums, except those herein directed to be paid otherwise, hereby is appropriated out of any money in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, and all the remainder out of the combined revenues of the District of Columbia and the advances from the Federal Treasury herein permitted, namely:"

And the Senate agree to the same.

LAWRENCE C. PHIPPS,
W. L. JONES,
CARTER GLASS,
Managers on the part of the Senate.
MARTIN B. MADDEN,
LOUIS C. CRAMTON,
BEN JOHNSON,
Managers on the part of the House.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, may I ask the Senator in charge of the conference report a question or two?

Mr. PHIPPS. Certainly.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is the report signed by all the members of the conference committee?

Mr. PHIPPS. It is.

Mr. ROBINSON. The amendment which has just been read appears to be a permanent adjustment of the issue that has been so long pending in Congress respecting the proportions of the expenses of the District of Columbia government that shall be paid by local taxation and by the Federal Government, respectively.

Mr. PHIPPS. The Senator's understanding is correct.

Mr. ROBINSON. I have not had an opportunity to study it.

Mr. PHIPPS. I will say to the Senator that the only changes of any moment whatever in the report as now submitted are in the language relating to the appointment of the commission of inquiry. The House conferees virtually accepted the amendments to their amendment No. 1 which were voted upon by the Senate a week ago. The other amendment attached by the Senate, which was offered by the Senator from Mississippi [Mr. HARRISON], has been changed, in that language desired by the House has been substituted for the Senate language; but it results in the same thing, the establishment of a commission with power to investigate and report back to the two Houses of Congress.

Mr. ROBINSON. What subject matters of inquiry will be dealt with by the commission?

Mr. PHIPPS. As to whether or not collections of revenue made under franchises, rights, and privileges, collected by various officials of the District, have been properly credited to the District and the United States in correct proportion, or whether arrears have crept into the accounts, and whether the balances now shown on the books of both, which agree in the amount, shall be subject to correction, and be corrected.

Mr. ROBINSON. Is it contemplated that the commission shall inquire into the fiscal relationship and legislation necessary to establish the same between the Government of the United States and the District, or is that permanently set at rest by the amendment?

Mr. PHIPPS. That is set at rest. There is no authority to go behind the law. If appropriations are made to be divided in certain proportions as between the United States and the District, that can not be disturbed; but the point is to determine whether or not the collections were duly made and credited in accordance with those provisions of law.

Mr. ROBINSON. Mr. President, I express the hope that the system which has been worked out will prove very satisfactory and will terminate a controversy of very long standing in the Congress.

Mr. PHIPPS. I ask for the adoption of the report.

The report was agreed to.

ORDER OF PROCEDURE.

Mr. LADD and Mr. WATSON of Georgia addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. ODDIE in the chair). The Senator from North Dakota.

Mr. HARRISON. Mr. President, a parliamentary inquiry.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Mississippi will state it.

Mr. HARRISON. Of course, I do not want to interfere with the Senator from North Dakota; I do not know on what subject he is going to speak, but he speaks eloquently, and I am always delighted to hear him. However, the Presiding Officer of the Senate has always been extremely fair in the division of time for speakers, but this morning there have been four very long speeches made by members of the majority party, the junior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. EDGE], the senior Senator from New Jersey [Mr. FRELINGHUYSEN], the senior Senator from Wisconsin [Mr. LA FOLLETTE], and the junior Senator from Minnesota [Mr. KELLOGG]. The whole of the day has been occupied by gentlemen on the other side of the aisle. The Senator from Georgia [Mr. WATSON] has a speech, a very brilliant speech, to make, and we thought perhaps at least some time might be allotted to the minority. We do not want to be squelched entirely.

Mr. LADD. Mr. President, have I the floor?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Dakota has the floor.

Mr. HARRISON. Then my parliamentary inquiry is ruled out?

Mr. LADD. I do not think I have taken very much of the time of the Senate since I have been a Member of the body. I believe I have spoken but once before, except to explain one or two points in connection with the tariff bill.

Mr. HARRISON. If the Senator will permit, I trust he did not think I was hitting at him. He does not address the Senate often. I was merely calling attention to the fact that four Republican Senators have already spoken to-day; and that there are some on this side who desire to speak, but they are not recognized.

PROPOSED AMENDMENT TO SOLDIERS' COMPENSATION ACT.

Mr. LADD. Mr. President, I have offered an amendment to the bill providing for adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, H. R. 10874. At this time I desire to make some remarks, observations, and explanations of that amendment, and inasmuch as the amendment is an essential part of the discussion I ask that permission be granted to print the same at the close of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, leave is granted.

Mr. LADD. Mr. President, for the past several months we have heard a great deal about the so-called "bonus" for the soldiers. I think the term "bonus" a misnomer. It seems to me that there has been a consistent effort to hammer into the minds of the people the idea that the soldiers were to receive something for nothing. Quite recently the wife of one of the most prominent of international bankers in this country was quoted in the press as saying that she did not approve of the bonus, and she raised what to her doubtless seemed a pertinent question, "Did not Uncle Sam feed and clothe the soldiers?" She apparently thinks that that, coupled with $30 per month, was sufficient. How often do some of our people see only one side of the question? I have wondered if that lady, or her husband, when considering the question of soldiers' compensation stopped to consider, or if they knew, how much the National City Bank of New York made in profits during the World War.

It is my belief, Mr. President, that the most of this opposition to the soldiers' compensation has been fathered by the big banks. Of course, I do not mean to say that a great many men have not reached independent conclusions; but, doubtless, a great many other conscientious men have been influenced by the propaganda against this proposed compensation, and, doubtless, are conscientiously opposed to the idea of adjusted compensation. But, it is my opinion that the propaganda inspired by the bankers has had a great deal of influence upon the whole subject.

May I venture another opinion? Instead of being so zealous of the public interests and so fearful of the consequences upon the Treasury of the United States, the bankers are more worried at this time lest there shall be some actual cash distributed among the people of this country that will for a time restore the business of this country in such manner as to result in their temporarily losing control of the situation. They are not yet through with their period of exploitation and plunder. They do not hesitate to purchase Treasury certificates bearing a good interest return; they do not hesitate to carry over a Treasury deficit—all of this is business between the Treasury and the banks and could not possibly result in placing money among the people. The independence of labor, the marketing channels of the farmer, our entire internal and domestic conditions must be first subject to the bankers' regulation before they intend to loosen the purse strings.

We behold in this country to-day, Mr. President, a most untenable condition. We have a small coterie of bankers that are patently more powerful than the Government! They control the financial situation; they can say to our Government how much of Treasury obligations they will buy; they can finance new railroad enterprises and new industrial combinations that meet the stamp of their approval; they can even finance foreign ventures—and the rate of exchange seems to affect them but little in so doing—in fact, there seems to be very little limit to their possibilities to finance; yet the great Government that houses and shelters all of their enormous wealth is not able to pay her soldiers a just compensation for their sacrifices in defense of our flag!

And it is a question of just compensation, Mr. President. One of the greatest stains that has been placed upon the American honor has been the persistent attempt to blacken and besmirch the patriotic American boys who faced hell and death upon the bloody battle fields of France, who sacrificed and toiled in every branch of the service. The people of this great land should be shamed into humiliation at such a spectacle! These American boys are not asking for a gratuity! Why should they be insulted by even an intimation of such a charge? These boys should not even be faced with the necessity of asking for simple justice!

The banker who sits in his palatial residence or his marble office and prospers by reason of his operations under a delegation of sovereign governmental functions by act of Congress may doubtless feel that the soldier has been well treated and is not entitled to anything. Mr. President, we took these boys away from their work; we destroyed their domestic arrangements; we changed the whole course of their lives; we forestalled every opportunity for advancement or for profit during their period of service. While this was going on the great banks of this country were piling up surplus and distributing dividends and increasing the salaries of bank officials. It is one of the greatest crimes of the age that we have not used the strong arm of this Government to reach into the gold-laden coffers of these war profiteers and compel them to divide in an equitable manner their outrageous profits with the boys who suffered, who sacrificed, who bled, and who have lost hope and business opportunity; who came back to domestic life facing new conditions—compelled to start all over again.

Mr. President, let me emphasize. The big banks of this country emerged from this great war in the most commanding position of power of any institutions in the history of the world. The American soldier emerged in a broken condition, without money, with uncertainty, in abnormal times, with the future gloomy, and prosperity far beyond the horizon. Millions of them were literally turned loose upon the country with nothing to do. The banks were not satisfied. To add to the desperateness of their condition they inaugurated their policy of drastic deflation, that not only destroyed jobs but threw out of employment thousands of others who could be forced to face these conditions with them. The soldier was used to fight for his country at a salary of subsistence while the bankers were making their unconscionable profits; he was turned upon his own resources, possessing nothing, while these same bankers made his condition worse by deflating every opportunity he had to rehabilitate himself. It is the same old story of the fighting man being lauded and appreciated so long as the emergency existed and being discarded and neglected when no longer needed to wade through blood and protect national sovereignty and honor. Even now they are not satisfied, but because an ungrateful Congress has compelled the soldier to ask for a just compensation these same bankers would destroy his character and blacken his honor simply to prevent a measure that would retard their plans for forging the chains of economic servitude upon the producers and toilers of free America. It is one of the greatest crimes of the age, and the American Senate can not afford to be a party to it.

Mr. President, I can point with pardonable pride to my own State, North Dakota. Ex-Governor Frazier, of that State, was one of the first, if not the first, of State executives to include in his message to the legislature, immediately after the armistice, a recommendation to take care of the soldiers. To the credit of our State let it be said that North Dakota has authorized the largest cash payment of any State in the Union, notwithstanding the unholy efforts of the financial conspirators to destroy the credit of the State.

It is to be expected that one of the principal objections to this proposition will be the contention that it will bring about inflation of the currency. Not admitting that such is true, I will state that should it result in such inflation it would be only fair to the major portion of these citizens of this country who are in debt, for the very simple reason that their debts were created at a time when there was inflation and when the obligations they created would purchase little. They would have an opportunity to pay off some of these old debts more nearly on a basis on which they were created. However, should this proposition result in an inflation of the currency it would not be such an inflation as existed at the high peak of the Federal reserve circulation, because should this whole amount be issued there would then be less money in circulation than there was reported to have been at one time during 1920.

In discussing a similar condition during the Civil War, Abraham Lincoln said:

> If a Government contracted a debt with a certain amount of money in circulation and then contracted the volume of money before the debt was paid, it is the most heinous crime a Government could commit against a people.

No one will deny but what the above is a just criticism which we can not at this time afford to forget.

In this same connection that brilliant American statesman, John C. Calhoun, said:

> Place the money power in the hands of a combination of a few individuals, and they, by expanding or contracting currency, may raise or sink prices at pleasure, and by purchasing when at the greatest depression and selling at the greatest elevation may command the whole prosperity and industry of the community and control its fiscal operations.

Would anyone at this time attempt to refute this statement? Is it not true that when the sovereign States voted to give up the right to coin money and fix the value of the same to the Federal Government—that is, to Congress—did Congress proceed to do this or was this authority delegated to private and corporate interests and the power so delegated used by these interests to inflate and deflate the money and credit value to the benefit of these same interests? Then, under Government protection, have we not as a Nation been guilty of the very thing that Lincoln and Calhoun warned us against? If so, then can Congress be blameless? While Congress continues to permit these banking conditions to prevail we shall be forced to tolerate inflation and deflation so timed and administered as to benefit the bankers, financiers, and speculators at the expense of the producers, especially the farmers, laborers, small business men, and country bankers, until the farmers become serfs to pass with the land.

Another point in connection with inflation: This proposition will require no new inflation of credits in order to get some money among the people. One of the most serious drawbacks to prosperity in this country to-day is a lack of money among the people. I am not speaking of bank deposits, or bank reserves, or fictitious figures that are created by banking methods; I am talking about actual cash. We have enormous facilities for short-term credit, if such facilities are dominated and controlled by a few and doled out at their pleasure, on their terms and at their convenience; but such control has already resulted in the impairment of credit and the destruction of security values. To get more of this credit among the people means to start the credit machine moving, with the people furnishing the necessary security to obtain the credit. The manner of treatment received at the hands of the credit machine has left the people in such condition that it makes it hard for them to provide the security, save at a great sacrifice in security value, and such sacrifice in security value would make the credit both inadequate and too expensive. This amendment would place actual currency among the people, and would necessitate no new creation of debt. Therefore, there would be no new inflation of credits. Naturally, the monopolists of money and credit in this country would object and would fight it to the bitter end. We are accustomed to their opposition, Mr. President, and I think it is about time that Congress compelled them to show their hand. Several months ago, Mr. SINCLAIR, of North Dakota, introduced in the House a resolution asking for an investigation of the Money Trust. I am not criticizing the House of Representatives, Mr. President, but Mr. SINCLAIR is an able, conscientious, and earnest gentleman, and he has thus far been unable to obtain hearings on what I consider one of the most important resolutions that has been introduced in this Congress. It is time we knew something about the inside working of the powerful and gigantic money and credit machine that has been built up in this country, which is to an extent too largely protected by acts of Congress.

Anyone familiar with the conditions in this country, that knows the situation in the byways and hedges, realizes that there is no money among the people. We have subsisted so long on bank credit and our commercial wheels have had to so completely depend upon bank credit for their motive powers that upon cessation of the credit supply it was only a matter of a short time before actual necessities of life took from the people the comparatively small amount of actual currency in their midst. If this money is authorized and is issued to the people direct, as provided in the terms of my proposed amendment, the wheels of business will respond immediately. It will enable a great many men who owe small debts to pay them off; it will enable others to undertake many little needed improvements; it will enable many small business undertakings to get the necessary cash to inject new life into their business. The inevitable result is bound to be a great deal of revival in business and a general restoration of business confidence. Of course, it is not in accordance with the bankers' game, it will take business from them, and will show the people of this country that they have a way of freeing themselves from the bankers' domination; but the people will be benefited and that is the thing with which we should most concern ourselves. We may expect much opposition from the bankers and their friends, but the needs of the people of this great country demand this relief and we should give it to them.

Let me emphasize this point: My proposed amendment is designed not alone to take care of the soldiers' compensation in the most effective and least expensive manner, but is also designed as a step toward the restoration of business confidence and prosperity in this country by placing some actual money among the people with which they can do business. With our credit situation as it is, controlled as it is, with property values chaotic as they are, it is impossible for business to take a vigorous hold on life until a few men who control the situation are ready to release the brakes.

The proposed amendment provides for a tax that will raise the funds necessary to retire this money. If this money is to be retired by taxation, instead of conversion into bonds, then the amendment provides for a distribution of the burden over a period of 25 years. This amendment proposes to levy a tax upon the profits of banks, banking institutions, banking partnerships, and trust companies, allowing to them a profit or dividend of 12 per cent upon capital and surplus, allowing the deduction of all amounts paid in any other taxes, and then taxing to the extent of 50 per cent of any profits over and above such amounts as are required to meet the items mentioned. This tax applies only to banks, banking institutions, and so forth, that are incorporated for $100,000 or more, or partnerships that have $100,000 or more invested in the partnership business. Therefore the little banks over the country will not in any wise be affected.

In the event the revenue derived from this source is more than sufficient to meet any annual installment of money to be retired, then any surplus is to be turned into the public funds in the Treasury to be disposed of as Congress may see fit by appropriation. In the event the revenue derived from this source is insufficient to meet any annual installment, then such amounts as may be required are to be taken from the interest paid on the foreign debt. In the event these two sources should prove inadequate, then any deficit is to be met out of any funds in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated.

Suppose that it should be necessary to provide for the full amount of any annual installment out of the public funds in the Treasury and the two sources of revenue should entirely fail, it would require less than $100,000,000 each year to retire this money. Suppose we should provide for adjusted compensation by the issuance of $2,500,000,000 of 4 per cent gold bonds. The interest on this amount of bonds would require $100,000,000 each year. This would be virtually the amount we would have to appropriate each year in order to retire the full issue of money within 25 years. In the case of bonds we would have spent that much in interest, and the principal would still be due.

Mr. President, I can fully understand the objection that will be raised to taxing the banking institutions of this country in order to pay this adjusted compensation. I am fully familiar with the slogan, "Take the Government out of business and put business in Government." The situation reminds me very much of the little boy who sicked his dog on his father, and as the dog's teeth sank in the leg of the father, the little boy yelled out: "Stick to it, dad; it's hard on you, but it is the making of the pup." Just so it is with business as we have experienced it and as big business sinks it teeth into the Government the chanters of the slogan yell, "Stick to it, Government; it's hard on you, but it is the making of big business." We have had a great deal of that kind of thing. There is no great mystery about the cry that emanates from certain quarters to "let business know what it can do." Mr. President, the big-business interests of this country have seldom had to inquire as to what they could do. They usually know what they can do and what they are supposed not to do. They are more frequently found doing the things they are not supposed to be allowed to do than they are in being dilatory in doing what they are allowed to do. Big business in this country is not in any quandary as to what to do; big business simply wants to be given governmental sanction to pursue a course of ruthless exploitation, and it sometimes looks as if they will be given permission. One need only glance at a list of the appointees of the Secretary of Commerce to fill the positions of bureau chiefs to know that big business is fairly familiar with that which is going on.

There is ample precedent, Mr. President, for the issuance of the money necessary to pay this adjusted compensation as provided in my proposed amendment. It is to be expected that the cry of "soft money" will be raised. That is a stock phrase that is long outworn, but never too old to be used as a bugaboo by the banking interests who wish to protect their legalized privileged monopoly. It is not the gold, it is not the silver, it is not the nickel, it is not the copper that makes the money. It is the stamp of the sovereign. It is the power of the Government, the sovereignty of a Nation, that gives it its value. Our Supreme Court has said—12 Wallace Reports, page 553—that "the gold or silver thing we call a dollar is in no sense a standard of a dollar. It is representative of it." An act went into effect on the 1st day of August, 1834—ibid., supra, page 552—that changed the weight of our coins, but that did not change the dollar. I do not wish to take up the time of the Senate at this time to present the argument in favor of this contention. Ample precedent for the issuance of this money lies in the action of Secretary Chase in the issuance of the first $60,000,000 at the beginning of the Civil War. The acts of July 17, 1861, of August 15, 1861, of February 12, 1862, and of March 3, 1863, are all important in this connection. Although the act of 1863 qualified the money by making it unacceptable for duties on imports and interest on the public debt, the bankers used that exception to drive down the value of that issue. However, there is now in circulation legal-tender notes issued under that act, and they are circulating at par with all other money of the United States. However, the acts authorizing the first $60,000,000 contained no exceptions, just as my proposed amendment contains no exception, and that money always circulated at par. The other so-called greenback acts provided such measures and qualifications on the money issued under them that the very terms of their issue destroyed the circulating value and effectiveness as sound money.

The first $60,000,000 always remained at par, because the money contained no exceptions, but was acceptable as legal tender for all debts, public and private. The other issues did deteriorate in value, because the bankers were successful in qualifying the money by exceptions. However, the act of March 3, 1863, is cited in this connection to show that at this time there is in circulation money issued under the provisions of that act, and that that money is at par with all other money of the United States. It would always have remained at par with other money of the United States had there been no qualifying exceptions.

We can provide for the issuance of this money and make it full legal tender for all debts, public and private, and make no exception whatever that will prevent its circulation as money anywhere in our country, and it will always remain at par with the rest of our money, because the power of our sovereign Nation says that it must. Why burden the taxpayers of this country and pay bounty to bond dealers by even considering a proposition of long-term bonds at a high rate of interest? Why create volumes of new business with a Government indorsement for the banks by proposing a method whereby the soldier will be compelled to negotiate a loan if he is to realize any ready cash? Is it the purpose to keep money away from the people and create more interest-bearing debts to be held by the bankers? How will the people of this country ever pay the billions of debt they now owe unless some actual currency is placed in the country? They can not pay off bank credit by negotiating more bank credit. That is a method of creating a debt to pay a debt, borrowing from Peter to pay Paul.

However, I have realized the difficulty that will be met in trying to get a measure of this kind through. Therefore I have gone even further than I think necessary, or that we should go, in order to present a proposition that I think this body might accept. There are provisions in my proposed amendment that are in the nature of concessions to conservatism. I have drawn the amendment in this manner in the hope that it will receive real consideration at the hands of this body.

In providing for the issurance of money I realize that the question will be asked as to how we are to retire this money or prevent it from continually being in circulation. If we put this money in circulation, how will we ever retire it?

In order to meet this proposition I have provided some very definite measures:

First, I propose that none of this money shall be retired within the first 12 months after its issuance. And then I have provided a method of converting this money into bonds, but with the restriction that not more than 20 per cent of the total amount of the issuance can be converted within any year. My idea in that was this: We have all just experienced the results of drastic deflation, and I do not believe that we should place any substantial amount of money out in the country at this time without taking safeguards against its sudden contraction.

During the past several months, while we have been haranguing and debating and doing nothing about this soldiers' compensation, these men who risked their lives and fortunes for American honor have suffered all kinds of humiliations and hardships. It has been no uncommon sight to see some of them at the back doors of the citizens of this country asking for bread. It comes with poor grace for us to talk about them working, when we permitted the bankers of this country to pursue their ruthless policy of drastic deflation and take from them every opportunity there was to work. It comes with poor grace for anyone to talk of "professional bonus hunters" when the "professional job destroyers" have been permitted to run wild and play havoc in this country. If there be any veteran who feels that his honor will not permit him to accept any adjusted compensation, then the option is with him. Let not the few more fortunate, who have been accustomed to more out of life than the average veteran, or who have come under the influence of the wily propaganda that has flooded this country against adjusted compensation, or who has formed an independent opinion against the compensation, defeat the justice due the man who is in need or who has no hesitancy in receiving payment of a debt justly due him. Mr. President, the "honor" of the war profiteers did not seem to trouble them very much, yet they seem to be greatly disturbed about these veterans, who, at this late date, are just receiving consideration. They are very poor specimens of American citizenship to be talking about the "honor" of the American soldier.

Referring again to this question of a tax on banking institutions: It seems to me that it would be very difficult for any man to seriously contend that under present conditions, after a banking institution has made 12 per cent on its capital and surplus and paid all taxes, it should not be made to divide its remaining profits with the Government that has granted to it the enormous powers that enable it to make such tremendous profits. Mr. President, Congress has seen fit to set up a great credit machine in this country and has provided a system of credits and has turned that machine over to private banking institutions and permits them to loan, inflate and deflate, those credits to the citizens of this country at high rates of interest, and the interest returns do not come back into our National Treasury, but go to create enormous profits for these private banking institutions. Indeed, Congress has been very generous with them. They have turned over to them this sovereign constitutional governmental function to operate for private gain, and the American people pay the bounty. Even our American Government, if it wants the use of some of that same credit, must pay enormous amounts in the interest to these same institutions so favored by acts of Congress.

There is scarcely a day now but what we see where some corporation is paying a dividend. There are few banks incorporated in excess of $100,000 but what have consistently shown a good profit, and are now making profits. In startling contrast to this the farmers of this country lost $5,000,000,000 on a single crop! The producers of America have been placed on an operating basis that denies them the reasonable living of the reasonable American workingman. It is a terrible responsibility for any man to assume by indorsing such conditions.

In reference to the proposition embraced in this proposed amendment for the applying of the interest on the foreign debt due the United States, that needs very little explanation. That is to be used only in the event that the revenue realized from the proposed tax on the banks, banking institutions, banking partnerships, and trust companies should prove insufficient to meet any annual installment.

Now, I come to another interesting point in this proposed amendment: The conversion of this money into 3 per cent gold bonds.

As a further means for providing for the retirement of this money and assuring its soundness from a more conservative viewpoint, the proposed amendment provides for the conversion of this money into 3 per cent nontax-exempt gold bonds of the United States. Any holder of $100 or more of this money can any time after 12 months from the issuance of the money convert the same into these bonds by presenting the same to the Secretary of the Treasury with the request for conversion. However, not more than 20 per cent of the total amount of the money issue can be so converted within any 12 months' period. As a matter of convenience to the Secretary of the Treasury and to provide uniform dates for such bonds, he is authorized to set definite dates, quarterly or semiannually, for the conversion of these bonds. The bonds are to run for 25 years from date of issue, such date being determined by the date they are offered for conversion. The right is reserved in Congress to call these bonds for redemption at any time it sees fit. I would not want to delegate that right to the Secretary of the Treasury, because we do not know who may become our Secretary of the Treasury in the future, or what kind of refunding processes might be attempted. Definite dates for conversion will make the bonds uniform in date, and the different periods will distribute the burden of payment in the future and will not concentrate the load upon the Treasury at any one time.

Personally, I believe it would be more preferable not to convert the money into bonds but retire it by the method proposed over a period of 25 years. However, the method prescribed for converting into bonds will prevent the retirement of an amount too large at any one time, which would tend to bring about the evils of contraction. But this method of converting into gold bonds will largely take away the argument of those who cry "soft money." The money will be sound if gold bonds of the United States are sound. Should this put too much money into circulation the bankers are provided a way for gradual retirement by converting into bonds, which bonds are to bear a low rate of interest. Should this money be converted into these bonds the Government will have borrowed some of the cheapest money in her history. If the bankers prefer not to take the bonds at the rate of interest provided, and being nontax exempt, they can let the money stay in circulation and it will be retired under the provisions provided.

This issuance of money will also tend to deflate credits, Mr. President, because it will require no new creation of debts to get it among the people, and once it is among the people they can use it to pay credits or debts already created.

In this manner, Mr. President, I believe that the adjusted compensation can be paid the veterans in cash. The cash will do a great deal toward restoring the business of this country.

The proposed amendment provides that the money shall be mailed to the veterans direct by registered United States mail. This is to avoid bank manipulations, which would substitute checks for cash, and would be too easy for the bankers to control the situation. This will place actual cash, that is so badly needed, among the people.

This method provides for the payment of this compensation at a minimum of cost to the taxpayers of this country. We will circulate the credit of our Government instead of paying the bankers high interest rates to circulate it for us. The taxpayers will get the advantage of the interest we would otherwise pay out to bond dealers.

Mr. President, we have reached the point in the administration of our national affairs where we are having to expend annually about $4,000,000,000. A very large proportion—too large—of this amount goes to pay interest on Government obligations. These obligations have been largely acquired by banking privileges accorded to private banking institutions by our National Government. It is high time that we were beginning to think something about the duty of Congress in exercising the sovereign right of issuing and controlling the money and credit of this country. We have already delegated far too many powers and rights to private banking institutions that have worked detriment to the people. This places the issue before this Senate. Will you exercise the solemn duty delegated to Congress by the people of this great land through their Constitution and assert some control over the currency and credit of this country, or will you supinely consent to a continuation of bankers' control by the legislative sanction of Congress?

Mr. President, as answering many questions that arise in connection with this proposition and the amendments, I ask to have printed, without reading, in 8-point type, an address made by myself at a gathering at Holyoke, Mass., and also a short statement published generally in the North Dakota press.

There being no objection, the matter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, in 8-point type, as follows:

RETROSPECT AND PROSPECT OF AMERICAN FINANCE—A DEBT-PAYING VERSUS A DEBT-CONTRACTING SYSTEM.

"When Charles Dickens was visiting this country in 1842, writing from Boston to a friend of his in London, he said:

"There is not a man in this town nor in this State who has not a blazing fire and meat every day for dinner, nor would a flaming sword in the air attract more attention than a beggar in the streets."

"What a contrast between the America of 80 years ago that knew no beggar, no pauper, no poverty, no financial misery and the America of to-day that witnesses 5,000,000 of her people without employment, with unfortunates and beggars on almost every corner, with paupers filling our homes of charity, with poverty stalking among pale-faced, emaciated children in our crowded cities and industrial centers, and a financial system that destroyed in excess of $15,000,000,000 in property values within a single year and left misery, hardship, wrecked business opportunities, debt slavery, and a shattered public confidence in its wake. What a contrast!

"Here we have a great country, with limitless resources. Our mountains are literally bursting with their wealth, yet our people are limited in their means to bring it forth—limited not in their capacity and desire for labor, but limited by financial and economic conditions over which they no longer exercise any control. Here we have plenty of work to do that would add comfort and joy to our national life, but 5,000,000 are forced to lie idle. Here we already produce more of foodstuff than we consume; millions in Europe are starving, and thousands here whose faces are becoming pale and wan from the pinch of hunger, yet our American producers are compelled to produce their crops under conditions that make their crop more expensive than the remuneration they receive for it. Here there is food in abundance, and some of our nationals who are willing to work are forced to go without sufficient nourishment to keep their bodies in full mental and physical health and vigor.

"As we scan the business conditions throughout the country to-day we find that the producers of the Nation—the farmers, the laborers—have been stripped of all their savings and are practically living from hand to mouth. Farming, the basic industry of America, is in a most deplorable condition. The farmer can not buy sufficient fertilizers or implements with which to produce a normal crop; and, what is more depressing, he has no assurance that he will realize out of the sale of his crop an amount equivalent to his investment in the crop. On the other hand, we find the reserves of the big banking institutions consistently piling up. Not only have they gathered in all the gold of the country and practically all of the money, but they have enormously increased the amount of the debts owed them. The little business man throughout the country is walking on stilts over the treacherous quicksand of financial domination. The few big business men are making more secure their grasp upon the resources of the Nation and the labor of the people. Indeed, this condition causes us to wonder if we are approaching a situation such as Lincoln had in mind when, with almost prophetic vision, he said:

"It (the Civil War) has been indeed a trying hour for the Republic, but I see in the near future a crisis approaching that unnerves me and causes me to tremble for the safety of my country. As a result of the war, corporations have been enthroned and an era of corruption in high places will follow, and the money power of the country will endeavor to prolong its reign by working upon the prejudices of the people until all wealth is aggregated in a few hands and the Republic is destroyed. I feel at this moment more anxiety for the safety of my country than ever before, even in the midst of the war. God grant that my suspicions may prove groundless.

"This statement sounds almost as if it had been made in this good year 1922. It is much nearer true to-day than it was at the close of the Civil War. If corporations were enthroned during Lincoln's administration, how much more were they enthroned during the great World War. The increased number of American millionaires during the World War was but an indication of the startling rapidity with which wealth was speedily aggregating in the hands of the few. An examination of the increased volume of debt in this country, exclusive of that portion created by the Government for the prosecution of the war, and a view of where the volume of debt is held is an amazing revelation of the destination for which we are headed.

"But why all this depression to-day? Why are mills and factories closed and men without employment? Why is farming land lying idle, in part, and in part but poorly tended? Why is Mr. Average Citizen overwhelmingly in debt? Only two short years ago we were apparently in the midst of prosperity. Our whole national life was as one busy workshop, everybody having more of life than they had ever had before; Mr. Average Citizen consuming and producing more than he had ever produced; good cheer and happiness was on every hand. Then the crash! The fields were ripe unto harvest. There was much to be gathered. The reapers possessed the greatest machinery in their history. They reaped and garnered and gathered into their own barns and they groaned under the fruits of their harvest. In some instances the gold reserve ascended until it exceeded 70 per cent.

THE CAUSE OF DEPRESSION.

"There are doubtless many important factors that enter into the causes for the present depression. There is, however, but one basic and fundamental cause and that is our money problem. It has been truly said that the love of money is the root of all evil, and when we find a concentrated control of money, which control is exercised for the benefit of the few as against the many, there we find concentrated evil. Such control means power, and that power is always oppressive power. As the book of Ecclesiastes says:

"So I returned and considered all the oppressions that are done under the sun; and beheld the tears of such as were oppressed, * * * and on the side of their oppressors there was power.

HIGH SPOTS IN FINANCIAL LEGISLATION.

"Time will not permit me to give you an analytical sketch of the history of our money system. I can but touch upon some phases, but will, to a certain extent, particularize upon the system under which we are now working. There is one thing that I wish you to bear in mind at the outset, and that is that under our present system the issuance and control of our money and credit is vested largely in private banking institutions. Notwithstanding the fact that the right to issue and control money is supposed to be a sovereign governmental function intrusted to Congress, that power has largely been delegated to the Federal reserve banks, which are now admitted to be private banking institutions which display a great deal of opposition to governmental interference. In fact, they have become so arrogant in their power that they virtually threaten Members of Congress with defeat at the polls should such Members dare oppose in Congress their plans. And what makes them more arrogant and defiant in their high-handed policies is the fact that the Government has virtually gone into partnership with them. Not the Government, but faithless officials, clothed with the people's authority.

"We have had three separate and distinct experiences in this country with banks along the idea of a central bank. The first was the one brought into existence as a result of the report of Hamilton, and began business on the 12th day of December, 1791. This was the First United States Bank. Various charges were brought against this bank. One of the principal objections was that three-fourths of the stock was held abroad by foreigners, another charge was that the act creating the bank was unconstitutional, and still another charge was that it constituted a 'money trust.' The criticisms proved sufficient to defeat the bill continuing its charter, and the bank ceased to operate on the 3d day of March, 1811.

"Then for awhile the business of the country was conducted through State banks. All during the War of 1812 the State banks were functioning and carrying on business. However, a need for some national system was apparent. On April 10, 1816, a law went into effect creating the Second Bank of the United States. This bank was modeled closely after the first, and was our second experience with banks of the central-bank idea. This bank had varied experiences. First, it is reputed to have lost quite heavily, and Langden Cheves was made president. He was followed by Nicholas Biddle. They adopted a policy of retrenchment and deflation. The customers of the bank naturally suffered, but H. Parker Willis, who was so prominent in the promulgation of the present Federal reserve system, tells us that the bank became 'the most powerful and best-managed financial institution the country had ever seen.' Just so is the Federal reserve system to-day—that is, it is 'the most powerful and best managed,' but it is managed for the benefit of the banks and a few special-privileged, and the people suffer the results. Argument was soon adduced that proved sufficient to defeat the attempt to recharter the Second Bank of the United States, and it went out of existence in President Jackson's administration.

"Our third experience with banks modeled along the central-bank idea is the system under which we are now operating—the Federal Reserve Bank of New York—to all practical effects being the central bank of the United States. There are a great many things to be said about our present system—things that will show the danger of granting to private banking institutions the right to issue and control the money and credit of a nation. It is true such powers make for powerful and profitable banking institutions, but they prove a curse to the people who have to live under their shadow.

"After the demise of the Second Bank of the United States, we again operated for awhile with State banks. Then, through the act of February 25, 1863, and the revised act of June 3, 1864, the national banking system came into effect. With various supplemental and amendatory acts, we operated under the national banking system until the establishment of the Federal reserve system in 1914, our third, and let us hope it is to be our final experience with a central banking system under private control.

"It is interesting to note that the same character of influences that were at work at the first two instances of central banks under private control were the influences that were at work to put into operation our present system, modeled along the central-bank idea with private control, and this in spite of the fact that so many of our really conscientious Representatives in Congress really thought they were giving the people a real currency system that was under the direct control of the Government, so that direct governmental control could be exercised over the money and credit of this Nation. But they are not to be so greatly blamed, because they were fooled.

"'Drastic deflation' has become an established term in American phraseology. It has conveyed a terrible meaning to hosts of American citizens. There has been an almost mystifying submissiveness to its exactions due to the belief that has been propagandized among the people generally that such a policy was necessary as a matter of reconstruction and that its attending hardships are the natural results and expected penalties that all patriotic citizens must pay as their part of a war announced as victorious. But while the people of this country have been going through a process of deflation the big banks have been piling up their reserves and the purchasing power of the enormous debts due them has been tremendously increased. While some of the little State banks throughout the country which really seek to serve their communities have been forced to close their doors for the want of a few thousand dollars, a Federal reserve bank has been able to build a marble palace costing millions of dollars to house its activities. We have, indeed, been witnessing a remarkabe display of the power of banking institutions in striking contrast to the helplessness of the people. But this is a condition of affairs about which we have had sufficient warning.

WARNING OF DANGERS AHEAD.

"When we launched our first experience with the central bank idea in this country by authorizing the first bank of the United States, that great Englishman, William Pitt, who was chancellor of the exchequer, said:

"Let the American people go into their debt funding schemes and banking systems, and from that hour their boasted independence will be a mere phantom.

"In 1888 Mrs. Emery made a most striking statement when she said:

"By controlling the finances of the country they—the money power—have been enabled to form trusts and syndicates which have reduced the people to a wage slavery more abject and heartless than any chattel slavery that ever cursed God's earth.

"Thomas Jefferson also witnessed the oppressing power of the central bank system in the operations of the first bank of the United States, and he said:

"I hope we shall crush in its inception the aristocracy of our moneyed corporations which dare already to challenge our Government to a test of strength and bid defiance to the laws of our country.

"How true it is to-day that they 'challenge our Government to a test of strength and bid defiance to the laws of our country.' Jefferson also recognized the fact that the power to issue and control the circulating medium belonged to the Government and that the Government should exercise that sovereign function. He declared that—

"Bank paper must be suppressed and the circulating medium must be restored to the Nation to whom it belongs. Let banks continue if they please, but let them discount for cash alone or for United States notes.

"He saw the evil that was resulting from bank credit and bank paper and knew that it would prove a curse to the people who permitted such a system to be imposed upon them. It is strange that the party of Jefferson should have so far forgotten the admonition of their great founder as to walk straight into the trap against which he had warned them.

"One of the world's greatest economists, Joseph Caillaux, former Premier of France, in his recent book 'Where is France Going? Where is Europe Headed?' says:

"The most urgent problem confronting the world to-day is the ending of the present grotesque confusion of moneys. The sole solution is the creation of a European bank note based not on gold but on credits and international securities. The gold standard was faulty in its inception and it has remained as long as it has solely because the great catastrophe proving it fallacious was long in coming. But the war has shown that a system by which a floating gold supply can govern the richness or poverty of far-separated nations is a system not only fundamentally unjust but one which in the end wreaks vengeance on its supposed beneficiaries.

"Under its present ownership that formerly great paper, the New York Tribune, apparently holds an entirely different view on the Nation's monetary system than did Horace Greeley when he said:

"We are careful to conceal the ugly fact that by our iniquitous monetary system we have nationalized a system of oppression more refined, but none the less cruel, than the old system of chattel slavery.

"Salmon P. Chase, the great Civil War Secretary of the Treasury, considered the great mistake of his life to be his activity in procuring the passage of the national bank act, and declared that—"It has built up a monopoly that affects every interest in the country. It should be repealed. But before that can be accomplished the people will be arrayed on one side and the banks on the other in a conflict such as we have never seen in this country.

"How prophetic his words appear to be! The Federal reserve system is but a considerable extension of those powers of monopoly which Mr. Chase beheld in the national bank act with a great deal of solicitude. Truly the people are gradually becoming arrayed against the tyrannical and oppressive, though 'refined' banking institutions that so effectually dominate our country to-day. It is only a matter of time when the people will become informed as to the exact situation and then Mr. Chase's prophecy will become true. The people of this great country will not tamely submit to economic servitude and the conflict between the banking interests and the people is inevitable. Let us hope that it will be waged intelligently and peaceably.

WALL STREET AND THE CIVIL WAR.

"Mr. Chase had unusual experiences with the money power and knew whereof he spoke. Among the many burdens that the Lincoln administration had to bear, that of raising the money to finance the war proved to be one of the most difficult. It was practically impossible to negotiate foreign loans because the safety of the Government was threatened. Wall Street, who clamored for the war and was loud in denunciating slavery, was appealed to. The banks were perfectly willing to loan their notes on Government bonds, payable in gold, at a 20 per cent discount. We learn from Appleton's Cyclopedia for 1861, page 296, that Wall Street, with a swell of patriotism, tendered loans to its Government, fighting for existence, loans at a rate of interest at from 24 to 36 per cent. The money barons retired all the gold and silver to their vaults and it looked as if the Government was at their mercy. However, Mr. Chase came forth with a constitutional idea, and that was that 'Congress shall have the power to coin money.' The enactments of July 17, 1861, and February 12, 1862, followed, authorizing the issue of $60,000,000 of Treasury notes, non-interest bearing, payable for all debts, public and private. This issue of money had not one ounce of gold behind it and has always remained at par with gold.

"However, the money barons were thwarted in their scheme to rob the people. They did not propose to quietly submit to this process of shearing them of their power. Only four days after the passage of the legal tender act a bankers' convention was held in Washington. This legal tender act would transfer the monopoly of money from the hands of the money dealer into the hands of the people. It meant the destruction of Shylock's system. The bankers' convention was called. Mrs. Emery tells us that—"There is left no room to doubt but that the conspiracy perfected at that convention resulted in that infamous exception clause on the greenback, and was consummated by act of Congress, February 25, 1862, wherein it was stipulated that the greenback should be legal tender for all debts, public and private, except duties on imports and interest on the public debt, which from that time forward should be paid in coin.

"Wall Street had won a great victory. All the greenbacks that were issued with that exception clause, qualifying its value, subsequently rapidly decreased in value. So, then, Mr. Chase knew whereof he spoke. If the money he proposed had not been qualified by such an exception, its value would always have remained at par with gold, because it would have had not only all the gold in the United States but all of the wealth, the Army, and the Navy behind it. It would have been worth par just so long as the United States remained a Nation and exercised her governmental prerogatives in behalf of her people, because the people would have accepted it willingly, showing their confidence in the honesty of their representatives.

SHYLOCK'S POUND OF FLESH.

"When Congress passed this act refusing to accept its own notes in payment of obligations due to it in way of import duties, depreciation of this paper money was inevitable. But the other provision which excepted the payment of interest on public debt made a twofold victory for the bankers. The bankers had hoarded all the gold. When imports reached this country the importers had to have gold to pay the duties, because this provision of the act kept the Government from accepting its own money in payment of these duties. The result was that the importers had to go to the bankers to get the gold to pay the duties. This placed gold at a premium, and the premium advanced as high as 185 per cent. In other words, $100 in gold would buy $285 of the Government's money. The bankers would sell $100 in gold for $285 of Government bonds bearing interest. These bonds were payable in gold, and the Government's money could not be used to pay interest on the public debt, so the interest on these bonds bought with $285 of Government money had to be paid in gold and paid in advance. What a harvest for the bankers while the Union soldiers were facing death on the battle field for $16 per month, payable, not in gold, but in this same Government money. If these exceptions had not been written into the law and the money had not been so conditioned, the money would have remained at par with gold for all time. To be sure, the bankers would not have realized their conscienceless profit, but the people would not have suffered from such high prices and burdensome taxes.

"But, we are told, why all this argument for fiat money? Such a proposition, as just stated, is a declaration for fiat money and is dangerous in the extreme. In return, let me ask: What is fiat money? When it is desired to divert our course from financial reform that will really mean something for the people, the cry of fiatism and greenbackism is raised.

"The New York Times, under date of April 2, 1922, publishes an article headed 'Gold standard does not exist,' and then adds 'but should be created,' thus admitting there is no gold standard and demonstrating what every thoughtful student knew to be true, namely, that the gold standard plays but a small part in the transactions of business, which is largely done on 'credit notes' made possible through a system of most ingenious bookkeeping evolved by the Federal reserve system.

FIAT MONEY DEFINED.

"The truth about the matter is that all money is fiat money. Brice—and where is there a better authority—in his Financial Catechism says:

"Whatever a nation chooses to select, upon which to stamp its device and so stamp and declare it money, it is money to all intents and purposes, within the limits of such Government, and none can go farther than that as money.

"He also says:

"Fiat is a command to do something; and when issued by a recognized lawmaking power it carries with it all the force of the nation whose lawmakers issue it. In national affairs, it is the command of the Government. In the collection of taxes, it says how much shall be collected, upon what the levy shall be made, and what shall be exempt. In providing money for commerce it says how much shall be made; what material shall be used; and what value shall be set on each piece. Every mandatory law on the statute books of any nation is simply the fiat of the nation placed upon record.

"One of our great constitutional authorities, Judge Tiffany, at page 221 of his Constitutional Law, says:

"To coin money and regulate its value as an act of sovereignty involves the right to determine what shall be taken and received as money; at what measure or price it shall be taken; and what shall be its effect when passed or tendered in payment or satisfaction of legal obligations. Government can give to its stamp on leather the same money value as it puts upon gold or silver or any other material. There is no such thing legally as gold or silver or paper money. Money is the sovereign authority impressed upon and attached to that which is capable of taking and retaining the impress of that authority. The act of coining money consists in affixing to that which is to constitute money the stamp or seal of sovereign authority by which it may be known and recognized in market as being authority entitled to be received at the price or value stamped thereon. The authority which coins or stamps itself upon the article can select such substance it may deem suitable to receive the stamp and pass as money; and it can fix what value it deems proper, independent of the intrinsic value of the material upon which it is affixed. The currency value is in the stamp when used as money, and not in the material independent of the stamp. In other words, the money quality is the authority which makes it current and gives it the power to accomplish the purpose for which it was created—the power to pay debts.

"And again the United States Supreme Court says:

"Whatever power there is over the currency is vested in Congress. If the power to declare what is money is not in Congress it is annihilated. * * * No one ever doubted that a debt of $1,000 contracted before 1834 could be paid by 100 eagles coined after that year, though they contained no more gold than 94 eagles such as were coined when the contract was made, and this not because of the intrinsic value of the coin, but because of its legal value; the eagles coined after 1934 were not money until they were authorized by law, and had they been coined before without a law fixing their legal value, they could no more have paid a debt than uncoined bullion or cotton or wheat. * * * The coinage act fixes its unit as a dollar, but the gold or silver thing we call a dollar is in no sense a standard of a dollar. It is a representative of it. * * * We repeat, money is a printed legal decree.

"In spite of all the cry about fiat money, all money is fiat money. In spite of the cry against greenbackism, unless there is some discrimination in the law authorizing such paper money, which will prevent it from passing as currency for all domestic purposes, such paper money will always remain at a par with the gold money of the country. As a matter of fact, there has been no money in the history of our country that more completely illustrated the use of fiat money than the money issued under the provisions of the Federal reserve act. Under the Federal reserve act practically all of the money that has been in circulation has been paper money. About July 30, 1921, over 77 per cent of the general stock of gold in the United States was held by the Federal reserve banks. June 30, 1920, when we were in the midst of inflation and gradually reaching the peak, there were only $34,216,000 gold coin and $41,928,000 gold certificates in all of the reporting national and State banks. During that period the test of the purchasing power of the dollar was not the percentage of gold that was in the gold reserves, but, rather, the volume of money that was in circulation plus the condition of bank credits.

BANK CREDIT VERSUS MONEY.

"That leads me to say something else. The great majority of business that has been conducted since the inauguration of the Federal reserve system has not been done with money but has been done with bank credit. The big bankers have been able to easily fool the people in making a distinction between the two. Very few men who created debts and made bank loans during the war actually borrowed money. They paid interest just the same, but the banker did not actually loan them money. When we pick up the papers and read the various bank statements and look at the statement of deposits and see that the statement says that so many dollars are on deposit, that does not mean that those deposits represent cash. They do not. To a large extent they represent credit.

"Let me illustrate: Mr. A walks into a bank and says to the cashier, 'I wish to borrow $10,000; here is my note properly indorsed, and it is such a note as comes within the provisions of the Federal reserve act.' The cashier says to Mr. A, 'Well, Mr. A, do you wish this in cash or do you simply wish a checking account?' Mr. A replies that he simply wants the note discounted and placed to his credit on his checking account. The loan is granted. The note is discounted, Mr. A is credited on the books with the amount, and he pays his bills by check. His checks are deposited by his payees in their various banks, who are engaged in the same kind of loan transactions. These checks are then passed through the clearing house and there 'washed out' by matching, or checking, them against each other and the banks adjusting their differences in cash. The banks have not loaned money. They have simply loaned a book transaction, credit, and are drawing interest on their system of bookkeeping. It is hardly probable that more than 5 per cent of cash is required to adjust the differences of the banks in the clearing house association. An interest-bearing debt has been created solely on the ability of the banks to keep books, coupled with an unjust privilege allowed them under the provisions of the Federal reserve act, which permits them to extend or contract such credit almost at will. It has been the arbitrary exercise of this sovereign function placed in the hands of private bankers that has wrought so much havoc during the past several months.

THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM ARRIVES.

"In August, 1913, we were assured by one of the proponents of the Federal reserve act that the act would—

"Prevent unfair and undue constriction of credits with its consequent paralyzing effect on business and on the productive energies of the Nation.

"Also—

"Men will not be thrown out of employment wholesale throughout the country by the fright of financial and commercial panic, but finance and commerce will be steady. Men will not be ruined by violent and abrupt changes of values. Hundreds of thousands of men will not suddenly be thrown out of employment during these national waves of depression. There will be no national waves of depression nor undue feverish buoyancy.

"The above statements were made by Senator ROBERT L. OWEN, and appeared in an article entitled 'The banking and currency bill,' in the Commoner, August, 1913, volume 13, No. 28, page 4.

"Senator OWEN is a most brilliant man and had given a great deal of time and thought to his subject, but how easily was he fooled. It is true we have had no bankers' panic but we have had one of the greatest panics among the people that we have ever witnessed. What an era of 'unfair and undue constriction of credits' have we had, and we have fully realized its 'consequent paralyzing effect on business and on the productive energies of the Nation.' Men have been thrown out of employment, not by the hundreds of thousands but our unemployed have reached the 5,000,000 mark. 'Violent and abrupt changes of values' robbed the farmers of $5,000,000,000 in value on a single crop. Men have been ruined on every hand, suicides and failures have been introduced into every community, homes have been lost, and hope has been shattered, but it has not been advertised upon the billboards of the country, instead they have blazoned the enchanting phrase, 'Prosperity is just around the corner.'

DRAWING BIG INTEREST ON BOOKKEEPING AND NO MONEY.

"With such a condition as this facing the country, and in view of all the inspired statements of the banking wizards as to inflation and how much money was in the country during the period of inflation and the necessity for deflation, it is pertinent to note that the total cash in the vaults of all reporting banks, national and State, was on June 30, 1914, $1,639,219,000, and on June 30, 1920, $1,076,378,000.

"In other words, there was over half a billion dollars more of cash in the vaults of the reporting national and State banks before the inauguration of the Federal reserve system in 1914 than there was June 30, 1920, when we were in the midst of inflation. The bankers were doing the business, not with cash but with bank credit. In using bank credit they were drawing interest on their privileged system of bookkeeping.

"Another pertinent point: The loans and discounts, including overdrafts of all reporting banks, national and State, was on June 30, 1914, $15,339,478,000, and on June 30, 1920, $31,365,333,000.

"In other words, the debts due the banks more than doubled from the period just before the Federal reserve system was inaugurated until the 30th of June, 1920, when we were in the midst of inflation. These debts were created by the extension of bank credit, and the banks were realizing interest on these paper credits. From these figures you can begin to realize the enormous profits which the bankers were able to realize by reason of the special privileges granted to them by the Federal reserve act. At an average rate of interest of 6 per cent the interest on these debts would approximate $2,000,000,000, half enough to run our Government during this period of high taxes. If you would add to that the interest realized off of Government bonds and obligations annually, you would have an amount that would practically pay the expenses of the Government. It is hard to see where these institutions afford any special service that the Government could not well exercise under proper administration for the benefit of all the people and without material expense. In other words, by reason of the special privileges granted these banking institutions they are able to realize an amount of profit almost sufficient to pay the expenses of our Government if our Government were to conduct the same kind of business. Through these privileges the people of this country are contributing to these banking institutions an amount almost equivalent to the amount they have to pay for the support of the Government. No wonder they will howl 'fiatism' or any other kind of 'ism' in order to keep for themselves these powerful weapons of economic servitude.

DOES THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM MEASURE UP?

"In this connection we would do well to recall the speech of John C. Calhoun in the Senate, who said:

"Place the money power in the hands of a combination of a few individuals and they, by expanding or contracting the currency, may raise or sink prices at pleasure; and by purchasing when at the greatest depression and selling at the greatest elevation may command the whole property and industry of the community and control its fiscal operations."

"In discussing our present deplorable financial condition it is well to keep in mind that seven men have almost unlimited power in the Federal reserve system. If this power was used for the best interests of all our people, it would bring prosperity, but this power has not been so used; in fact, it seems to have been used for the very opposite purpose, and its maladministration has brought ruin to a large group of our people. Says a writer in the Manufacturers' Record for March 30, 1922:

"At no time in our history, not only from the time of Lincoln but from the time of George Washington, since the formation of this great Republic, have we been presented with a greater wave of prosperity, a greater opportunity for securing permanent benefits to agriculture, commerce, and civilization, nation-wide and world-wide, than was almost forced upon us prior to the enforcement of this policy of wreck and ruin. And had the Federal reserve system functioned for the purpose for which it was intended to-day we would be in the midst of prosperity; we would have a contented and prosperous agriculture, intense commercial activity, and the people of America and the world would have received great benefits. Of course, we would have eventually had deflation in prices. However, it would have come upon the law of supply and demand and never to pre-war levels as a perpendicular drop. Had the Federal reserve system functioned for the purpose for which it was created, it would have been recorded in the permanent records of history as one of the greatest benefactors of civilization."

WHEN DRASTIC DEFLATION CAME.

"With all of these debts outstanding it is easy to see how a crash could be precipitated. When 'drastic deflation' was ordered paying time had come. Debtors were called upon to pay, and they must pay with money. The most of these debts were short-term bank obligations and immediately due. Bank credit was shut off. Debtors could borrow neither money nor bank credit. It was only a matter of time until the comparatively small amount of money that was in circulation had gone the rounds and had been drawn in. But the debt due had not been paid. Shylock was demanding his pound of flesh. Money became dear, because money became scarce. After the money that was in circulation had passed its round of debt paying and had gradually found its way to the vaults of the big banks the only way to get it out again was by the sale of commodities, of property, and of labor. This gave the money power the weapon they needed with which to force down the price of commodities and of labor. Since through payment on debts they had gathered in the money, and now payment on debts was to be made by labor and commodities, it made their debts immensely more valuable to obtain as much of labor and commodities for their debts as possible. As a result we have witnessed the inevitable collapse of basic industry in this country and the real producers reduced almost to a state of vassalage.

"Many reasons were assigned. The people needed to be led to believe that such a painful operation was necessary for their own salvation. They were asked to be good sports and take their part of the medicine. They took their medicine all right while these legalized money barons were bundling in their booty.

"When our markets collapsed we were told that the European purchasing power had dwindled and that there was no European market for our goods. The farmer was asked to be patient until Europe could be restored. We were told that the difference in exchange rates made it impossible for Europe to buy. Our financial guardians, if they had the interests of the country at heart, should have thought of that when they ordered 'drastic deflation.' They should have known—and probably did—that deflation in America, which would result in dear money, would make a wider margin of difference in exchange rates with Europe, that was continuing inflation and cheap money. Is it possible that some of our international bankers held enormous European war securities, that were subject to become valueless unless American resources and labor could be marshaled to their support and their value be restored by American commodities?

HOME CONSUMPTION VERSUS FOREIGN MARKETS.

"Had more thought been given to domestic conditions and more attention paid to home consumption, prices in our basic products would have never suffered such a collapse. When we threw 5,000,000 out of employment, who were earning about an average of $4 per diem, we destroyed a purchasing power of $20,000,000 per day, or about $6,000,000,000 per year. Think of the effect this amount of money would have had upon our domestic market had it been spent for necessities and comforts of life. As a nation we can produce practically everything we need for home consumption, and we are really practically independent of foreign trade, save the necessity of adjusting trade balances. It is a crime to force American products upon a foreign market until the maximum demand in this country is first satisfied. We need to adjust our economic system so that our people can consume more and have more of the pleasures and comforts of life as well as of the necessities. If our people produce the commodities, any system is criminal that denies to them the results of their toil in pleasures, comforts, and necessities. Our present system does it. But there is a way of allowing our people to realize more of the fruits of their toil, and that is through a proper monetary system, a system that really circulates for the people, a system wherein money is really a circulating medium through which the people can exchange values and not a system wherein money is purely a commodity with which to engage in trade, barter, sell, control, and make scarce, and make all human endeavors subservient to the beck and call of those who control and manipulate it. One is a system for the people realized by our Government exercising its sovereign governmental functions, the other is a system for the special privileged banking class and their allies, realized by the banking class being granted sovereign governmental functions, to be exercised by them privately for their own special greed and avarice and gain.

"There is one thing I want you to bear in mind, ladies and gentlemen, and that is that when the money power of this country wants to divert your attention from their activities they begin to point out other problems that face the country and ask you to notice them, that they are the dangers to the Nation. I want to say to you that there is no really big and important question before our people to-day that is inseparable from the money question, and the money question usually controls the situation.

"We have gotten into our present difficulties because of the fact that Congress has delegated certain sovereign governmental functions to a few specially privileged to use for their own advantage. It is true that the rank and file of Congress did not realize just what they were doing. There is only one way to meet the problem. The first thing is to undo that which we have done.

THE LADD MONETARY BILL.

"With that in view, I have introduced a bill in the Senate that provides for the restoration of the sovereign function of the issuance and control of money and credit to the Government, where it rightfully belongs under the Constitution. After extended investigation and much preparation, I formulated a tentative measure in Senate bill No. 2604. I believe this bill to contain provisions of great importance that are fundamentally sound. The bill provides for a Government issuance of money, to be loaned direct to the people at a rate of interest not to exceed 4 per cent per annum, and I believe if it were passed it would be the greatest triumph for the people in the history of monetary legislation in our country. The fundamental principles of the bill are, I think, of such transcendent importance that I am little concerned as to the details of the bill, just so the fundamental propositions remain unimpaired. The right to issue money and control the volume and to control credit should be placed back in the Government and remain there to be used for and on behalf of all the people of this great country, and not be manipulated by a privileged monopoly for the benefit of the few.

"To bring about such a reform as this means to challenge all the combined powers of aggregated wealth with all of their plutocratic, dominating, and conscienceless methods of warfare. Mr. Chase's prophecy will then become realized, wherein 'the people will be arrayed on one side and the banks on the other in a conflict such as we have never seen in this country.' But we must gird up our loins and enter the fight or submit to a system that Horace Greeley foresaw to be as cruel as that of 'the old system of chattel slavery.' Will we permit this to go on until the Republic is destroyed, as was feared by Lincoln? God forbid! Will this generation see us as William Pitt prophesied, that our 'independence will be a mere phantom'?

"The challenge is to you, the challenge is to me, the challenge is to every good citizen who loves his country. What will you do? Will you agree that the citizens of this great land shall be manacled and bound in economic servitude, or will you demand that they shall be free? Free to toil and labor and enjoy the fruits of their intelligence and thrift. The way is open; but we must first have the determination of battle and the willingness to wage it to a successful conclusion. In the name of righteousness, justice, and freedom, let us start it.

"I regard poverty as a curse. God never meant any man to be poor in the sense of that pinching, grinding want which gives a man heartache and brain ache. There is plenty in the world for every man to live in comfort, and all lack is largely the result of governmental mismanagement."

INFORMATION RELATIVE TO THE ORIGIN AND OPERATIONS OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM.

"This week I received a request from North Dakota, as follows:

"Many of us have not as clear an idea of the Federal reserve bank and its workings as we should have. Can you tell us through the Courier-News—

"1. How the Federal reserve was started?

"2. What it pays the Government for money it gets from it? How much, etc.

"3. Who are the beneficiaries of this Federal reserve bank?

"4. How money can be contracted through it, etc."

"There are so many angles involved in this request that it is quite impracticable to answer in detail, as it would impose upon the space in the Courier-News. However, I hope to discuss various details at different times, so that the people may have some specific information relative to the workings of the Federal reserve system.

1. HOW WAS THE FEDERAL RESERVE STARTED?

"Paul M. Warburg, former member of the firm of Kuhn, Loeb & Co., international bankers of New York, and which firm was found by the Pujo committee to be one of those firms that constituted the Money Trust, is the person who really brought about the Federal reserve system. It was his idea. Warburg was born in Germany in 1868; he came to the United States in 1902. The German banking house of the Warburgs was established in 1796. Warburg is the finished product of many generations of international bankers. His world-wide education thoroughly equipped him for the opportunities of international banking on a large scale. Notwithstanding the fact that he came to America in 1902, he did not become an American citizen until 1911. In 1906 he commenced an active campaign to put his banking ideas on the Federal statute books. He was active in the Aldrich measure, and by that measure committed the Republican Party to his banking program. The Democrats, very righteously, rose in arms and defeated the Aldrich measure and then turned right around and nestled Warburg to their bosoms, camouflaged and modified the proposals contained in the Aldrich measure, and passed the Federal reserve act. The Republicans already having been committed to its principles, which, if possible, was the more vicious of the two, as embodied in the Aldrich bill, could not offer any substantial resistance to it, and it is doubtful if they desired to do so. When Warburg was before the Senate Banking and Currency Committee testifying in the hearings on his nomination to the Federal Reserve Board, he stated:

"I have, as you know, taken a keen interest in this monetary reform since I have been in this country. I have had the success which comes to few people of starting an idea and starting it so that the whole country has taken it up and it has taken some tangible form.

"This committee who heard Warburg say this was in a position to know who was responsible for the Federal reserve act, and no voice was raised to question his authorship. He further stated, when asked to explain the fundamental differences between the Aldrich plan and the Federal reserve plan, that—

"the Aldrich bill brings the whole system into 1 unit, while this deals with 12 units and unites them again into the Federal Reserve Board. It is a little bit complicated, which objection, however, can be overcome in an administrative way.

"Mr. Warburg was chosen the administrator to overcome the objections and making it conform to the possibilities of a central-bank idea. How well he succeeded its drain upon the people of this country should amply testify.

"This is a brief statement as to how the Federal reserve system was started.

2. WHAT DOES IT PAY THE GOVERNMENT FOR MONEY IT GETS FROM THE GOVERNMENT?

"The last definite information I have on this subject is as late as February 8, 1922, and I do not think the conditions have materially changed since that date. Under the provisions of section 16 of the Federal reserve act, Federal reserve banks are required to reimburse the Treasury Department for all expenses necessarily incurred in connection with the printing, issue, and retirement of Federal reserve notes. The act also empowers the Federal Reserve Board to establish a rate of interest which each Federal reserve bank shall pay on the total amount of its Federal reserve notes outstanding less the amount of gold and gold certificates held by the Federal reserve agent as collateral security. Up to February 8, 1922, however, the board had not required the reserve banks to pay interest on the Federal reserve notes issued to them, justifying such failure to do so upon the ground that all net earnings after the payment of the annual dividend of 6 per cent are either paid to the Government as a franchise tax or are transferred to surplus account in accordance with the provisions of the Federal reserve act. However, the ingenuity of bankers help them take care of a great many things. Severe criticism has been made relative to increase of salaries of bank officials and employees and the building of bank buildings—the New York Federal Reserve Bank proposed to build a marble banking palace to cost approximately $25,000,000. The banks are also required to pay a tax of one-half of 1 per cent each half year on the average amount of such bank's notes in circulation. This is equivalent to the rate charged national banks on their circulation. Up until December 31, 1921, the Federal reserve banks paid to the Government in franchise taxes the sum of $124,537,336. This was all, notwithstanding the fact that they were doing billions of dollars' worth of business. The proposed bank building in New York was to cost a fifth of this sum.

3. WHO ARE THE BENEFICIARIES OF THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM?

"Those who own and control the system, of course, and it is owned and controlled by the big bankers. It is a common misunderstanding that the Federal reserve banks are public institutions owned by the people. They are not. They are private banking institutions, and their officials have so testified before congressional committees. They are operated for private gain. Congress simply delegated to them, under the provisions of the Federal reserve act, the control and use of the money and credit of this country. Congress had no moral right to do so, if it had the legal right. The Constitution places upon Congress the duty of regulating and controlling the money and credit of this Nation, and it was morally criminal to delegate those functions to private bankers to operate for their own private gain. Of course, at times, there must be resultant benefits to the people and temporary prosperity in order to make the system profitable to the bankers; but there are also the periods of depression which sweep away all of savings and prosperity and more completely forge the chains of economic servitude. The power is in the hands of the bankers who control the system to bring about either that they desire. It is mere prating for them to talk about prosperity is just around the corner, because they alone can turn the corner when they desire. Natural economic conditions no longer control the situation in this country. Unnatural, fictitious conditions of the bank manipulators control, and they control under a quasi partnership with the Government and under the protection of a delegation of powers by Congress. Congress must undo what it has done and restore to the people the control and exercise of the sovereign function of the issuance and control of money and credit.

4. HOW CAN MONEY BE CONTRACTED THROUGH THE FEDERAL RESERVE SYSTEM?

"The Federal reserve system set up a system of bank credits that enveloped the country in debt without putting the necessary corresponding amount of money into circulation to help them pay out when paying time came. The most of the loans made throughout the country were loans of bank credit. If you went to a bank to borrow, your loan was placed to your credit at the bank and you drew your checks against it. You saw very little of the money that your debt was supposed to represent. It was a system of bookkeeping. The debts were created, but the money did not go into circulation. When the Federal reserve system was ready to contract, it simply stopped the issuance of bank credit, and you could not borrow from your banks any more. They had no bank credit to loan. It had been stopped by the system. There were about ten times as large an amount in debts due through the Federal reserve system as there was money in circulation. It was only a matter of a short time after these debts were called for payment until all the money in the country was drawn into the Federal reserve banks, and still the larger proportion of the debts remained unpaid. Then the only way the people could get money with which to pay the debts or to purchase the necessities of life was to sell their products or their property. They held the money and they owned the debts. This gave them control of the situation so that they could dictate the prices the producers of the Nation were to receive for their labor and products. They not only contracted the currency but deflated everything else the average citizen had. Especially did they deflate the farming class."

Amendments intended to be proposed by Mr. LADD to the bill (H. R. 10874) to provide adjusted compensation for veterans of the World War, and for other purposes, viz:

Amend section 401 by striking out, on page 11, line 6, the comma after the word "credit" and insert in lieu thereof a period, and all the rest of lines 6 and 7, namely: "if, and only if, such credit is not more than $50."

Strike out all of Title V, "Adjusted service certificates," beginning with page 12 and including pages 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, and 22, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"ADJUSTED SERVICE PAY.

"SEC. 405. (a) That the Secretary of the Treasury be, and he is hereby, authorized and directed, for the payment of the adjusted service credits provided for in this act, to issue, on the credit of the United States, the sum of $2,500,000,000 of United States notes, or as much thereof as may be necessary, not bearing interest, payable to bearer, which notes so issued shall be lawful money and a legal tender in payment of all debts, public and private, within the United States; and any of the said notes, when returned to the Treasury, may be reissued from time to time as the exigencies of the public service may require, unless such notes have been duly retired or converted in accordance with the provisions hereinafter contained in section 406 of this act.

"(b) Such Treasury notes shall be issued in denominations of $1, $2, $5, $10, $20, $50, $100, and $500 each, in such amounts of each as to make them best suitable for circulation among the people generally.

"(c) Veterans entitled to receive 'adjusted service pay' under the provisions of this act, and who shall have duly made application for such 'adjusted service pay' in accordance with the provisions of section 302 of this act, shall be paid the amount of their 'adjusted service pay' with lawful money of the United States by forwarding the same to such veterans by registered mail.

"GRADUAL RETIREMENT PROVISION.

"SEC. 406. (a) That for the purpose of providing for the gradual retirement of the Treasury notes issued under the provisions of this act, there shall annually be levied and collected upon all banks, banking institutions, and trust companies, organized and doing business in the United States or in any of its possessions that are incorporated for or in excess of $100,000, and upon all partnerships engaged in the banking business in the United States or in any of its possessions in which the total amount of capital invested in the firm business amounts to $100,000 or more, a sum equal to 50 per cent of all profits made by such banks, banking institutions, trust companies, or banking partnerships, in excess of 12 per cent upon capital stock and surplus after due deduction is made for all other taxes paid by such banks, banking institutions, trust companies, or banking partnerships: Provided, however, That none of the Treasury notes issued under the provisions of this act shall be retired within 12 months after the issuance of such notes: And provided further, That the Treasury notes issued under the provisions of this act shall be retired over a period of 25 years in equal annual installments, except where such Treasury notes are retired by bonds as hereinafter provided.

"(b) If the money levied and collected under paragraph (a) of this section of this act shall be in amount in excess of the amount required for the retirement of the proportional amount of such Treasury notes for that year, such excess shall be turned into the public funds in the Treasury; if the amount levied and collected under paragraph (a) of this section of this act should not be sufficient for the retirement of the proportional amount of Treasury notes for that year, then such amounts as may be necessary to provide for the retirement of the proportional amount of Treasury notes for that year shall be paid from the funds received from the interest paid by foreign Governments on their refunded debts owing to the United States.

"(c) In the event the funds provided for in paragraphs (a) and (b) of this section should be insufficient for the retirement of the proportional amount of Treasury notes for any year during the operation of this act, then and in that event there is hereby authorized to be appropriated, out of any moneys in the Treasury not otherwise appropriated, amounts sufficient to retire the proportional part of such Treasury notes for that year.

"(d) After one year from the issuance of Treasury notes provided for in this act any holder of Treasury notes issued under the provisions of this act in amount of $100 or more may present such notes to the Secretary of the Treasury for exchange in gold bonds of the United States: Provided, That not more than 20 per cent of the total amount of Treasury notes issued under the provisions of this act shall be thus exchanged during any one year.

"(e) As soon as practicable after such Treasury notes are presented to the Secretary of the Treasury for conversion he shall issue therefor gold bonds of the United States as herein provided for, and for that purpose the Secretary of the Treasury is hereby authorized to issue bonds of the United States, nontax exempt, the principal and interest thereof shall be payable in United States gold coin of the present standard of value, at an annual rate of interest not exceeding 3 per cent, payable semiannually, and said bonds shall be payable 25 years from date of issue, the date of issue being determined by the date on which such Treasury notes are offered for conversion: Provided, That at any time prior thereto, upon act of Congress, such bonds may be called for redemption.

"(f) In his discretion the Secretary of the Treasury may fix definite dates, quarterly or semiannually, at which time such Treasury notes may be tendered to the Secretary of the Treasury for conversion at par into the bonds authorized under the provisions of this act."

ATTITUDE OF GEORGE WASHINGTON TOWARD BONUS FOR SOLDIERS.

Mr. WATSON of Georgia. Mr. President, it is not for the purpose of carrying on a discussion of the soldiers' bonus that I claim at this time the attention of the Senate for a few moments. On yesterday afternoon there arose a difference of memory between myself and the Senator from Idaho [Mr. BORAH] as to whether George Washington favored, in principle, a soldiers' bonus. The Senator from Idaho evidently had in his mind the fact that General Washington refused to receive any compensation for his services during the Revolutionary War. One might very naturally, after the lapse of years, confuse that fact with the previous record of General Washington in connection with other wars, especially the old French and Indian War. It is for the purpose of showing that I was right in saying that General Washington had indorsed the principle of the bonus, cash bonus and land bonus, that I now ask for a few moments of the time of the Senate.

The first authority from which I read is John Marshall, who, as everybody knows, was a great personal friend of George Washington and afterwards was Chief Justice of the United States. His work, the Life of Washington, is one of the original authorities, and from volume 2, page 11, I read:

Great credit was given to Colonel Washington by his countrymen, for the courage displayed on this occasion—

That was part of the old French and Indian War—and the legislature were so satisfied with the conduct of the party as to vote their thanks to him and the officers under his command. They also gave 300 pistoles to be distributed among the soldiers engaged in the action, as a reward for their bravery.

Mr. President, this morning I had the Spanish coin "pistole" looked up, and its equivalent in our money is $4. Therefore the amount paid by the Virginia Assembly to these soldiers was $1,200, worth at this time perhaps five times the amount it was worth then, the purchasing power of the dollar having decreased so much. Therefore this bounty in cash was worth not less than $6,000, and the text leaves you in doubt as to whether that was for each man or for the entire party, to be divided among the men. Take it either way you will. There is the principle of the legislature voting to George Washington, then a colonel, and to the small body of men he commanded in that expedition against the Indians, about $6,000 in cash; and Mr. Marshall, on the margin of that page, prints a letter signed by George Washington, in which he thanks the legislature for its action in this regard.

Mr. Marshall does not go any further into the matter, but Sparks does. In Sparks's Life of Washington, at page 67, I find the following:

Another and more substantial proof soon followed.

That is, proof of the general gratefulness of the legislature and the people for the services of Colonel Washington and his men in those expeditions up the Ohio against the Indians.

The Virginia Legislature voted £40,000 for the public service and enlarged their regiment to 16 companies. Three hundred pounds were likewise granted to Colonel Washington and proportional sums to the other officers and privates—

Now he quotes from the act of the legislature, evidently—

"for their gallant behavior and losses" at the battle of the Monongahela.

As everybody knows, the British pound is about $4.84 of our money. That is within a fraction of it. Multiply the £40,000, say by five, and you would have $200,000; and multiply that by five, to bring the value of the dollar down to its purchasing power now, and you would have a very substantial bounty. The significance of this, Mr. President, is that £300 of it is specifically voted to Colonel Washington, and he accepts it. If that does not fix him to the principle of the bounty nothing on earth could, and surely there never lived a man who had a nicer, a higher sense of personal honor than George Washington; and if he could accept a bounty without shame and without reproach the Chevalier Bayard could do it. Would anybody dare to charge him with capitalizing his patriotism? Would anybody dare to say that he degraded his manhood when he accepted that £300 voted to him by the Virginia Legislature because of his gallant service at the battle of the Monongahela?

I come now, Mr. President, to the Life of George Washington, by HENRY CABOT LODGE, present senior Senator from Massachusetts, volume 1, page 109:

While thus looking after his own estates at home, he went farther afield in search of investments, keeping a shrewd eye on the western lands and buying wisely and judiciously whenever he had the opportunity. He also constituted himself now, as in a later time, the champion of the soldiers, for whom he had the truest sympathy and affection, and a large part of the correspondence of this period is devoted to their claims for the lands granted them by the assembly. He distinguished carefully among them, however, those who were undeserving; and to the major of the regiment, who had been excluded from the public thanks on account of cowardice at the Great Meadows, he wrote as follows: "Your impertinent letter was delivered to me yesterday. As I am not accustomed to receive such from any man, nor would have taken the same language from you personally without letting you feel some marks of my resentment, I would advise you to be cautious in writing me a second of the same tenor. But for your stupidity and sottishness, you might have known, by attending to the public gazette, that you had your full quantity of 10,000 acres of land allowed you."

This major, who had shown cowardice in the face of the enemy at Great Meadows, had been gazetted in the public papers as having had 10,000 acres of land allotted to him as a bonus, and Washington said to him, in effect: "If you had been paying attention to what was being published, you would have known that, in spite of your cowardice, you could have gotten your 10,000 acres of land."

Now I come to Paul Leicester Ford's "The True George Washington," page 130:

As a military bounty in the French and Indian War, the Governor of Virginia issued a proclamation granting western lands to the soldiers, and under this Washington not merely secured 15,000 acres in his own right but by buying the claims of some of his fellow officers doubled that quantity.

Mr. President, I think I have made out my case.

CIVILIAN INSTRUCTORS AT NAVAL ACADEMY.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, the conferees on the naval appropriation bill are in session. The other day, when that bill was before the Senate, it developed that there are 118 civilian instructors in the Naval Academy. Under the bill as it passed the House none of these civilian instructors could be dismissed except for cause. The distinguished chairman of the Naval Affairs Committee, the Senator from Washington [Mr. POINDEXTER], made the statement on the floor of the Senate that Admiral Wilson desires to dismiss from the academy 78 out of the 118. The Committee on Naval Affairs added to the House bill an amendment which would permit a reduction from 118 to 80, thereby reducing the number of civilian instructors 38.

Of course, at the time when the appropriation bill was before the Senate it was impossible for anyone to know what the ultimate action of the Senate would be, or what recommendations the conferees would make, or what would be the final action of the Congress of the United States. Notwithstanding that fact, notice was served by the superintendent of the academy upon six of these civilian instructors that their services would be dispensed with. Within the last three hours information has been brought to me by one of the men in the press gallery that he has been advised that either yesterday or the day before Admiral Wilson, as superintendent of the academy, had notified 30 of the civilian instructors that their services would not be needed after a certain period of time; I have forgotten the number of days—60 days, I think. I may be slightly in error as to that. If the superintendent of the academy is going arbitrarily to take this stand, not knowing what the final action of the Congress is going to be, what will be his attitude if the Congress fails to stay his hand?

Mr. President, I think it has been clearly shown to the Senate and to the country that the average civilian instructor in the academy is much superior to the average naval officer there; and yet, for some reason or other, there seems to be a prejudice on the part of the superintendent against these civilian instructors. As a result of this policy, we have naval officers put in certain departments from time to time. They are kept there while on shore leave for a period, as I am informed, of not exceeding three years, and then they go back to sea or are assigned to other duties.

What would happen to the great universities of the country or to our public schools if the instructors or professors were to be changed every two or three years? This thought was clearly pointed out by the distinguished senior Senator from Massachusetts [Mr. LODGE].

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President——

Mr. POMERENE. I yield to the Senator from Minnesota.

Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I think my good friend from Ohio misapprehends the situation. I understand by the great reduction of our Navy we have been left with a large number of officers with little to do. Indeed, I understand that we now have officers enough in the Navy for an enlisted personnel of twice the present size. We have to pay those officers anyway, whether they are on the retired list or on the active list, and if we can utilize them at the Naval Academy and save the expense of employing civilian instructors, why should we not do it?

As I understand the situation, before the war there were about 40 civilian instructors at the academy. During the war their number was increased to 108, and the proposition is now made to reduce that force a trifle. I do not understand that there is any sinister object back of that, as would be implied from the remarks of the Senator from Ohio, but it is to be done in a spirit of economy. We have a large surplus of naval officers and it is difficult to find work for them. So it is proposed to use some of those officers as instructors and thus get rid of the necessity of paying salaries to civilian instructors.

We are greatly reducing our Navy. There are a large number of officers on the retired list whom we have to pay, and we have a large number on the active list who are not doing much. With the great reduction in personnel, it is difficult to find employment for all the officers, and if we can utilize the services of some at the academy, they still being under pay, it will be a move toward economy. I have no doubt that those officer instructors, man for man, will average up with the civilian instructors. Most of them are graduates of the Naval Academy and they have had good training. This move is made in a spirit of economy, and I can not see how any man who wants to see our expenses reduced can object to it.

Mr. POMERENE. Mr. President, I have no quarrel with my distinguished friend from Minnesota in so far as economy in public expenditures is concerned, but I am afraid he did not follow the course of this debate.

Mr. NELSON. I hope the Senator from Ohio will not regard this as a personal attack upon him.

Mr. POMERENE. Oh, no.

Mr. NELSON. I got my information about the matter from one of the civilian instructors. He came here and told me how essential it was to maintain that corps of 108 civilian instructors; that they are the only men on the face of the earth, apparently, who are fit to instruct the midshipmen at the academy, and what a great hazard it would be to deprive the academy of those civilians.

Mr. ROBINSON. With the permission of the Senator from Ohio, I desire to inquire if it is true that these civilian instructors were assured, when they were employed, that they would be given at least six months' notice before they were discharged from the service. The fact must be recognized that if teachers are discharged from any institution at this time of the year without prior notice, it will probably mean that they will be deprived of employment during the coming school year. I have information acquired from some of the instructors at the Naval Academy to the effect that they were given assurance that before they would be discharged they would have six months' notice, in order to enable them to secure other employment. If that is true, it involves a question of good faith in dealing with them, and it ought to have some influence upon the final action to be taken by the conferees, for the Government ought to act justly.
